The lower Appellate Court, however, came to the conclusion that the deed set up by the defendant was proved as if it were a deed of mortgage, but the money due on it was not recoverable from the plaintiff because the covenant to pay that money was personal. The lower Appellate Court relied on the decision in Ram Adhin Misra v. Sitla Bakhsh Singh (1). But that decision was clearly inapplicable, because the question for consideration in that case was whether a personal undertaking not to redeem a mortgage till the money due on another deed was paid was not enforceable against a transferee for value. The deed now under consideration expressly provides that the mortgagor would not be entitled to redeem the earlier mortgage without paying the money due on that deed. It contains a covenant for the consolidation of the later deed with the earlier one, supported by a charge which is enforceable against the plaintiff, who is the heir of the mortgagor. In Meharban Singh v. Raghunath Singh (2) it was held under somewhat similar circumstances that the earlier mortgage could not be redeemed without the payment of the money due on the later deed.

It still remains to consider whether the property specified in the deed of further charge was the self-acquired property of Mahabir Singh. The lower Appellate Court was inclined to the view that the finding of the Court of first instance on that point was correct and on an examination of the evidence adduced there seems no room for doubt that that is so. The property in question belonged to Nidha Singh, from whom it passed by virtue of a devise to his grand-nephew, Mahabir Singh. It was not ancestral in the hands of Mahabir Singh, who had a right to charge it for the payment of the debt taken by him from the defendant appellant. No question of legal necessity, therefore, arises.

The appeal is allowed and the decree of the lower Appellate Court set aside and that of the Court of first instance restored with costs throughout, except in so far that in case of non-payment instead of the direction that the plaintiff shall be debarred from all right to redeem the property, a direction that the mortgaged property shall be sold will be substituted.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XL, r. 4, O. XLIII, r. 1 (s)—Order directing Receiver to deposit money in Court, whether appealable.

An order requiring a Receiver to deposit a certain sum of money due by him into Court unaccompanied by any direction as to the attachment of his property, is not an order made under rule 4 of Order XL of the Civil Procedure Code, and consequently is not appealable under rule 1 (s) of Order XLIII of the Code. Civil Revision Petition, under section 115 of Act V of 1908 and section 107 of the Government of India Act, praying the High Court to revise an order of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Ramnad, at Madura, in I. A. Suits Nos. 129 and 177 of 1919, in Original Suit No. 68 of 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Messrs. K. S. Jayaram Aiyar and P. R. Narayana Aiyar, for the Respondent, took the preliminary objection that no appeal lay under Order XLIII, rule 1 (s), read with Order XL, rule 4, Civil Procedure Code. Order XL, rule 4, specifically deals with attachment of property in the hands of the Receiver and for its realization. In the present case there is only a direction to the Receiver to pay money into Court. There is no order for attachment. Keshobati Kumari v. Macgregor (1), Samhautta Singh v. Bhagwati Singh (2) Mohini Mohan Patra v. Baroda Kanta Sarkar (3).

Mr. O. S. Venkatachariar, for the Appellant, relied on Shriniwas Kuppuswami Mudaliar v. Waz (4).

JUDGMENT.—Civil Miscellaneous Appeal No. 282 of 1920 is an appeal against the order of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Ramnad directing the 1st defendant to pay a sum of Rs. 36,100 into Court, being made up as follows:—

(1) Rs. 56,250 being the income derived by the 1st defendant as Receiver during the years 1914 to 1919;

(2) Rs. 5,850 being the difference between the market price at the time of harvest as entered in the accounts and market rate at the time the paddy was actually sold.

The 1st defendant was given credit for Rs. 21,000 on account of assessment paid by him during the said period of five years and a further sum of Rs. 5,000 on account of establishment charges. It may be mentioned that the accounts of the Receiver have not been finally passed; but so far as they have been taken, the Subordinate Judge seems to be of opinion that the 1st defendant would be liable in any event to deposit this sum of Rs. 36,100 into Court. It is against this order that this appeal has been preferred by the 1st defendant.

A preliminary objection is raised on behalf of the respondent that no appeal lies. Order XLIII, rule 1, clause (s) of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, provides for an appeal against an order under rule 1 or rule 4 of Order XL. Rule 1 of Order XL deals with the appointment of Receivers. Rule 2 deals with the remuneration to be paid for his services: rule 3 lays down the duties of a Receiver and rule 4 provides the procedure for the enforcement of the Receiver's duties. It lays down that where a Receiver fails to submit his accounts at such periods and in such form as the Court directs or fails to pay the amount due from him as the Court directs, or occasions loss to the property by his wilful default or gross negligence, the Court may direct his property to be attached and may sell such property, and may apply the proceeds to make good any amount found to be due from him or any loss occasioned by him, and shall pay the balance, if any, to the Receiver. The order contemplated by this rule is an order for an attachment of the Receiver's property and for realization of money by means of such attachment. The order now appealed against is obviously not an order under rule 1, nor is it an order of attachment under rule .

On a construction of rule 4 of Order XL and rule 1, clause (s) of Order XLIII it seems to us that no appeal lies against the order of the Subordinate Judge giving directions to the Receiver to pay a certain sum of money into Court. We are supported in this view not only by the plain language of the rules in question but also by authority. It was held by the Calcutta High Court under the old Code of Civil Procedure that directions given by a Court in passing the Receiver's accounts are not appealable, vide Keshobati Kumari v. Macgregor (1). See also Mohini Mohan Patra v. Baroda Kanta Sarkar (3). The case of Ganesh Lal v. Kumar Satya Narayan Singh (5) is directly in point. See also Samhautta Singh v. Bhagwati Singh (2). There the learned Judges have held that an order declaring a Receiver liable in respect of a sum of money is not appealable unless it is accompanied by an order of attachment under rule 4 of Order XL. They observe that "it is sufficient to say that under the present Code of Civil Procedure a decision of this nature would not seem to be appealable unless it is accompanied by an order under rule 4 of Order XL. that rule gives a Court power to take certain steps against the Receiver for the realization of the money and it seems that, in the present case, until the Subordinate Judge acts under this rule, there is no right of appeal by the Receiver."

The learned Vakil for the appellant relies, however, on the decision in Shrinivas Kuppuswami Mudaliar v. Wat (4). The facts in that case are distinguishable and the decision is no authority on the specific question with which we have to deal here, namely, whether a direction to the Receiver to pay a certain amount, not followed up by an order of attachment as contemplated by rule 4, is a final order under rule 4 as to give the aggrieved party a right of appeal.

We are of opinion that the decision in Shrinivas Kuppuswami Mudaliar v. Wat (4) does not support the contention of the appellant. On the other hand, the plain language of the rules shows that the Receiver's right of appeal arises only on an order of attachment being passed by the lower Court. The other decisions we referred to above also support this view. We accordingly hold that no appeal lies and dismiss this appeal with costs.

We are not prepared to interfere in revision as the lower Court has jurisdiction to entertain this matter and the appellant has his remedy by way of appeal when an order of attachment is passed. We dismiss the Civil Revision Petition No. 132 of 1921.

Appeal and Revision dismissed.

JUDGMENT.—The issue of limitation in this case is concluded by several single Judge cases and also a Bench ruling of this Court. The Bench ruling is an unreported case in First Civil Appeal No. 10 of 1920 [Ohokhey Singh v. Hardeo Singh (1)] decided on 5th April 1921. In that case the learned Judges approved of the observation of the learned Judicial Commissioner in Second Civil Appeal No. 242 of 1920 decided on 23rd December 1920 [Oudh Behari Singh v. Suraj Bali (2)]. It was decided there that once a cause of action came in o existence, no fresh cause of action accrued to members who were subsequently born in the family after the execution of the sale-deed. Reference in that case was made to Ujagar Singh v. Pitam Singh (3), where in discussing the rights which accrued to a person who was born into a joint Hindu family it was held that birth into a Hindu family did not confer upon the person so born any right to bring a suit, the reason being that a right to bring a suit to challenge the alienation of the joint family property was in no sense a share in the ancestral estate of the father. In the case before me a suit under Article 126 clearly became time-barred at most in 1918, that is, 21 years after the sale in suit. The present suit, therefore, which was instituted in 1919, was clearly time barred.

In the result I set aside the decree of the lower Court and dismiss the plaintiffs' suit with costs of all the Courts.

In the case of a sale of immoveable property section 55 (1) (d) makes it a bounden duty of the seller to execute a proper conveyance of the property, and the execution of a document which for any reason does not operate to effect a legal transfer is in no way a complete performance of this bounden duty. Therefore, where a seller, being in a hurry, executes an invalid conveyance promising to follow it with a legal and binding sale-deed, the invalid conveyance is no answer to a suit for specific performance of the agreement to execute the legal and binding sale-deed. JUDGMENT.

ROBINSON, C. J.—This appeal deals with two cross suits brought by the parties under the following circumstances:—The appellant and her son, who is the second plaintiff in her suit, were going to Madras for the son's marriage. Appellant was anxious to raise Rs. 3,000 for this purpose and instructed one Pakiri Mahomed to raise the money, saying that she would give possession to the lender of 3 acres of land, a house and ten fishing boats as security. She obtained a loan of Rs. 3,000 from the defendant and handed him possession of the properties. On her return from Madras, she tendered the money with interest and demanded the return of the properties, but defendant refused to return them, alleging that she had sold them to him. She claims possession of the immoveable property and possession of the boats or their value. Defendant alleged that these properties had been sold to him for Rs. 3,000; that the document which he produced was hurriedly executed as the plaintiffs were leaving at once for Madras, and that it was not a proper document but plaintiffs agreed to execute and register a valid document on their return. In his cross-suit he sues for specific performance of this agreement.

I will deal with the suit for specific performance first. The two suits were heard together, and the evidence in one was by consent treated as evidence in the other. The appellant gave evidence that she had instructed one Pakiri Mahomed to raise a loan of Rs. 3,000 for her on interest at 6 per cent. per annum. She says that Pakiri Mahomed and her son negotiated the loan, acting under her instructions. She deposes that after their first interview with the defendant they brought back Rs. 50, as earnest money, and that the next day the balance was given to her and she was asked to execute Exhibit A, which, her son told her, contained the agreement she had made with defendant. She says that two or three days after receiving the money she left for Madras. Respondent says she left the next day. What admittedly happened was that Pakiri Mahomed and the second plaintiff interviewed the defendant, who agreed to the bargain and gave them Rs. 50 to bind it. Next day they went to a petition-writer, who drew up a document on the instructions of the second plaintiff and the respondent. That document is a deed of outright sale. It was written on an eight anna stamp paper, although the petition-writer demurred, pointing out that for a deed of sale a stamp of Rs. 30 would be required. It was nevertheless accepted owing to the short time at their disposal and it was executed, the parties knowing that it was of no value to transfer the immoveable property. Pakiri Mahomed deposes to all these facts. He admits that the respondent and the second plaintiff gave instructions to the petition-writer, and that both their instructions were to the same effect. He was not asked about the interest arranged except by the Court at the end of his evidence. He then deposes that the second plaintiff told him that the Rs. 3,000 bore interest at 6 per cent. per annum, and that this was only after he had received this money. Had the transaction, therefore, been a loan, we have the peculiar feature of Rs. 50 being given as earnest money and the fact that the man specially deputed to negotiate the loan knew nothing about the interest, which was at an extraordinarily low rate, until after the money had been advanced. The petition-writer corroborates the facts as set out above. He deposes to informing them that the document to be of any value would require a Rs. 30 stamp, and he declares that he explained the contents of the document to the second plaintiff and the respondent, and in that he was supported by Pakiri Mahomed. The second plaintiff has not given evidence, and it is clear that, on the evidence tendered by the parties supported by their conduct, the transaction was intended to be an outright sale and not a loan. The difficulty as to the stamp on the deed of sale has been adjusted by the deficient stamp having been made good under the authority of the Collector, but it is clear that the description of the immoveable property given in the document is quite insufficient for its identification, even the district in which it lies is wrongly recorded, and that that document would never have been admitted to registration. It was impossible, therefore, for the respondent to have proceeded under the Registration Act to complete the validity of the document, and the question is whether a document of this nature having been given by the appellant, it is open to the respondent to now bring a suit for specific performance of the original agreement.

For the plaintiff the case of Venkatasami v. Kristayya (1) was relied upon. It was there held that the agreement having been carried out by the execution of an invalid document, no suit would lie to compel defendant to do that which he had already done. With that decision, with all respect, I am unable to agree. The document in that instance was one as to which procedure under the provisions of the Registration Act was possible. In the present instance it was not possible. But beyond that, the decision has been dissented from by the Calcutta High Court in Surendra Nath Nag Chowdhury v. Gopal Chunder Ghosh (2), where it was held that the mere execution of a lease by the defendants did not convert an executory contract into an executed contract, and that the agreement by the parties was that the defendants would execute in favour of the plaintiff a lease and register it so as to make it an instrument operative in law, and that the mere execution of the document, which was never registered by reason of the default of the defendants, was not a complete performance of the contract. It is pointed out that this Madras decision has subsequently been dissented from in Chinna Krishna Reddi v. Dorasami Reddi (3) and Nallappa Reddi v. Ramalingachi Reddi (4). In the case of a sale of immoveable property section 55 (1) (d) makes it a bounden duty of a seller to execute a proper conveyance of the property, and the execution of a document which for various reasons could not be operative to effect a legal transfer is in no way a complete performance of this bounden duty. On the appellant's return from Madras she was called upon to execute a proper document as she had promised, but she refused to do so and it was not, therefore, necessary for the respondent to go through the useless form of tendering a conveyance to her for execution before he brought this suit for specific performance [Esaji Adamji v. Bhimji Purshotam (5)].

The learned District Judge was not satisfied that any promise had been made to execute a proper document on her return from Madras, but I can see no reason for disbelieving the defendant's evidence on this point, having regard to the undoubted circumstances prevailing at the time of the alleged promise. At that time boats to Madras were few and sailings uncertain. A boat was leaving for Madras, and it may well be that the appellant was most anxious to catch it. She admits that she left very shortly after the money was paid. There was not sufficient time to obtain the necessary information descriptive of the land for the purposes of the sale-deed, and the document that was executed was known to the parties to be ineffective and was only taken with the idea that it would afford proof of the agreement. As to whether it would be admissible in evidence to show what the agreement actually was, I do not care to decide. There are authorities both ways. But on the evidence and the probabilities of the case I have no doubt that the agreement was one of sale and under the circumstances a promise to execute a legal and binding document may well have been given.

As regards the suit for specific performance, therefore, I am of opinion that it was rightly decreed, and the appeal should be dismissed with costs. This really disposes of the appellant's case also. But in reply to her prayer for possession it was open to the respondent to plead as a valid defence to the suit that he was in possession under a contract for sale, although he had no valid registered sale-deed [Karamath Khan v. Latchmi Achi (6)]. Her appeal is, therefore, also dismissed with costs throughout.

DUCKWORTH, J.—I have had the privilege of reading the judgment of the learned Chief Judge, and I have but few remarks to add. The appellants in these two appeals admitted the receipt of the money from the respondent, and stated that, in consideration therefor, they agreed to make a mortgage of the immoveable as well as the moveable property in question, but their contention was that, under the influence of fraud on the part of respondent, what they executed was a conveyance. They sue for restoration of the property on re-payment by them, less damages to be ascertained. The respondent, on the other hand, set up that they contracted to sell the properties. It is not part of his case that the deed executed is a valid conveyance (it has not been registered), but he pleaded that the appellants agreed to execute a proper and binding conveyance in his favour after their return from Madras.

He is in possession, in any case, under the appellants' license, and, unless the appellants succeed in proving the fraud alleged, is not a trespasser. I have no hesitation in stating that the appellants have not succeeded in proving the fraud. It is admitted and proved that the second appellant arranged the transaction with the respondent in company with Pakiri Mahomed, and the evidence of the latter as well as that of the petition-writer shows beyond reasonable doubt that what was arranged was a sale of the property. The second appellant never appeared in the matter of these suits, and this point is most significant. It is shown that the appellants were in a hurry to get ready money and leave for India, and that neither of them knew anything about the fishing business, with which the boats and the plots of land were concerned. I agree with the learned Chief Judge that it may be taken as proved that the appellants did agree to give the respondent a conveyance on return from Madras.

Apart from this, it seems to me that the respondent can, in any case, plead that the moveable property was sold to him, even on the deed which we have before us. I have no doubt that he has proved this sale of moveables. As regards the immoveable properties, even though the deed may be inadmissible in evidence, inasmuch as the appellants failed to prove fraud on the part of the respondent, I am of the opinion that they are not entitled to oust him, since he is not a trespasser, and that he is entitled, on the other hand, to a decree for the execution of a proper and binding conveyance of the properties.

I think, therefore, that both the suits were rightly decided in the District Court, and I would dismiss the appeals with costs throughout.

Babu Ishwari Prasad, for Respondents Nos. 1 and 2.

JUDGMENT.—This very ancient case has at last been brought on for trial. It has been pending for a very long time on account of the absence of one of the respondents on active service. The points, which are before me for decision, are comparatively few and simple.

The plaintiff is a mortgagee in whose favour a mortgage with possession was executed on the 31st of July 1882 for a sum of Rs. 500. Under that mortgage possession over certain lands in two villages, Dhaunrahra and Chhaobha, was given to the mortgagee. Subsequently two other deeds were executed in favour of the mortgagee. One of the 14th of June 1883 was to secure a loan of Rs. 93-8-0. On this document interest was to run at 1 per cent. per mensem and the stipulation was that the borrower was to be entitled to re-pay the loan at any time before redemption of the mortgaged property. The third document, which was executed in 1886 for a sum of Rs. 200, was undoubtedly a deed of further charge and is to be read along with the first document. No interest ran upon this third deed, the arrangement between the parties being that the profits of the mortgaged property were to satisfy the interest both on the first and third loans. It is not disputed that by reason of certain partition proceedings, which took place between the mortgagor and his co-sharers in the years 1899 and 1904 respectively, the greater portion of the mortgaged property was taken out of the possession of the mortgagee.

It is admitted that at the time this suit was brought the mortgagee was in possession of only two plots situated in the village of Chhaobha. These plots are Nos. 629 and 630. In the present suit the plaintiff claimed alternative reliefs. He asked for possession of certain plots in Dhaunrahra and also for possession of an area which would bring up the area of the land in his possession to the area which had been mortgaged to him under the first mortgage. In addition to this he claimed a sum of Rs. 370 on account of mesne profits for the period during which he had been deprived of the mortgaged property. In the alternative he asked for a decree for his mortgage money. He claimed Rs. 500 under the first deed, Rs. 429-5-5 under the second deed and Rs. 200 under the third deed. He also maintained his claim for Rs. 370 in addition to these sums.

The Court of first instance held that as the suit was framed, the plaintiff was not entitled to any decree for possession. He had not specified any land which it was possible for the Court to award him and so the case was treated on the footing of a money claim. The learned Subordinate Judge, who tried the case, gave the plaintiff a decree for Rs. 700, that is to say, Rs. 500 on the first deed and Rs. 200 on the third and interest on this total at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum by way of damages. This interest was limited to the period of three years prior to the institution of the suit. The learned Subordinate Judge refused to allow any relief in respect of the document of the 14th of June 1883, being of opinion that this document did not constitute a charge upon the property.

When the case came up in appeal before the learned Additional Judge, two principal pleas were put forward on behalf of the plaintiff. He asked that he should get a decree on the deed of the 14th of June 1883 on the ground that this document created a charge upon the mortgaged property. He also claimed that instead of 3 years' interest, which had been allowed him by the Court of first instance, he was entitled to 6 years' interest.

The learned Additional Judge, while he held that the document of the 14th June 1883 constituted a charge upon the mortgaged property, refused to give the plaintiff any decree, on the ground that his remedy for the money decree under this document had been lost by limitation. The opinion of the Additional Judge was that limitation began to run from the date of the execution of the deed. Then as regards the claim for interest, he held not only that the plaintiff was not entitled to interest for 6 years but that he was not entitled to any interest at all. He founded this decision upon a judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council which is reported as Partab Bahadur Singh v. Gajadhar Bakhsh Singh (1).

The plaintiff now comes here in appeal. His case is that he is entitled to both principal and interest on the deed executed on the 14th of June 1883. He says his claim in respect of this deed is not barred by limitation. His other point is that on the deeds executed respectively on the 31st of July 1882 and 3rd of February 1886 he was entitled to interest for a period of six years, that is to say, interest by way of damages.

(1) 24 A. 521; 29 I. A. 148; 7 C. W. N. 97; 4 Bom. L. R. 845; 8 Sar. P. C. J. 310 (P. C.).

I may dispose of this latter point at once. I have heard a good deal of argument upon it, but it appears to me that the decision of the lower Appellate Court regarding this question of interest on these two deeds ought to be maintained. The principle laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case to which I have referred is that where the mortgagee after dispossession from the property, which constitutes the mortgage security, acquiesces in the situation, he cannot put forward a claim for interest. It seems to me that the mortgagee might have brought his suit at any time within six years from the date of dispossession for compensation caused to him by the loss of possession, and admittedly this suit had been brought a long time after the dates on which possession was lost to the mortgagee. I have already mentioned that one of those dates was 1899 and the other 1904; while this suit was not brought till the year 1913. I am satisfied, therefore, that the decision of the lower Appellate Court on this point is sound.

The other question is with regard to the document of the 14th of June 1883. I entertain no doubt whatever that the lower Appellate Court has correctly construed this document, and that it does constitute a charge on the property. The words which are used, as the lower Court observes, are not very well chosen, but the meaning of them appears to me to be quite clear. The person who executed this bond undoubtedly meant to hypothecate to his creditor his property, which was already held under the possessory mortgage executed in the year 1882. It remains, therefore, to be considered whether the view of the lower Appellate Court regarding the question of limitation is correct. The argument here on behalf of the appellant is that the Court below was wrong in thinking that limitation for the recovery of the money due on this document began to run from the date of the execution. According to the language of the document the borrower was to be entitled to pay the debt at any time prior to the date on which the first mortgage was to be redeemed. The learned Additional Judge observes in dealing with this question of limitation that the creditor might have brought a suit on this document to recover the money at any time after execution, but I can hardly think that this argument is correct, for it seems to me that if the borrower was to be at liberty to pay at any time before the redemption of the first mortgage, he could have defeated any claim brought by his creditor by pointing out that no cause of action had arisen. I have been in some doubt as to whether the document really does fix a date for payment, but I have come to the conclusion that I ought to hold that it does so, and I am supported in this conclusion by certain observations which were made by one of the Judges of this Court in the case decided as Gaya Din Singh v. Har Karan Singh (2). Before I dispose of this point, however, I have to notice certain points which were put forward here by way of cross-objections. Mr. Ishuri Prasad has argued not only that the claim in respect of this second deed was barred by time, but that the claims in respect of the other two deeds were also barred.

There can be no doubt that the period of limitation applicable to suits for money on the first and third deeds is a period of six years. Both the Courts below, however, held that although this period had elapsed, limitation was saved by reason of the provisions of section 20, sub-section (2) of the Limitation Act, which provides that where mortgaged land is in possession of a mortgagee, the receipt of the rent or produce of such land shall be deemed to be payment for the purpose of sub-section (1); that is to say, a payment which would extend the period of limitation for a suit for the debt which is owing. It has been found in this case that the mortgagee retained possession of two of the plots which were originally mortgaged to him and consequently the receipt of the profits of those two plots amounted to payments of interest within the meaning of section 20. Mr. Ishuri Prasad would argue that section 20 does not save limitation in this case, because the suit is not a suit for a debt but is a suit which is brought under the special provisions of section 68 of the Transfer of Property Act. It is not to be doubted that the plaintiff's right to bring a suit of this kind is founded upon the provisions of section 68. But what is the suit for? It surely is a suit for the recovery of the mortgage money, that is to say, for the recovery of the debt. The Courts below, therefore, were quite right in holding that the money claim in respect of the first and third deeds was within time and I hold accordingly.

As regards the second deed, Mr. Ishuri Prasad, has also argued that the claim is barred. He says there was no consolidation of the mortgages, that is to say, if the second deed amounted to a mortgage, there was no consolidation of that mortgage with the first mortgage. This, however, does not seem to me to be a question which I need discuss. The point is, "when was the creditor entitled to ask for payment under this deed of the 14th of June 1883?" As I have already pointed out, the debtor had a choice of paying the debt at any time up to the date on which redemption of the first mortgage was to be made. It seems to me that acting on this principle, the claim upon this document is within time. Then it was argued again that no claim on this document could be brought in a suit which was founded on the provisions of section 68 of the Transfer of Property Act. I can see no good reason in favour of this argument, for it seems to me that the mortgagee was entitled to ask for his money under this deed, on the ground that the debt constituted a charge on the property for the reasons I have already given.

There is only one other point in connection with the cross-objections which I have to notice. A defence was put forward in the First Court that certain lands in the possession of the plaintiff mortgagee had been allotted to him on partition in lieu of the lands which had been allotted under the mortgage. The Court of first instance dismissed this defence as being partly untrue and partly irrelevant. However, I need not go into this matter, because I find from a reference to the judgment of the lower Court that all this part of the case was abandoned in the lower Appellate Court and it was for that reason that the learned Additional Judge held that it was not necessary for him to discuss the subject. He pointed out that the case had come ultimately to be treated as one in which only a money decree was being asked for and in which all claim to possession of lands had been given up. I cannot allow a matter which was abandoned in the lower Appellate Court to be re-agitated here in second appeal.

The conclusion, therefore, I have come to on the whole of this case is that the appellant is entitled to succeed with regard to his claim on the document of the 14th of June 1883. The plaintiff will be declared entitled with respect to this document to a sum of Rs. 429-5-5 (calculated up to the date of the suit) with interest at 6 per cent. per annum from the date of the suit till the date of payment. In other respects the case for the plaintiff-appellant and the cross objections fail and are dismissed. I make no order regarding costs. The decree of the lower Appellate Court will be amended accordingly.

ORDER OF REFERENCE TO A FULL BENCH.

DUCKWORTH, J.—This was a suit for Rs. 200 by way of damages for breach of promise of marriage.

The parties are Burman Buddhists, resident in Burma.

The Township Court dismissed the suit, holding that the promise was not proved, but the District Court came to a different conclusion and decreed the claim.

Maung Gale, the defendant, now appeals to this Court, and the preliminary question arises as to whether an appeal lies under section 30, Lower Burma Courts Act, or merely under section 100, Civil Procedure Code.

It is an unclassed suit, and no second appeal will lie under section 30, Lower Burma Courts Act, unless the value of the subject-matter exceeds Rs. 500 or the suit is of a nature described in sub-section (1), section 13, Burma Laws Act, 1898.

The value is below Rs. 500.

Sub section (1), section 13, Burma Laws Act, lays down :—

"Where in any suit or other proceeding in Burma, it is necessary for the Court to decide any question regarding succession, inheritance, marriage or caste, or any religious usage or institution, the Buddhist Law, in cases where the parties are Buddhists .....,shall form the rule of decision ....."

The point for decision now is whether, in a suit for breach of promise of marriage, the Court has to decide any question regarding marriage, or in other words, whether a promise of marriage, and breach of such promise, are questions of marriage to be determined, in the case of Buddhists, according to Buddhist Law.

In the case of Maung Hmaing v. MaPwa Me (1) at page 534, Fulton, J. C., stated :—"It will, of course, be remembered that this (a suit for damages for breach of promise of marriage) is not a case of succession, inheritance, marriage, or religious usage, and consequently must be decided rather by the Contract Act than by Buddhist Law, but still, in assessing damages, due consideration must be given to the opinions of the people, which are doubtless in part founded on the law books to which they are accustomed to look for guidance."

This statement has apparently remained unchallenged ever since it was made in the year 1891, but there is a course of judicial decisions in Burma, which assumes that a promise of marriage and breach of such promise are questions of marriage. It is only necessary to refer to Kan Gaung v. Mi Hla Ohok (2), where on page 8, Shaw, J. C., now Sir George Shaw, clearly decided that the question was one regarding marriage.

In Maung Nyein v. Ma Myin (3) at page 76,* Heald, A. J. C., stated that the breach of a promise of marriage is a matter of marriage. He followed Kan Gaung's case (2).

On the other hand, Mr. Nyun Maung, though he did not refer to Maung Hmaing's case (1) nor quote any rulings, contends that the question is solely one of contract and implies that it could only be a question of marriage, or an incident of marriage, if marriage follows the promise.

The promise to marry is a necessary preliminary to, and incident of, marriage. Breach of such a promise would come under the same category.

The matter is important for these reasons:—It has been held in Lower and Upper Burma that parents cannot sue, or be sued, for damages for breach of promise to marry their son or daughter [Maung Thein v. Ma Thet Hnin (4) and Maung Po Thaw v. Maung Tha Hlaing (5)]. It has been held further that, if it is merely a matter of contract, a minor cannot sue for compensation for breach of promise of marriage [see Kan Gaung's case (2)].

Unless, therefore, it is decided that the matter is more than one of contract, suits by minors will be excluded.

My view is that a promise to marry and breach thereof are matters of contract, but in addition, are also matters regarding marriage. In fact, I accept U May Oung's view, as expressed at page 2[illegible], Burman Buddhist Matrimonial Law, 1914.

The result is that I hold that an appeal lies under section 30, Lower Burma Courts Act, and that appellant can appeal on the facts as well as law.

However, the matter is not clear from doubt and divergent opinions have been expressed in Upper and Lower Burma.

I think, therefore, that the question should be referred to a Bench or a Full Bench, as the learned Chief Judge shall decide.

The question referred is:—In suits for compensation for breach of promise to marry, as between Burman Buddhists, residing in Burma, is the matter involved merely one of contract, or does it include any question regarding marriage? In other words, whether a promise of marriage, and breach of such promise, are questions of marriage, to be decided, in the case of Buddhists, according to Buddhist Law?

OPINION OF THE FULL BENCH.

ROBINSON, C. J.—May Hla Yin, a spinster, brought a suit, alleging that Maung Gale made her a promise of marriage and that relying on that promise she allowed him to seduce her. He refused to carry out his promise, and she sues for damages for breach of promise of marriage. The first Court dismissed the suit, holding that no promise was proved. The District Court held the promise was proved and decreed the claim. An appeal was filed to this Court and a preliminary question arose as to whether an appeal lay under section 30 of the Lower Burma Courts Act, which would permit appellant to raise questions of fact, or merely under section 100 of the Civil Procedure Code only on points of law. If the suit is one of a nature described in sub-section 1 to section 13 of the Burma Laws Act, 1898, an appeal would lie under the former provision and the question for decision, therefore, is whether this is a suit regarding marriage which is to be decided under the provisions of Burmese Buddhist Law, the parties being Burmese Buddhists, or under the ordinary law of the land as a simple matter of contract.

The decisions in Burma have not been consistent. In 1891 the Special Court in the case of Maung Hmaing v. Ma Pwa Me (1) apparently assumed that the matter was one of simple contract only. Mr. Fulton said: "It will, of course, be remembered that this is not a case of succession, inheritance, marriage, or religious usage, and consequently must be decided rather by the Contract Act than by Buddhist Law, but still, in assessing damages, due consideration must be given to the opinions of the people, which are doubtless in part founded on the law books to which they are accustomed to look for guidance." Mr. Agnew said, on the question whether between Burmans an action of breach of promise of marriage will lie, that the question should be answered in the affirmative. He said, "the action is one for damages for the breach of a contret and unless forbidden by the Burmese Law it will lie. There is nothing, so far as I am aware, in Burmese Law to prohibit such an action." In Maung Myat Tha v. Ma Thon (6), which was a suit for restitution of conjugal rights against a Buddhist girl under the age of 18, Mr. Burgess remarked, "the learned Judge treats marriage as a mere contract, but it is something more than a contract, or at any rate is subject to special conditions." In Kan Gaung v. Mi Hla Chok, (2) it was held that a female minor cannot sue for compensation under the Contract Act for a breach of promise of marriage made to her. Reliance for this proposition was based on the well-known case of Mohori Bibee v. Dharmodas Ghose (7). It was further decided that where the circumstances entitle her to compensation under the Buddhist Law, she can succeed independently of contract. Sir George Shaw stated in the course of his judgment after referring to previous cases, some of which I have noted above, "they assume what is obviously the fact that a promise of marriage and breach of such a promise are questions of marriage to be determined in the case of Buddhists

(6) 2 U. B. R. (1892-93) 200.
(7) 30 C. 539; 30 I. A. 114; 7 C. W. N. 441; 5 Bom. L. R. 421; 8 Sar. P. C. J. 874 (P. C.).

according to the Buddhist Law," and he went on to say, "I am, therefore, of opinion that where, as in the present case, the Contract Act cannot be relied upon, a suit for damages for breach of promise will still be maintainable if the Buddhist Law authorises compensation in such a case," which he held it did. In Maung Thein v. Ma Thet Hnin (4) Sir Charles Fox held that a Burmese Buddhist, whether male or female, adult or minor, cannot be legally married without his or her consent or against his or her will, and that the breach by a father of his promise to give his son in marriage and to give suitable marriage presents does not afford a cause of action. In Maung Nyein v. Ma Myin (3) my brother Heald, following Kan Gaung's case (2), held that a suit for damages for breach of promise of marriage will be maintainable (apart from the Law of Contract) if the Buddhist Law authorises compensation in such a case. He held that a Burmese Buddhist youth can make a valid promise of marriage, at any time after he is physically competent for marriage, and that he can be sued for damages for breach of such promise although he is under 18 years of age. And in Maung Po Thaw v. Maung Tha Hlaing (5) Mr. Saunders held that the consent of the parties is necessary to a valid marriage, and that an action for damages for breach of promise of marriage cannot be maintained against the parents of a Burmese Buddhist in respect of a promise made by such parents to give their son in marriage. In the case of Tun Kyin v. Ma Mai Tin (8) it was held that a promise of marriage made by a Burmese Buddhist male under the age of 18 years, without the consent of his parents, is ordinarily voidable. But if he has clandestine intercourse with the woman, his parents are not at liberty to withhold their consent to the marriage, and he is bound by his promise and can be sued for its breach. In the course of his judgment Ormond, J., said: "I think the validity of a contract of marriage is a question of contract, though it may involve a question regarding marriage, e. g., a contract of marriage between two persons who are within the prohibited degrees of affinity; the validity of such a marriage would be determined by the personal law of the parties, and if such a marriage would be void, the contract would be void under sections 23 and 24 of the Contract Act, because the object or consideration was unlawful and immoral." And again, "a person may attain majority for some purposes, e. g., of 'acting in the matter of marriage,' though not for other purposes." And later, "thus under the Contract Act the competency of a Burmese Buddhist youth under 18 years of age, to make a contract of marriage, must be determined by the Burmese Buddhist Law."

The consensus of opinion, therefore, from the decided cases is clearly in favour of the view that the question, whether a breach of promise of marriage will afford a cause of action, and the decision of other questions that may arise in such a suit as, for instance, whether the marriage is between parties within the prohibited degrees and the question of the liability of minors, is to be decided according to the principles of Burmese Buddhist Law.

Every marriage must be preceded by an offer and its acceptance. This prior agreement to marry is an integral part of every marriage. Any question, therefore, arising in connection with this promise must be held to be a question regarding marriage. Whenever a suit for breach of promise of marriage is brought the Court has to determine whether the suit will lie, that is, whether there is a cause of action, and to decide that point the Courts must look to the Burmese Buddhist Law and must decide in accordance with its rules. The authorities clearly show that a different decision would have to be arrived at in the case of minors, if the matter was to be decided according to the principles of the ordinary law of contract, to that which would prevail if the principles of Burmese Buddhist Law were applied. As to whether the promise is valid or not by reason of questions regarding the consent of the parents, the Courts would have to resort to the Burmese Buddhist Law to decide it. It is clear that Burmese Buddhist Law does contemplate compensation for seduction under a promise of marriage, and it is also clear that that law does not forbid a suit based on a promise to marry. I would have no hesitation in holding that in suits for breach of promise of marriage between Burmese Buddhists the questions that may arise in the case are questions regarding marriage.

It has been suggested that in this case where the parties were both adults, no question whatever involving Burmese Buddhist Law arises and that, therefore, since it is not necessary for the Court to decide any question regarding marriage, section 13 of the Burma Laws Act does not apply while in the Lower Burma Courts Act suits of a nature described in section 13 (1) of the Burma Laws Act are referred to. I do not think that the matter should be decided on such narrow considerations as these. The intention of the Legislature clearly was that in respect of such personal matters as succession, inheritance, marriage or caste or religious usage, the personal law of the parties should be applied and the wording of the Courts Act was merely intended to refer to cases in which such personal questions arose. It would be wrong to give any narrow or restricted interpretation to the provisions regarding the application of the personal law.

I am of opinion, therefore, it should be held that suits for breach of promise of marriage between Burmese Buddhists are suits involving questions regarding marriage and that appeals in such suits would lie under section 30 of the Lower Burma Courts Act, and not merely under section 100 of the Civil Procedure Code.

MAUNG KIN, J.—The question is whether a suit for a breach of promise of marriage between Burmese Buddhists is a suit of a nature described in section 13 of the Burma Laws Act.

That section provides that where in a suit or other proceeding in Burma it is necessary for the Court to decide any question regarding succession, inheritance, marriage or caste or any religious usage or institution—

"(a) the Buddhist Law, in cases where the parties are Buddhists, shall form the rule of decision."

The question, therefore, is whether in a suit for a breach of promise of marriage between Burmese Buddhists it is necessary for the Court to decide any question regarding marriage.

What is the meaning of the words, "when it is necessary for the Court to decide?" Do they mean and include only the issues which arise between the parties at the trial? To hold that that is so would, in my opinion, be too narrow a construction. The Court can dismiss a suit ex parte. One of the important matters which the Court has to pay attention to when it receives a plaint, is whether it discloses a cause of action. The plaintiff in a suit for a breach of promise of marriage has to satisfy the Court that the contract sued on is valid, otherwise the plaint will not disclose a cause of action. It will not disclose a cause of action if the parties to the contract were not competent to make a valid marriage. To decide this question the Court will have to have recourse to the personal law of the parties. The personal law of the Burmese Buddhists allows adults, otherwise competent, to marry. Other systems of law ordain to the same effect. Nevertheless, the decision of the Court as to the competency of the parties to make a valid marriage is made under the personal law of the parties concerned. It has been argued that this question was not raised by the parties and that it was, therefore, unnecessary to decide it and that the questions which the lower Courts had to decide were not questions regarding marriage at all. But as shown above, the question had to be decided by the Court before admitting the plaint.

For the above reasons I would hold that the suit is one of a nature described in section 13 of the Burma Laws Act.

HEALD, J.—The question referred for the decision of the Bench is as follows:—

"In suits for compensation for breach of promise to marry as between Burman Buddhists, residing in Burma, is the matter involved merely one of contract, or does it include any question regarding marriage?"

The Burma Laws Act says that where in any suit or other proceeding in Burma it is necessary for the Court to decide any question regarding marriage, the Buddhist Law, in cases where the parties are Buddhists, shall form the rule of decision except in so far as such law has by enactment been altered or abolished or is opposed to any custom having the force of law.

VITHOBA v. BABULAL.

We have, therefore, to decide whether in a suit for damages for breach of promise of marriage it is necessary for the Court to decide any question regarding marriage.

The judgment of the learned Chief Judge shows clearly the state of the case-law on the subject and it is unnecessary for me to discuss it.

It is clear that in a suit for damages for breach of a promise of marriage one of the chief questions which the Court has to decide is whether or not there was a valid promise, since damages are not ordinarily awarded by the Courts for breach of an invalid promise. The validity of a promise of marriage can only be determined by reference to the marriage laws to which the parties are subject, and, therefore, it seems clear that in such a suit it is necessary for the Court to decide a question regarding marriage.

I would, therefore, hold that in suits for compensation for breach of a promise to marry as between Burman Buddhists residing in Burma it is necessary for the Court to decide a question regarding marriage, and that such suits are suits of the nature described in sub-section (1) of section 13 of the Burma Laws Act.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 60—Sewing machine, whether tool of artisan—Exemption from attachment.

A sewing machine is a tool of an artisan within the meaning of section 60 of the Civil Procedure Code and is, as such, exempt from attachment under that section in execution of a decree.

Application for revision of a decree of the District Judge, Bhandara, dated the 23rd December 1919, in Civil Appeal No. 204 of 1919.

Mr. D. T. Mangalmurti, for the Applicant.

Mr. R. B. Gadgil, for the Non-Applicants.

ORDER.—The only question for consideration is whether a sewing machine can be regarded as a tool of an artisan. The learned District Judge has held that a sewing machine is not a tool. In Webster's Dictionary a tool is defined as "an instrument, such as a hammer, saw, plane, file and the like, used in the manual arts, to facilitate mechanical operations; any instrument used by a craftsman or labourer at his work; an implement." I can find no guidance on the point in reported rulings, but I consider that a sewing machine is a tool. It can hardly be denied that a simple machine such as a simple form of loom is a tool. I do not see how a line can be drawn shutting out a more complicated form of loom from the definition. A complicated loom or a sewing machine is certainly an instrument used by a craftsman or labourer at his work. Section 60, Civil Procedure Code, speaks of the tools of artisans and implements of husbandry of an agriculturist Implements of husbandry may be specialized and costly. I see no reason why a tool should be confined to primitive implements. I hold then that a sewing machine is a tool. I set aside the order of the learned District Judge and restore the order of the first Court. The non applicant will pay the costs of the applicant in all Courts.

In the matter of Babu JNANENDRA KUMAR CHOUDHURY, PLEADER.

Legal Practitioners Act (XVIII of 1879), s. 14—Vakalatnama, acceptance of—Bona fide mistake of Pleader—Warning by Court—Subsequent proceedings for dismissal or suspension—Rules of High Court—Pleaders, duty of.

A Pleader was called upon by a Court to submit an explanation in the matter of his acceptance of a vakalatnama. The Pleader in his explanation submitted that he acted bona fide and thought that he had received the vakalatnama duly authorised by the executant and that he was entitled to act upon it. The Court on the 8th November 1920 accepted the explanation, excused the Pleader and warned him to be careful in future. Then on the 19th January 1921 the Court took up the matter again and drew up proceedings under section 14 of the Legal Practitioners Act for dismissal or suspension of the Pleader:

Held, that having regard to the fact that the Court had previously come to the conclusion that the Pleader had been acting bona fide although he had made a serious mistake there was no necessity for the Court to take up the matter again, especially after a lapse of a long time. [p. 419, col. 1.]

The rules with regard to the responsibilities of Pleaders in accepting vakalatnamahs should be strictly observed. [p. 419, col. 1.]

Reference under section 14 of the Legal Practitioner's Act, made by the District Judge, Midnapur.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Manmotha Nath Mukerjee, for the Pleader.—This is a reference under section 14 of the Legal Practitioners Act. Babu Jnanendra Kumar Chaudhury is a Pleader of Midnapore. The facts shortly are these: There was a rent-decree for Rs. 80 and the judgment debtor's holding was purchased by a stranger in the execution sale in July 1920. In August 1920 an application purporting to be filed by the judgment-debtor was made to deposit the decretal amount. The vakalatnama was purported to have been signed by a man named Mangobinda Maiti and was brought to the Pleader by one Rajani a friend and neighbour of the judgment debtor. Sometime after the judgment debtor and the decree-holder appeared and denied of the deposit having been made. The statement of Rajani was taken by the Munsif on 30th August 1920. Rajani bore out the facts. On 4th September 1920 the judgment-debtor was examined and cross-examined. He alleged that the deposit was probably made by a mortgagee whose interest it was to deposit. On 17th September 1920 Babu Jnanendra Kumar gave his explanation stating his ignorance of the exact terms of the High Court Circular Orders and prayed to be excused. On 18th November 1920 the Munsif accepted the explanation and dropped the proceedings with a warning to the Pleader. On 19th January 1921 the Munsif re-opened the proceedings and made a report through the District Judge to this Court. My point is that if the Munsif thought that he had no jurisdiction he ought not to have reported. Secondly, there cannot be a revival of the proceedings after two months of the dropping of the same. The Munsif thought that clemency had been exercised without jurisdiction and was misexercised. Refers to section 14 of the Legal Practitioners Act.

He should make a reference only when he finds that the charge has been established. The Pleader ought to have according to the High Court Circular Orders, obtained a letter authorising Rajani to make over the vakalatnama. In this case there was an authority at the back of the vakalatnama, executed by the executant of same in favour of Rajani. The Munsif may be right in his interpretation of the law. My submission is that you would in a matter of this kind when a sufficient warning had already been given by the Munsif, interfere and will not allow a revival of the proceedings which have been once dropped.

Babu Ram Charan Mittra, Senior Government Pleader, for the Government.—This Court has power also under section 15 to interfere in cases of acquittal. There is no doubt that a fraud was attempted to have been committed upon the Court. The evidence of Rajani and the judgment debtor was conflicting, a further enquiry ought to have been held to detect the perpetrators of the fraud. The Munsif's reference is in accordance with law under section 15 of the Legal Practitioners Act. The question is whether you would direct further enquiry or would uphold the order of discharge previously made, with a warning. I do not press for further enquiry as no fraud has actually been committed.

Babu Manmothanath Mukerjee briefly replied.

JUDGMENT.

SANDERSON, C. J.—This is a reference which was made by the learned Munsif of Danton to the High Court, and it was submitted, as is the usual practice, through the District Judge. By the reference it was submitted that the conduct of the Pleader concerned justified an order of dismissal or suspension within the meaning of the Legal Practitioners Act.

The learned Judge who forwarded the reference, for the reasons, which he stated in his letter, came to the conclusion that he was unable to support the learned Munsif's recommendation for dismissal or suspension of the Pleader in question he being of opinion that the warning given by the Munsif by his first order in final disposal of the matter was sufficient.

It appears that a rent-decree had been obtained against one Isof Khan and the holding in arrears had been sold by auction and purchased by the decree holders who were the 16 annas landlords. On the 19th of August 1920, the Pleader accepted a vakalatnama purporting to be executed by Isof Khan, but presented to him by one Rajani Kanta Ray who described himself as a "brother by courtesy" of the judgment-debtor: and, in pursuance of that vakalatnama the decretal amount together with the compensation was deposited on behalf of the judgment debtor by the Pleader on that day. On the 28th of August 1920, both the decree-holders and the judgment-debtor filed petitions to the Court alleging that the deposit was not made by the judgment-debtor: and upon enquiry, the learned Munsif came to the conclusion that in all probability the deposit had really been made on behalf of the mortgagee who was desirous of having the sale set aside; and, he held that an attempt was made to commit a flagrant abuse of the provisions of section 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The Pleader was called upon by the learned Munsif to submit an explanation, and his explanation was submitted on the 17th of September. I do not intend to read the explanation. I accept the explanation which has been made by the Pleader, and assume for the purpose of my judgment that the Pleader acted bona fide and thought that he had received a vakalatnama duly authorized by the judgment-debtor and that he was entitled to act upon it. The learned Munsif considered this explanation but did not give his decision until the 8th of November 1920. This, to my mind, was an unreasonable delay I am quite aware that the vacation may have accounted for some part of the period between the 17th of September and the 18th of November, but it cannot account for more than about a month. This was a matter which was within a reasonably small compass: and, it was a matter in which the position and reputation of the Pleader were involved and which ought to have been disposed of promptly. In my judgment it was not fair to the Pleader to have the matter hanging over his head for at least two months, before the learned Munsif to deliver his judgment. However, on the 18th of November, the learned Munsif came to a conclusion and he said: "Having regard to the explanation submitted by the Pleader concerned, Babu Jnanendra Kumar Chowdhury, in which he pleads bona fide ignorance of the Rule on the subject of acceptance of vakalatnama and begs to be excused, and the circumstances of the case, the Pleader is excused but warned to be careful in future: so that any such case may not occur again." In my judgment the Pleader was entitled to assume that having regard to that judgment given by the learned Munsif the matter was at an end. But it was not at an end. It appears that on the 19th of January 1921, the learned Munsif took up the matter again after a lapse of another two months, and then he expressed his view about the responsibilities resting on the Pleader with regard to the all important subject of acceptance of vakalatnamahs. He pointed out that a grievous wrong was perpetuated in the name of law and through the instrumentality of the Pleader, and came to the conclusion that the clemency which he had exercised was without jurisdiction and had been misexercised. Consequently he drew up these proceedings under section 14 of the Legal Practitioners Act.

As the learned Senior Government Pleader pointed out, there is no doubt that the learned Munsif had ample jurisdiction to make the first order which he made on the 18th November 1920. He obviously came to the conclusion on that occasion that he did not consider that the Pleader should either be suspended or dismissed and that the justice of the case would be met if a warning were administered to the learned Pleader. I do not intend to express any opinion as to whether the second order of the learned Munsif on the 19th of January 1921 was without jurisdiction or not, for the simple reason that it is not necessary for my judgment that I should do so. I can conceive cases where it would be necessary in the interests of justice for a Tribunal, however it may be composed, to withdraw the first order and make a further one. It is quite possible that further facts may come to the knowledge of the Tribunal which would justify it in investigating the matter further, but as I have said before, I do not express any opinion upon that point. It is quite sufficient to say that, in my opinion, having regard to the nature of the case, and having regard to the fact that the learned Munsif had come to the conclusion in November that the Pleader had been acting bona fide although he made a serious mistake; there was no necessity for the learned Munsif to take up the matter again, especially after a lapse of so long a time.

I have only one other matter to deal with before I leave this case. I endorse entirely what the learned Munsif has said with regard to the responsibilities of the learned Pleaders in accepting vakalatnamas. This is an instance which shows how necessary it is that the rules, which have been drawn up by the learned Judges of the High Court, should be strictly observed. Here was a case in which but for the interference of the judgment-debtor and the decree holders a very serious fraud might have been committed, not only upon the Court but by means of the Court upon private individuals. I hope that this will be an object lesson to the learned Junior Pleaders to make themselves fully acquainted with the rules of the High Court and also with the reason why those rules should be observed.

Having made these observations, I agree with the suggestion, which has been made by the learned District Judge, that this Reference ought not to be accepted.

CHOTZNER, J.—I agree.

Mr. S. C. Mukerji, for the Applicants.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The only point raised in this revision is whether the applicants were gambling in a public place. On the finding of the Magistrate who tried the case, they were found gambling in the area occupied by a large grove. At one end of the grove is the shrine of a goddess and a tank. A fair was in progress at the time that they were gambling and visitors to the fair had penetrated to all parts of the grove. The grove is private property but on the occasion of the fair the public use the grove and there is no interference with their so doing. The decision in the case of Ahmad Ali v. King-Emperor (1) is not in point, because the grove used for the purpose of gambling in that case was a private grove to which the public did not have access. The question as to whether the grove in this case was or was not a public place presents little difficulty. When the public have access to a place without their access being refused or interfered with, that place is a public place whether the public have a right to go there or not. Authority for this proposition will be found in Reg. v. Wellard (2). Lord Coleridge laid down there that a place was a public place if the public were in the habit of resorting to it and no one prevented them from so doing. Grove, J. laid down that a public place is one where the public go no matter whether they have a right to go or not. This view was accepted in the case of Queen-Empress v. Sri Lal (3). Edge, C. J., laid down that a public place was a place to which the public had by right or by permission or by usage or otherwise access. I, therefore, find that the applicants were gambling in a public place and they were rightly convicted. I dismiss this application.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 169, 514—Surety bond, construction of—Surety to produce accused on particular date—Non-appearance on subsequent date—Surety, liability of.

A surety bond in criminal cases must be strictly construed and a surety cannot be required to pay the amount of his bond as the result of an opinion held by a Court as to what was in his mind when he signed it. He can be required to forfeit the amount only if the terms expressed in the bond are broken.

Where, therefore, a surety binds himself to produce an accused on a particular date and he does so his liability is discharged and he is not bound for the non-appearance of the accused on any subsequent date.

Mr. S. Ganguli, for the Applicant.

JUDGMENT.—Upon a trial under section 9 (c) of the Opium Act, the accused was released on bail in Rs. 200 with two sureties in the like amount. The accused was produced in Court on the 20th August 1920 but did not subsequently appear and the sureties have been required to forfeit a sum of Rs. 200. They claim that they are not liable under their bonds. The Sessions Judge to whom they appealed held that they were liable. They now come to this Court in revision. The terms of the bond are as follows :—

"We, the undersigned as sureties for the accused undertake that he will appear before the Magistrate on the 20th of August 1920 to answer the charge, and if he does not appear and answer the charge we will forfeit Rs. 200 to Government." The bond was in manuscript as there was no printed form apparently available. It is quite clear that this bond does not require the sureties to do anything more than produce the accused upon the date named. The Sessions Judge has held that although no mention was made of any subsequent appearance, it was evident from the wording that the surety understood and intended to bind himself to an undertaking that the accused would not consider himself discharged from attending till he had cleared himself of the charge. But the surety bond in criminal cases must be strictly construed, and a surety cannot be required to pay the amount of his bond as the result of an opinion held by the Court as to what was in his mind when he signed it. He can only be required to forfeit the amount if the terms expressed in the bond are broken. The suggestion that the bond would have been satisfied by producing the accused at 10 A. M and that there would have been no liability if the accused had departed at one minute past 10 does not appear to be correct. He was not only to appear at 10 A. M. but was to appear and answer the charge. But his appearance was to be on the date mentioned and on no other date. I think it is quite clear that the sureties did not bind themselves to produce the accused except upon the 20th of August and that having done so their liability was discharged. The order is set aside and the amount of the bail bond must be refunded to the applicant.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 190—Cognizance of offence—Charge sheet, whether should mention what each witness is to prove.

No provision of law requires that a Magistrate before taking cognizance of an offence should know exactly what each of the witnesses named in the charge-sheet will prove. The charge-sheet alleges that a certain offence will be established by the evidence of certain witnesses and this is sufficient to enable a Magistrate to take cognizance. [p. 422, col. 2.]

Criminal ravision against an order of the District Magistrate, Bhagalpore, starting proceedings against the accused under section 150, Indian Penal Code.

Messrs Manuk, J. N. Maitra, S. C. Roy and N. C. Roy, for the Petitioner.

The Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This an application to quash proceedings under section 150 of the Indian Penal Code, which have been instituted by the District Magistrate of Bhagalpore against Mr. Grant one of the proprietors of the Luttipore Concern. The application has been made on three grounds:—

(1) that the proceedings are not bona fide, (2) that on the face of the charge sheet and on admitted facts the ingredients necessary for a prosecution under section 150 of the Indian Penal Code are not present, and (3) that the charge sheet as submitted to the Magistrate is such that he could not, under the law, take cognizance.

It appears that in the Luttipore Zemindary there are a number of Diara villages which are subject to the action of the river Ganges and, it is said, that under the terms of the kabuliyats which are taken by the proprietors from tenants, the arrangement is that the tenants do not pay rent on diluviated lands, the rights of tenancy are extinguished and when the lands reform the proprietors have an unrestricted right of settlement. Amongst these Diara villages is one named Sonbarsa. This village diluviated many years ago to the extent of some 400 bighas, which in the year 1918, reformed. There were apparently many applicants for settlement and when the settlement was made, it is said that the disappointed tenants began to create disturbances. The result was that proceedings under section 107 were instituted and in the beginning of the year 1920, 19 persons were bound down to keep the peace for a year. This, however, did not settle the matter and there were in the course of the next ten or eleven months, ten criminal proceedings, which seem to have ended in convictions. The proprietors, however, were not satisfied and they made several applications to the authorities for Police aid. These were not granted. Mr. H. Grant, thinking he was aggrieved, on the 20th of January engaged 40 Gurkhas from the Depôt at Lucknow. This action, he says, was necessary for the protection of his properties, the persons of his servants and tenants and for maintaining possession. These Gurkhas came down from Lucknow and, on the morning of the 2nd February, 27 of them accompanied by tenants and Zamindary servants, crossed the river to the Diara for the purpose, it is said, of watching the crops. They were met, however, by a large body of persons, a fight ensued, twenty Gurkhas were killed and the remaining Gurkhas and the Zamindary servants fled.

Proceedings were started against both contending parties in respect of this occurrence and on the 14th February the proceedings, with which we are now concerned, was instituted by a formal first information made by the Sub-Inspector of the Thana in which the occurrence took place. This shortly is the history of the case and, in my opinion, the facts disclosed absolutely nothing which would indicate that prosecution is not perfectly bona fide one.

Next it has been contended by Mr. Manuk on behalf of the petitioner, that the charge sheet which was sent up after the investigation in this case, and the admitted facts do not contain the ingredients for a prosecution of Mr. H. Grant under section 150 of the Indian Penal Code. With this contention I am unable to agree. It is clearly stated in the charge sheet that

SAGAR MAL v. EMPEROR.

Mr. H. Grant engaged or hired the services of 40 Gurkhas from the Lucknow Depôt, who joined or became members of an unlawful assembly which led to the commission of offences under sections 302, 148, and 379 of the Indian Penal Code, and that the charge against Mr. H. Grant under section 150 of the Indian Penal Code has been proved and satisfactorily established by the witnesses who were named by the Police. This is clearly a charge under section 150 of the Indian Penal Code. Mr. Manuk, however, contends that at the time this first information was submitted, the Magistrate had before him another charge sheet, namely, the charge sheet in a case under section 143 which had been sent up by the Police against some of the party with which it is said, the Gurkhas were at the time of occurrence on the 2nd of February. In the first information which was laid in that case the Gurkhas, who had not been killed, were named as accused, but these Gurkhas were not sent up for trial as the case against them had not been satisfactorily established and Mr. Manuk contends that this being so, there is no substance in the case against Mr. H. Grant, because unless the Gurkhas are members of the unlawful assembly, he cannot be said to have engaged or hired the services of the Gurkhas from Lucknow to join or to become members of an unlawful assembly. He, further, contends that the unlawful assembly for which hiring is done must be an unlawful assembly formed or forming and that the circumstances of this case do not comply with this view of the law.

With regard to the first of these contentions, the mere facts, that the Police did not consider that the Gurkhas could be successfully prosecuted under section 145, Indian Penal Code, by no means shows that they took no part in the occurrence. Moreover, 20 Gurkhas were killed and there is nothing to show what part they took in the occurrence. This contention, therefore, failed.

As to the second contention, its success or otherwise depends on the interpretation of section 150 of the Indian Penal Code. The interpretation of this section is not free from difficulty and without having the whole facts before us, it is impossible to say whether they will constitute an offence under this section or not.

The last contention of Mr. Manuk is that on the charge sheet as submitted the Magistrate could not, under the law, take cognizance, because it does not show exactly what each of the witnesses named in the charge sheet will prove. I can find no provision of the law which requires that the Magistrate before taking cognizance should know exactly what each of the witnesses named in the charge sheet will prove; nor can I find any authority for such a proposition. The charge sheet alleges that a certain offence will be established by the evidence of certain witnesses and, in my opinion, this is sufficient to enable the Magistrate to take cognizance.

I would accordingly dismiss the application.

Ross, J.—I agree.

Criminal revision from an order of the Officiating Sessions Judge, Bareilly, dated the 15th October 1921.

Mr. K. C. Mithal, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The Officiating Sessions Judge has directed a further enquiry against Sagar Mal who was discharged by a Magistrate of the First Class without notice having been served on Sagar Mal. An attempt was made to serve notice on Sagar Mal but the attempt was not successful, and when the matter was heard by the learned Sessions Judge, Sagar Mal was absent and unrepresented. In these circumstances the order directing further enquiry cannot stand. The principles laid down in the case of Queen-Empress v. Ajudhia (1) have invariably, as far as I am aware, been followed in this Court. I, therefore, set aside the order directing further enquiry and remit the case to the learned Sessions Judge who has succeeded the officer who passed the order, so that he may issue notice to Sagar Mal and then proceed to determine the matter.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 423 (1) (d), 439 (4), 470, 471—Acquittal on ground of lunacy—Order for safe custody—Delivery of lunatic prisoner to parents, legality of—Omission to pass orders under s. 471—High Court, powers of, in revision.

When a Court acquits an accused under section 470, Criminal Procedure Code, on the ground of his lunacy, it should simultaneously pass orders under section 471. [p. 424, col. 1.]

Section 471, Criminal Procedure Code, should not be interpreted as compelling a Court to send the accused to a lunatic asylum. All that is necessary is to see that such safeguards are taken as would keep the accused from mischief and it is permissible to order the accused to be kept under the control and custody of his parents. [p. 424, col. 1.]

A Trial Court's omission to pass an order under section 471 will not preclude a High Court from passing such an order in revision. Such an order is in the nature of a consequential or an incidental order within the meaning of section 423 (1), Criminal Procedure Code, and does not amount to an alteration of the finding of acquittal into one of conviction. [p. 424, col. 1.]

Calendar Case No. 1 of 1921 on the file of the Court of the First Class Sub Divisional Magistrate, Mangalore, submitted in accordance with the proceedings of the High Court, dated the 16th August 1921.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Dr. S. Swaminathan, for the Accused.—There is a finding of guilty in the judgment of the lower Court. It finds that the accused removed the coat. The acquittal on ground of insanity is quite legal.

Consequential orders under section 471, Criminal Procedure Code, however, have not been passed. That would not affect the acquittal. By virtue of its powers under section 423 the High Court can itself pass such orders as a Court of Revision. It is within its competence either to send the accused to the lunatic asylum or deliver him to his parents for safe custody on their executing bonds. The matter is within the Court's discretion and dependent on the nature of the lunacy.

Mr. J. C. Adam, Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.—The High Court has no power to pass order under section 471. It will be virtually converting a finding of acquittal into one of conviction. The lower Court only should do so.

ORDER.—The Sessions Judge finds that the accused took away the coat of the girl but acquits him as he was of opinion that the accused was insane when he committed the act. Reading the judgment as a whole, I think there is a specific finding that the accused committed the act complained of and the provisions of section 470, Criminal Procedure Code, have been complied with.

He was, however, wrong in not having passed orders under section 471. Mr. Adam, Public Prosecutor, contends that the High Court has no power to pass orders and that the case must go back to the lower Court. He relies on section 439, clause 4, Criminal Procedure Code, which prevents the High Court from converting a finding of acquittal into one of conviction. I do not think the passing of an order under section 471 after an acquittal has been recorded, can be said to alter a finding of acquittal into one of conviction. The acquittal is maintained, but, in view of the desirability of keeping the accused from further mischief, the Court passed orders as to his safe custody.

So far as the High Court is concerned, it has, in revision, all the powers of a Court of Appeal. Section 439, clause (1), makes this clear and confers on the High Court powers under section 423. Under clause 1 to section 423, the Appellate Court can make any consequential or incidental order as may be just and proper.

When an Appellate Court finds a man insane, it is bound to acquit him and any orders that it may pass subsequently under section 471, Criminal Procedure Code, are not part of any sentence for the offence. It is, in my opinion, an order which the Court passes as consequential on or incidental to the acquittal.

Section 471 confers the power to order the insane accused "to be kept in safe custody in such place and manner as the Magistrate or Court thinks fit." Clauses 2 and 3 have been repealed by Act IV of 1912 and the powers of the Court are wide. I see nothing in the section as it now stands compelling the Court to send the accused to a lunatic asylum. All that is necessary is to see that such safeguards are taken as would keep the accused from mischief. There are various degrees of lunacy and it would, in many cases, be quite unnecessary to take a person out of the control of his parents or relations and confine him in a lunatic asylum if he can otherwise be kept from harm. I think that, in the present case the accused can safely be kept under the custody and control of his father on the father's executing a bond for a sum of Rs. 1,000 to assure for two years undertaking to keep the accused from committing any offense. I modify the order of the lower Court accordingly.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 297—Putting obstacle in burying dead child - Boycott—Offence—Security to keep peace.

An accused person who deliberately puts obstacles in the way of a complainant burying his dead son because he has not joined the Khilafat movement but does not use violence to him though he effectively boycotts him is not guilty of an offence under section 297, Indian Penal Code, of having offered an indignity to the corpse of the dead child and cannot also be bound over to keep the peace inasmuch as the act is an act of boycotting and not a criminal act under any law [p. 424, col 2; p. 425, col. 1.]

Criminal revision against an order of the Sessions Judge, Ghazipur, dated the 18th October 1921.

Mr. S. C. Mukerji, for the Applicants.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The facts are as follows:—On the 27th of July 1921 the son of Muhammad Shakur died of cholera in a village in the Ghazipur District. Muhammad Shakur told the barber to arrange for the digging of a grave. The barber came back and said that Amanat, Ghura, Jamait, Fateh Ali and another were preventing the grave being dug. Muhammad Shakur went to these persons and protested They replied that as he was not joining the Khilafat party they would not permit his son to be buried. It has been found that the above facts are correct. The four men in question deliberately put obstacles in the way of Muhammad Shakur burying his son because he had not joined the Khilafat movement. They did not use any violence to him, though they boycotted him effectively. They have been convicted under section 297, Indian Penal Code, of having offered an indignity to the corpse of the dead child. They have also been bound over to keep the peace. The matter has come before me on a reference from the Sessions Judge in respect of the order to keep the peace and in revision in respect of both orders. I do not propose to expatiate upon the mentality of persons who, to support their views as to what they conceive desirable in politics, use their influence to prevent a man from burying his little child. But as the law stands they have not committed any criminal offence in this particular case. The act was an act of boycotting and was not a criminal act either under the Penal Code or any other law. The suggestion that by their action they offered an indignity to the child's corpse, is almost fantastic. As the appellants have not committed any criminal offense under the law, I must allow this application, set aside their convictions and sentences and direct a refund of their fines if they have been paid. The order that they should furnish security is set aside.

There is no prohibition against the driving of a motor car by a properly licensed person who has not got his license with him; it is only the non-production of the license upon demand by a Police Officer that is an offence. [p. 425, col. 2.]

The suspension of a license of a motor driver under section 18 (2) of the Motor Vehicles Act, if ordered in addition to the imposition of a fine for an offence under section 16 of the Motor Vehicles Act, is a part of the sentence, as an order under section 565 of the Criminal Procedure Code is An order of suspension under section 18 (2) as well as the order imposing fine for an offence under section 5 of the Motor Vehicles Act are both appealable under section 417 of the Criminal Procedure Code and are also subject to revision by a High Court. Application for revision of an order passed by the District Magistrate, Bhandara, dated the 7th October 1921, in Criminal Appeal No. 58 of 1921.

Mr. V. M. Jakatdar, for the Applicant.

Mr. G. P. Dick, Standing Counsel, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The applicant Dheklia Kunbi was convicted of an offence of not producing his driving license on demand by the Police and sentenced under section 16 of the Motor Vehicles Act (VIII of 1914) to pay a fine of twenty-five rupees. The Magistrate also passed an order under section 18 (2) of the Act that his license should be suspended for six months. The circumstances are as follows: Dheklia has held a license since 1915, and there has apparently never been a complaint of any sort against him. On the 8th of September a Sub-Inspector was stopping all motor cars that passed in front of the Police Station House for the purpose of examining the drivers' licenses: Dheklia was taking certain passengers to the Railway Station in one of his master's cars. He stopped when called upon to do so, and admitted that he had not got his license with him. The Magistrate seems to have found that he was told to go back and fetch it and that he started in the direction of his own or his master's house, but instead of going there went to the Railway Station, his original destination, by another route. He sent the license to the Kotwali in the evening.

The learned Magistrate appears to think that the offense is aggravated by the fact that after committing it Dheklia drove to the Railway Station by another route. This can, as far as I can see, only mean that he considers it proved that he drove there without having his license on his person. There is no basis whatever for such a finding, and the act is no offense. There is no prohibition against the driving of a car by a properly licensed person who has not got his license with him. What is an offence is the contravention of section 8 of the Act which lays down that "the driver of a motor vehicle shall produce his license upon demand by any Police Officer." As Dheklia must be perfectly well known to the Bhandara Police as the holder of a license the offence is of the most trivial and technical nature possible. The sentence inflicted is a fine of a quarter of the maximum amount possible under section 16 and suspension of the license for a half of the maximum period possible under section 18 (2).

On appeal the learned District Magistrate reduced the amount of the fine to ten rupees but was of opinion that he had no authority to interfere in respect of the suspension of the license, because the order "is not actually a part of the sentence" and "no provision for an appeal against an order of suspension has been made in the Act", so that "presumably even if the conviction were upset in appeal the order of suspension would still hold good." Having himself reduced his own view of the matter to this most patent absurdity the learned District Magistrate still continued to hold it. Even so, neither of the two reasons stated gives it any support whatever. The order is just as much a part of the sentence as an order under section 565 of the Criminal Procedure Code is. I am so completely unable to imagine any reason in support of the dictum that such an order is not a part of the sentence, that the only reason I can give for holding the contrary view is that it seems to me fundamentally and essentially obvious. No other reason that I know of can be given for saying that the order of fine is a part of the sentence. The ruling in Emperor v. Jhagroo (1) proceeded entirely on the basic assumption that an order under section 565 of the Criminal Procedure Code was a sentence and went on to discuss whether the result of it was also a "punishment" or not. As for the other reason, if there is no provision in the Act for an appeal against an order under section 18, there is also none for an appeal against an order under section 16. Both are appealable under the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code, in this particular case under section 407 of that Code.

In discussing the amount of the fine that would be appropriate the learned District Magistrate seems to have fallen into the same error as was made in the Court below his. That Dheklia went on to the Railway Station without having his license on his person may be relevant, though I cannot see how it is, but it is certainly no aggravation of the original offence as has already been shown. It is just possible that what both Courts regarded as an aggravation of his offence was that he was ordered to go back and bring his license to the Kotwali at once but did not do so till the evening. Of this point I need only say that there is no evidence or suggestion on the record to this effect, and the fact would not aggravate the offence if there was. A fine of a rupee or even less would have fully met the requirements of the law and of justice and expediency. The suspension of the license has been in force for three months and considerable expense has necessarily been incurred by the applicant over the appeal and this application. His actual punishment has, therefore, been almost immeasurably in excess of his deserts. The order of suspension of the license is set aside and the amount of the fine is reduced to one anna. I refrain from setting aside the fine altogether only for the purpose of leaving it on record that a technical offence has been committed. Care should be taken to see that the necessary alteration in the amount of the fine is made in the endorsement on the license prescribed by section 18 (2).

Criminal appeal against an order of the Sessions Judge, Cuttack.

Messrs. Asghar and G. P. Das, for the Appellant.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

JWALA PRASAD, J.—The appellant has been convicted of fraudulently or dishonestly using as genuine and valuable security a forged hand-note (Exhibit 4) under section 467 read with section 471, Indian Penal Code and sentenced to five years' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 500.

On the basis of the said hand note he instituted a suit in the Court of the Munsif of Puri against the alleged executant, Gopi Nath Haribandan (P. W. No. 5), claiming Rs 300 as due to him under the hand-note in question. The said note was filed along with the plaint. In support of his claim the appellant was examined in the Court on 26th February 1920 and he stated that the defendant Gopi Nath Haribandan (P. W. No. 5), executed the document on the 29th December 1916 on which date he took the said sum of Rs. 300. That suit of the plaintiff was dismissed by the Munsif after a special oath having been taken by the defendant, Gopi Nath Haribandan, denying the execution of the hand-note and the taking of the loan. The appellant was directed by the Munsif to be prosecuted for using the document said to have been forged. After the necessary preliminary enquiry, the prisoner was committed to the Court of Sessions and was tried with the aid of two assessors, with the result, as stated above at the very outset of this judgment, that he was convicted and sentenced to five years' rigorous imprisonment. The assessors returned an unanimous verdict of guilty. The learned Sessions Judge has held that the appellant did use the document in question in support of his claim in the Civil Court. This finding is based upon the good evidence on the record and has not been challenged in this Court. The only question, therefore, for consideration before us is whether the document in question is a forged document.

The hand-note bears the date "29th December 1916," Babu Pulin Behari Banerjee, Stationary Store Keeper, in the office of the Controller of Stationary, Calcutta proved that the Cartridge Paper on which the hand-note is written was not only not in existence in December 1916 but that it had not been ordered by the Controller's Office from the manufacturers until after the month of June 1917. Therefore the hand note in question could not have been executed on the 29th of December 1916. In the interest of the public, the documents and the distinctive marks that they bear are kept confidential and are not disclosed. The witness Pulin Behari Banerjee accordingly refused in the cross-examination to disclose the confidential and secret matters. The learned Counsel on behalf of the appellant argues that the learned Sessions Judge ought to have compelled the witness to disclose those confidential matters and that the refusal of the witness has affected his evidence to such a degree that it renders it inadmissible. Reliance has been placed upon section 162 of the Evidence Act. The first paragraph of that section no doubt requires a witness summoned to produce a document to bring it into Court. The second paragraph of that section gives the discretion to the Court to inspect the document "unless it refers to matters of State." The document said to be produced on behalf of the appellant to my mind refers to State matters and consequently the Court could not compel the witness to produce the same in Court for the inspection of the appellant or the public. I accordingly overrule this contention. But in view of the defence taken by the appellant in the Court below and also vehemently urged in this Court, the evidence of the Store Keeper becomes wholly irrelevant. The accused's case now is that the writing upon the document in question was not written on the 29th of December 1916 as it purports to have been on the face of it. That date depotes the date of execution of a hand note which was subsequently substituted by the document in question and the original date of execution "29th December 1916" was retained in the substituted document which has been produced in Court. In other words it is now said that the document in question came into existence subsequent to June 1917 after it was manufactured according to the evidence of the Store Keeper. This was not the case of the prisoner in the Civil Court. There the prisoner case was based on the hand-note stating that it was executed on the 29th December 1916, the date on which the money was advanced. The present case of the prisoner is that money was advanced on the 29th of December 1916, but the original document is no longer in existence and on the date when the present document was written no money was paid to Gopinath Harichandan, the debtor. This is obvious from the statement on oath of the appellant in Exhibit 5 when he gave evidence in support of his claim in civil suit. "I see the hand note Exhibit. 1" said the appellant in the civil suit. "It is dated 29th December 1916 on that very day the defendant executed this hand-note to me." The defence witness No. 1 Banamali Mahanty contradicts the case of the appellant by stating that on the date when the document in question was substituted for the old damaged document, the appellant paid the consideration money to Gopinath, the debtor. He says that the money was paid to Gopinath on the same day that Gopinath wrote the paper. Thus apart from the evidence of Pulin Behari Banerjee, Store-Keeper the document in question upon the evidence on the record does not seem to be a genuine one.

The question then is whether the prosecution has been able to prove affirmatively that the document is a forged one, the onus of proof being upon the prosecution. Exhibit B, a blank stamp paper with endorsement on the back of it in the handwriting of Gopinath Harichandan the debtor, was produced on behalf of the accused in the Sessions Court with a prayer to send it to Government expert in handwriting for comparison of handwriting on the two documents. The trial before the learned Sessions Judge commenced on the 6th October 1920 and after the case having been opened by the Public Prosecutor and the examination of some of the prosecution witnesses the case had to be adjourned to the 15th of January 1921 to enforce the attendance of Babu Pulin Behari Banerjee. The assessors were then discharged and a de novo trial was directed. No application for the comparison of the handwriting was made at the commencement of the trial on the 6th of December, nor was any application made previously in the commitment Court. The application made on the 5th of January 1921 was, therefore, rejected by the Court below as being too late. I do not think that the Judge was wrong in refusing the application in the circumstances of this case. The accused is required to give the list of witnesses in the commitment Court if the order for commitment is made. No doubt, in certain special circumstances the Sessions Judge may allow fresh evidence to be given on behalf of the defence, but the accused failed to make out a sufficient case before the Sessions Judge for sending the document in question to the handwriting expert. That would have delayed the disposal of the case and certainly the Court could not have allowed the document to be taken away in the midst of the trial. The Court, however, compared the writing on the document in question with the admitted handwriting of Gopinath on Exhibit B, and came to the conclusion that although there is similarity between the two handwritings yet they are not of the same person. Indeed, as the learned Judge says, the similarity between the two writings is no greater than can fairly be expected from a competent forger. We have ourselves also compared the writings, and we are not satisfied that they are of the same person. Mr. Asghar has then referred us to the case of Barindra Kumar Ghose v. Emperor (1) where Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C. J., on the authority of the distinguished Judge (Blackburn) held that the prosecution must produce an expert in the handwriting when the case against the accused depends entirely upon the comparison of the handwritings. The learned Chief Justice further observed that the Court should not take upon itself the responsibility of judging of the handwriting by making comparison itself unaided by the opinion of an expert. This is no doubt, a very valuable opinion and a very wholesome guide in judging handwritings. To my mind however this does not at all suggest that the Court is incompetent to use its own eyes for the purpose of deciding whether certain handwritings placed before it are similar or not. To do this would be to deprive the Court of the function for which it exists of deciding disputed facts placed before it. The opinion of experts is only a piece of evidence. The opinion of the Judge is the decision in the case. A Judge has to be satisfied and he is entitled to take such assistance upon evidence as is available in the circumstances of each case. No doubt where the conviction of the accused rests entirely upon a comparison of handwritings, it has been held in a number of cases that such a conviction is not very safe. I had the opportunity of discussing the point in the case of Mohammad Kabiruddin v. Emperor (2). The opinion then expressed by me was based upon a consideration of the authorities on the subject. I still adhere to that opinion. But the present case does not depend solely upon the comparison of handwritings. Here we have got the direct evidence of Gopinath Harichandan who is said to have written the document in question that the document was never executed by him and he did not take the loan of Rs. 300 mentioned therein. The accused, on the other hand, asserts that this was the document executed by Gopinath Harichandan. So in this case we have got direct evidence on both sides. The question before the Court is which evidence is acceptable. Gopinath Harichandan's case is that of denial. He could not be expected to corroborate his case by direct evidence. The case of the accused is in the nature of affirmative statement, but the evidence offered on his behalf is so contradictory and inconsistent and improbable that it is impossible to act upon it. I do not think that Mr. Asghar has himself laid any stress upon that evidence. The evidence given by the defence witnesses are palpably false. They have purported to prove that the document in question was substituted for an old and damaged hand-note. I cannot for a moment believe that an old damaged hand-note will be substituted by another one, keeping the old date on the new one, if the question of the hand-note and a renewal as may be expected is a true case. Defence witness No. 1, as observed already, contradicted the case of the accused by stating that the money was paid at the time when the substituted hand-note was executed. The defence case and the evidence in support of it must, therefore, be eliminated from this record as being rank perjury.

Let us now see whether the prosecution evidence of Gopinath survives to the extent of carrying conviction in our minds so as to accept it as having been conclusively proved that the hand-note in question was a forged one. I say so with purpose, for nothing short of a firm convictions in our mind will entitle us to punish the prisoner—a conviction that the hand-note in question is a forged document to the knowledge and belief of the accused and that he used it with such knowledge and with the intention of committing fraud or dishonesty. The learned Counsel on behalf of the prisoner has not shown to us inherent improbability in the case of Gopinath Harichandan. The evidence, as we read it, appears to us to be straightforward. It is corroborated by the circumstances of the case and as such it is more acceptable than the evidence sought to be corroborated by the direct testimony of the witnesses. The circumstances of this case in favour of the prosecution are such as are incapable of being fabricated. The Court below has accepted the evidence. I therefore, have no hesitation in accepting the evidence of the prosecution and in holding that the case against the accused has been fully and firmly proved. It was a daring act on his part to concoct the hand-note of a large sum of Rs. 300 which he deliberately used in the Civil Court to support a wholly false claim against the defendant, Gopinath Harichandan. These are the circumstances which the Court below took into consideration in awarding somewhat heavier sentence against the accused. I agree with the Court below that the accused deserves a deterrent sentence. We, however, think that the fine of Rs. 500 imposed upon the petitioner be remitted, inasmuch as the sentence of rigorous imprison-

The conviction and sentence of imprisonment are upheld and the sentence of fine is remitted.

Arms Act (XI of 1878), s. 19—Punjab Government Notification of 11th May 1917—Kirpan, what is—Burden of proof.

Every sword is not a kirpan. A person who claims that a particular kind of sword is a kirpan and that he is entitled to carry it with impunity under the Punjab Government Notification of 11th May 1917, must prove that the weapon in question is a kirpan.

In this case it was held that a sword 31 inches long with a blade length of 22 inches had not been proved to be a kirpan.

Petition, under section 439, Criminal Procedure Code, for revision of an order of the Sessions Judge, Amritsar, dated the 14th May 1921, varying that of the Additional District Magistrate, Amritsar, dated the 30th March 1921.

Sardar Mehtab Singh, S. B., for the Petitioner.

The Assistant Legal Remembrancer, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner in this case was convicted under the Arms Act of going armed with a sword. The Local Government has remitted the unexpired portion of the sentence but this petition is pressed by reason of the principle involved in the case.

In the Courts below the argument employed by the defence was that the implement or weapon found in petitioner's possession was a kirpan and not a sword; in this Court it is admitted that the weapon is a sword, and I am asked to find that 'kirpan' is merely a Punjabi equivalent for 'sword' when a Sikh wears it.

The Government Advocate appears for the case for the Crown but holds only a watching brief and does not oppose the petition. The petitioner is a Sikh and bases his claim to exemption from prosecution on the Notification of 11th May 1917 which permits Sikhs to carry a kirpan with impunity. That Notification unfortunately gives no definition of a kirpan and the argument now employed is that any sword of any shape or dimensions is a kirpan.

The weapon recovered from petitioner is described as a short sword, 31 inches long with a blade length of 22 inches, in a simple scabbard and the finding is that the petitioner has not proved that it is a kirpan which the learned Sessions Judge states is a smaller implement. He does not, however, furnish any clear criterion for the determination of the question whether any given article is a kirpan or something prohibited by the Arms Act. He appears to think that a kirpan should not be a lethal weapon, but this view is hardly consistent with its special exemption under the Arms Act.

Nor am I impressed with the argument that it could never have been the intention of Government to prohibit one class from carrying a lethal weapon and to allow that privilege to another for it clearly was the intention of Government to confer on the Sikhs an immunity which was refused to other communities.

If Government was in possession of the fact that a kirpan is a sword, it could have fixed the extreme dimensions of the kirpan for which immunity was granted: if it did not, and a kirpan is nothing but a sword, then Sikhs wearing kirpans of any size are rendered immune by the Notification.

From the prosecution side, no light on the meaning of kirpan is given to this Court. For the petitioner, I am referred to Macauliff's "The Sikh Religion" Volume V, page 95, where the five "kakas" are described, one of which is "kirpan, a sword." in Monier William's 'sword' and 'sacrificial knife' are the equivalents.

In the St. Petersburgh Sanskrit Dictionary the meaning of 'kirpan' is given as 'sword;'

Now if any sword is a kirpan, it is remarkable that Government in its Notification did not use the word 'sword' but deliberately used the word kirpan.

From this I gather that it was intended to exempt Sikhs wearing that peculiar kind of 'sword' called a kirpan. The petitioner claims the benefit of an exception to the broad rule of law and he must establish that he comes within that exception.

I have seen a facsimile of the kirpan of the Tenth Guru, which does not resemble the weapon in respect of which the petitioner was charged. The weapon in this case is considerably longer and is of a different shape. It is certainly a sword and is not proved to be a kirpan.

Not being satisfied that the sword in this case is a 'kirpan' I refuse to interfere with the conviction and dismiss the petition.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 438, 439—Commitment, quashing of—Law, question of—Evidence on record, sufficiency of, to establish charge.

A commitment can only be quashed on a question of law. The question whether the evidence already on the record is sufficient to establish the charge is not such a question It is a question connected more with the propriety of a conviction rather than with the propriety of a commitment.

Case reported by the Additional Sessions Judge, Bahraich, dated the 14th February 1921, from an order of the Magistrate, First Class, Bahraich, dated the 29th December 1920.

The Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is a reference by the Additional Sessions Judge of Bahraich for the quashing of a commitment made by a Magistrate of the First Class of Bahraich. The accused is charged with an offence under section 412 of the Indian Penal Code. The learned Additional Sessions Judge states that the evidence sent up does not go far enough to establish the offence charged inasmuch as there is nothing to show that the wristlets produced at the identification proceeding were actually those found on the person of the accused and made over to the Magistrate conducting the identification proceeding.

After the case was committed the Magistrate called for fresh evidence and submitted the evidence of the additional witnesses' examination under section 219 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. These witnesses had been examined by the Committing Magistrate in the presence of the accused and it was open to the latter to take copies of their evidence, free of cost, and to call any additional evidence himself to meet it, if he thought necessary. It is open to the Magistrate to send up a supplementary list of persons subsequently examined by him under section 219 of the Code and it is equally within the competence of the accused to file a supplementary list under section 211, clause (2), of the Code.

A commitment can only be quashed on a question of law. The question of law which the learned Additional Sessions Judge asks this Court to consider is whether the evidence already on the record is sufficient to establish the charge but that is a question connected more with the propriety of a conviction rather than with the propriety of a commitment. If there is an accidental gap in the evidence, the law permits the Trial Judge, if he thinks proper, to call additional evidence under section 540 of the Code unless the Committing Magistrate himself takes steps before the trial under section 219 to supplement it. The Committing Magistrate would have undoubtedly done better had he completed his enquiry before committing the case to the Sessions, but the omission to record such formal evidence is not such as cannot be legally rectified. There is no reason, therefore, for quashing the commitment and the accused must be duly tried. The record will be returned.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application in Criminal Revisional Jurisdiction and arises out of the conviction of certain persons who are the petitioners here and who were convicted of certain offences against the provisions of sections 504 and 341 of the Indian Penal Code. Apparently the first petitioner was sentenced to six weeks' rigorous imprisonment, the second and third to one month's rigorous imprisonment and the fourth and the fifth accused to a fine of Rs. 40 each (or in default to one month's rigorous imprisonment) under section 504; although they were found guilty also under section 341, no separate sentences were passed in respect of the offence committed against the provisions of that section. Certain circumstances in this case to which I will refer presently, were somewhat curious, but the legal points which have been placed before me and upon which I have been asked to interfere are really but two in number. The first point is certainly an interesting one. It is said that there was a possibility of a compromise and that in fact there had been a compromise. When the case had been tried (the Sub-Divisional Officer thought there was no effective composition) it went up on revision to the Sessions Judge of Monghyr, and it was then suggested that even then it was open to him to allow the conviction to be set aside on a composition on agreement being accomplished. He held, however, that on the authority of certain cases, he could not accept or give effect to any such alleged compromise. The question is now, however, brought before me and it is suggested that under sections 345 423, (1) (d) and 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code it is possible for the matter to be dealt with in that manner. It is said that under the provisions of that section it may be open for a Court exercising revisional jurisdiction to give effect to a compromise. The point has been very well put before me by the learned Counsel for the petitioners and a good deal of authority has been quoted to me much of which was in favour of the contention, whilst much on the other hand was against it, but I think that the latest case of Akshoy Singh v. Rameswar Bagdi (1) places the matter, so far as I am concerned substantially out of further serious consideration. In that case which was heard before Mr. Justice Mookerjee and Mr. Justice Sheepshanks, it was held that the High Court has no power as a Court of Revision under section 439 read with section 423 (1) (d), to sanction the composition of an offence when entered into after the conviction of the accused. The learned Judges there quoted every case which has been quoted before me and whilst dissenting from some followed a line of decision of which the following are the most important, Adhar Chandra Dey v. Subodh Chandra Ghosh (2), Sankar Rangayya v. Sankar Ramayya (3) and Ram Chandra v. Emperor (4). I think in view of these that it is unnecessary for me really to review this matter further.

Criminal revision from an order of the Sessions Judge, Farrukhabad, dated the 7th July 1921.

Mr. S. C. Mukerji, for the Applicant.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for revision on behalf of Shankar Lal, a Sub-Inspector of Police, who has been convicted on a charge of wrongful confinement and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 300. Both the Courts below have found the charge proved. The facts may be briefly stated as follows:—The applicant was the Sub-Inspector of Police at Kamalganj in the Farrukhabad District. It is said that on the 25th of October 1920 he wrongfully arrested and kept in confinement one Ram Ghulam, who is a liquor seller in the Kamalganj Bazar. The story which was put forward by the complainant was that on the evening of the 24th of October the Sub Inspector sent four constables to his liquor shop and demanded two bottles of liquor on credit. Ram Ghulam refused to supply the liquor because the Sub-Inspector owed him the price of ten or twelve bottles previously supplied. Ram Ghulam said that on his refusal the constables used some threats to him and said that they would see him. The next morning Ram Ghulam was arrested and kept in wrongful confinement till the afternoon, when he produced some sureties and was released.

The counter-story put forward on behalf of the accused was that very late on the night of the 24th of October a report was made at the Police Station that Ram Ghulam was selling liquor at his shop after hours. The Sub Inspector took no action that night but took action the next morning and being of opinion that the report disclosed an offence under section 60 of the United Provinces Excise Act (IV of 1910), he arrested Ram Ghulam in the exercise of the powers conferred upon Police Officers under section 50 of that Act.

The case was tried at considerable length by the District Magistrate, who came to the conclusion that the story told by the complainant Ram Ghulam was in substance the truth. He has rejected the defence put forward by the Sub-Inspector and has held that there was no reliable evidence before him to show that any report was made at the Police Station on the night of the 24th of October alleging that Ram Ghulam was keeping his shop open after hours for the sale of liquor. In appeal the learned Judge has agreed with the findings of the District Magistrate. Several grounds are set out here in the petition of revision. I have to notice first the point which is raised in the second paragraph in the petition of revision. It is pleaded that section 42 of the Police Act was a bar to the trial of this case. That argument cannot be sustained. The complaint which was made against the Sub-Inspector was made against him four or five days after the alleged offence was committed. Then it is said that the Sub-Inspector at least had a right to arrest the accused for an offence under section 60 of the Excise Act (Local Act No. IV of 1910). This argument can only be put forward if it is assumed that any report concerning the commission of such an offence was brought to the notice of the Sub-Inspector. It may be a question whether the offence of selling liquor after hours is an offence under section 60 or only under section 64 of the Excise Act. For an offence under the latter section the Police have no authority to arrest without warrant. However, I am satisfied that this point does not really arise, because unless it is established that a report concerning the commission of such an offence was made no question regarding the Police Officer's power to arrest could possibly arise. The same remark applies to the plea based upon section 79 of the Indian Penal Code. Section 79 contains one of the general exceptions set out in the Code and provides that 'nothing is an offense which is done by any person who is justified by law, or who by reason of a mistake of fact and not by reason of a mistake of law in good faith, believes himself to be justified by law in doing it.' No plea of good faith can be advanced in view of the findings come to by both the Courts below, namely, that no report was made at the Police Station on the night of the 24th October. On this point both the Courts below are in agreement and hold that the making of such a report was not established. In these circumstances I see no reason to interfere with the order of the learned Sessions Judge and I dismiss this application.

The offence of a person accusing another falsely of murder to a Police Officer in an enquiry under section 174 of the Criminal Procedure Code would not fall under section 194 of the Penal Code, the reason being that it is difficult to affirm the existence of an intention to cause, or of knowledge that the false evidence is likely to cause, a person to be convicted of a capital offence, when the proceeding in which the evidence is given is one in which such a conviction is not legally possible. Mr. Zafrulla Khan, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—On 8th January 1921 an enquiry into the death of a cooly working on a building under construction by Mohamed Din of Pindi Baha ud-Din was held under section 174, Criminal Procedure Code, by Mangal Sen, Head Constable.

During the proceedings a written statement written by Mohamed Hayat and signed by Mirza was presented by these two persons and by Karm Dad, Bahlu, Haku and Sardara. This stated that the cooly had really been killed in their presence by Mohamed Din who had thrown a brick at the man in the course of a dispute about the man's wages, that a second brick had been thrown by one Ghulam Mohamed and that both, assisted by other labourers, had heaped bricks over the body to make it appear that death had been the result of an accident. Mohamed Hayat, Mirza, Karm Dad, Bahlu and Haku made statements, which were recorded by the Head Constable, repeating this story. Sardara refused to make any statement.

It was found after enquiry that death had been caused accidentally by the collapse of a wall and as a result all of these persons, except Haku who is said to be absconding, were tried on charges under sections 193 and 211, Indian Penal Code, by a Magistrate exercising enhanced powers under section 30, Criminal Procedure Code. Sardara was acquitted. Mohamed Hayat, Mirza, Karm Dad and Bahlu were convicted, and each was sentenced to a year's rigorous imprisonment and Rs. 50 fine. They appealed unsuccessfully to the Sessions Judge, and Mohamed Hayat, Mirza and Karm Dad have come to this Court on revision. The Sessions Judge has reported all four cases under section 438, Criminal Procedure Code, with the recommendation that the convictions be altered to convictions under section 194, Indian Penal Code, and the sentences enhanced to the maximum periods of imprisonment which the Magistrate could have inflicted. There are thus seven proceedings before me and they will all be disposed of in this judgment.

The first question is whether section 194, Indian Penal Code, applies to the facts found and I am bound to hold that it does not, for two reasons. In the first place, a very positive opinion was expressed in Empress v. Muhammad (1) that a witness who gives false evidence in the committing proceedings against an accused person subsequently committed to the Sessions on a charge of murder would not be guilty of an offence under section 194, Indian Penal Code, the reason being that it is difficult to affirm the existence of an intention to cause, or of knowledge that the false evidence is likely to cause, a person to be convicted of a capital offence, when the proceeding in which the evidence is given is one in which such a conviction is not legally possible. It would follow from this a fortiori that the offence of a person accusing another falsely of murder to a Head Constable in an enquiry under section 174, Criminal Procedure Code, would not fall under section 194, Indian Penal Code. It is true that this opinion was to some extent obiter and is also to some extent (for the facts of that particular case have to be borne in mind) in conflict with a Calcutta case of 1873 reported as Queen v. Nim Chand Mookerjee (2), but it undoubtedly is entitled to respect. Secondly under section 191, Indian Penal Code, false evidence to be punishable must have been given in a proceeding in which the defendant was bound by law to speak the truth. Section 161 (2), Criminal Procedure Code, does not bind a person to tell the truth when questioned by a Police Officer. If the proceeding is under section 174, Criminal Procedure Code, as in the present instance, he is only bound to answer questions truly if he has been summoned in writing to attend before the Police Officer. It may seem anamolous that a man who comes forward without being summoned and volunteers information at a Police enquiry under section 174, should not be bound to give true answers to questions, but such are the plain words of section 175 read with section 161. I agree with the learned Sessions Judge that the present petitioners must have been questioned by the Head Constable and I consider that the record of their statements contains internal evidence that they were, but technically what they said, although intentionally false (a fact proved and also admitted by their Counsel in this Court), does not come within the definition of section 191, Indian Penal Code.

This fact disposes of the question whether section 194 should be applied or could be applied without another trial and the argument of Counsel appearing on behalf of the complainant that the sentences should be enhanced under section 193, Indian Penal Code, and settles in favour of the petitioners their contention that they have been convicted wrongly under section 193. It remains to decide whether the conviction under section 211 should be maintained and whether the sentences should be enhanced with reference to that section.

The further argument of Counsel for the petitioners that they did not falsely charge Mohamed Din with causing the death under investigation or that they did not all do so, has no force. They are proved to have presented themselves in a body with a document stating to that effect, which was written by one of their number and signed by others. All made statements that the contents of the document were true and used words which showed that they knew the contents. They alleged the commission of an offence cognizable by the Police, and it is impossible to believe that they had any other intention than to set the Criminal Law in motion against Mohamed Din. That they had no just or lawful ground for doing so is proved. It is urged by Counsel for the complainant that the written report and statements to the Police Officer amounted to the institution of a criminal proceeding and that their offence is punishable with seven years' imprisonment under the second part of section 211, Indian Penal Code. There is some conflict of authority on the point, but so far as I am aware, this Court has always followed Sultan v. Empress (3), which laid down that the term institution in section 211, Indian Penal Code, means the institution either by the accused himself, or by the Police or others in consequence of the accused's action, in some Criminal Court A previous ruling to the contrary, Sulla v. Empress (4), was not noticed in Sultan v. Empress (3), but its facts do not fit the present case exactly and I prefer to be guided by the latter decision.

(2) 20 W. R. 41.

The maximum sentence of imprisonment which can be awarded under the first part of section 211, Indian Penal Code, is a period of two years and I agree with the opinion of the learned Sessions Judge that the sentences imposed by the Magistrate are inadequate. A grave charge was made deliberately, by persons who said that they were eye witnesses, of what they knew perfectly well that they had not seen.

Accordingly I reject the revision petition for acquittal and in each case I alter the conviction to one under section 211, Indian Penal Code, and enhance the sentences of imprisonment to one of two years' rigorous imprisonment, including two months' solitary confinement, maintaining in each the additional sentence of Rs. 50 fine, with six months' rigorous imprisonment in addition in default of payment.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 476, prosecution under, stay of, pending civil appeal—Finding of Criminal Court—Effect on civil appeal

Where a Subordinate Judge, District Judge or Sessions Judge of experience makes an order that a party or witness in a civil case shall stand his trial under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, the prosecution should not be stayed because of an appeal pending against the civil case, if the appeal is not likely to be decided soon. At the same time the decision arrived at by the Magistrate should not have any effect upon the Court which may hear the civil appeal, rather the decision of the Magistrate in that matter is not relevant evidence to produce and bring before the Appellate Court.

Criminal revision from an order of the Magistrate, First Class, Dehra Dun, dated the 13th October 1921.

Messrs. S. C. Mukerji and L. M. Roy, for the Applicants.

The Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application on the part of Anrudh Kumar and Mahtab Singh that criminal proceedings which were ordered to be instituted by the Subordinate Judge of Dehra Dun may be stayed until the decision in this Court of a first appeal. I think myself that it is of importance that the Criminal Law should proceed with due expedition. I should, however, have been prepared to make the order if this first appeal could have been brought on in two to three months. It cannot, however, be so accelerated. It is agreed that it could not be brought on before at least six months, which may very well mean that it would not come into the list until October or November of next year. In these cases where a Subordinate Judge, District Judge or Sessions Judge of experience makes an order that a party or witness shall stand his trial under section 476 of the Indian Penal Code, it is of importance that the case should be dealt with promptly. There is no reason why the decision arrived at by the Magistrate who will ultimately try this case should have any effect upon the Bench who will hear the first appeal, and indeed I go further and say that the decision of the Magistrate in that matter is not relevant evidence to produce and bring before the Bench. The civil appeal should and must be decided simply on the record as it comes up before the Bench from the lower Court, giving due weight, of course, to whatever observations the learned Judge in the Court below may have made as regards the evidence. But the fact that in a criminal proceeding Anrudh Kumar was said to be innocent or said to be guilty of the charge of putting forward a forged Will, is not a matter which in this Court ought to be urged in argument or given weight to by Judges. I am, therefore, unable to accede to this application. Therefore, the stay order granted by Mr. Justice Lindsay on the 24th of October 1921 must be discharged and the case will proceed.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 345—Compromise by leave of Court—Duty of Magistrate—Revision.

It is the duty of a Magistrate, in each case which is compoundable with his leave, to decide whether he will or will not allow a compromise and the responsibility rests entirely with him.

Where the offence is not of a serious nature and a compromise is arrived at at a very early stage, the Magistrate ought to allow the compromise.

In this case, a compromise that had been disallowed by the trying Court was allowed by the High Court in revision.

Petition, under section 439, Criminal Procedure Code, for revision of an order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Kasur, District Lahore, dated the 20th April 1921, affirming that of a Magistrate, Second Class, Kasur, dated the 16th April 1921.

Mr. D. N. Mehra, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—Sewa Singh has been convicted under section 325, Indian Penal Code, for breaking the arm of one Jallu by striking him with a lathi. The cause of the fight is said to have been that Jallu and another man were catching quail in the field of the accused, who resented their conduct, quarrelled with Jallu and struck him with a lathi. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Kasur, has dismissed the appeal and the only question on revision is whether the parties should have been allowed to compromise as they wished to do. Every case of this sort must be decided on its own merits. Here it appears that at a very early stage and before the prosecution evidence was recorded, the parties came to terms and filed an application for permission to compromise. This being so, I do not think it was necessary in the interests of justice to proceed with the case, and more especially as the bad blood between the parties must be perpetuated thereby. Nor do I think that the offence is so serious that punishment is absolutely necessary. The Honorary Magistrate who tried the case did not allow the compromise because the offence was committed in the Manjha where such offences are rife. Even so it is the duty of the Magistrate to decide in each case whether he will or will not allow a compromise and the responsibility rests entirely with him. This appears to me to be a case in which the compromise should have been allowed, more especially as it was made at a very early stage in the case, and if the Magistrate liked to attach any condition as to the payment of a reasonable sum of money to the injured man as compensation before he permitted the compromise to take effect, he would have been fully justified in doing so. Counsel tells me that his client has paid Rs. 50. I consider this sufficient and, therefore, am all the more ready to accept the revision, and allowing the compromise, to set aside the conviction, and this I do.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 110—Jurisdiction—Accused triable where carrying on career of crime—Revision—Findings of fact—High Court, power of.

In giving jurisdiction to a Magistrate to try an accused under section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the question is not of permanent residence of the accused, but of where he practises his career as a thief or a house-breaker or whatever it may be. [p. 438, col. 2.]

If a resident of A. goes to B. and there carries on a career of crime for several months, the B. Magistrate has the power to take action against him under section 110, Criminal Procedure Code. If, on the other hand, a resident of A. carries on a career of crime in A. and then goes temporarily to B. for a few months, the A. Magistrate has a right to proceed against him. [p 438, col. 2.]

A Court of Revision should not usually go behind the facts as found by the Trial Court and the Court of Appeal. Unless on the face of it the decisions are perverse, it is most inadvisable to go behind their findings. [p. 438, col. 2.]

Criminal reference made by the Sessions Judge, Agra, dated the 16th November 1921.

Mr. Iqbal Ahmad, for the Applicant.

JUDGMENT.—The Sessions Judge of Agra has referred to this Court the case of a certain Bhola sweeper, who has been bound over by the Cantonment Magistrate of Agra under section 110, Criminal Procedure Code. He has been asked to furnish two sureties of Rs. 100 each and to execute a bond himself for Rs. 200 to be of good behaviour for one year. The proceedings were perfectly regular. An appeal was filed to the District Magistrate, who dismissed it by a considered order. The Judge suggests that the proceedings were without jurisdiction and that the evidence did not justify the passing of the order. Bhola has been represented in this Court by competent Counsel who has argued on the merits. I take first the question of jurisdiction. It is proved that Bhola is a resident of Boileauganj, which is in the Agra Cantonments. The Cantonment Magistrate had clearly jurisdiction under section 110, Criminal Procedure Code, if Bhola was a person within the local limits of his jurisdiction. The section has left the matter of permanent residence open. It is not a question of permanent residence, but of where the man practises his career as a thief or a house-breaker or whatever it may be. If a resident of Allahabad went to Benares and there carried on a career of crime for several months, the Benares Magistrate would have the power to take action against him under section 110, Criminal Procedure Code If, on the other hand, a resident of Allahabad was carrying on a career of crime in Allahabad and then went temporarily to Benares for a few months, the Allahabad Magistrate would have a right to proceed against him. The case here is that the man is usually a resident of Boileauganj. The evidence shows that he was by habit a thief in Boileauganj. Some months before the proceedings commenced, he worked as a Chaukidar of a Munsif a short distance away in civil lines. He is no longer Chaukidar to that Munsif. His service with him was not uninterrupted. He continued to return to Boileauganj and the evidence shows that he is carrying on a career of crime in Boileauganj. The Cantonment Magistrate certainly had jurisdiction. With regard to the merits, a Court of Revision should not usually go behind the facts as found by the Trial Court and the Court of Appeal. Unless on the face of it the decisions are perverse, it is most inadvisable to go behind their findings. The Cantonment Magistrate tried the case very carefully. He has written a reasoned and well thought out judgment. He had before him a mass of evidence on behalf of the prosecution, which showed that in Boileauganj there is a gang of thieves the members of which are sweepers; that Bhola is closely connected with certain men who have already been convicted, and that he s a member of the gang. The evidence of repute is very strong. Against this was the evidence of perfectly respectable witnesses who state that they know nothing against him, but these witnesses were not in a position to know very much about the matter one way or another. Instances could be multiplied in which men working as domestic servants for respectable gentlemen who have no reason to suspect them in any way, have carried on, unknown to their employers, a career of crime. That is a phenomenon common to all countries. The learned Sessions Judge appears to think that if a man works as a Chaukidar, it would be impossible for him to get away at night to commit crime without the knowledge of his master. So far from being impossible, in most cases it is comparatively easy for him to do so. Apart from any other method of escaping observation, it is very simple, if a man be a criminal, for him to provide a substitute for the hours when he is otherwise engaged. That there was a mass of evidence which proved that Bhola was a habitual thief. That evidence was believed by the Cantonment Magistrate and by the District Magistrate who heard the appeal. There is no reason for me to disbelieve it. On the face of it it reads true. The evidence for the defence was of no value. The learned Sessions Judge notes that it appears that the Cantonment Magistrate rejected the security tendered by Bhola without taking any evidence. I have been unable to discover anything on the record to show that the Cantonment Magistrate rejected any security without making proper enquiries. I refuse to interfere and direct that the record be returned.

Case reported by the Sessions Judge Karnal, with his No. 817 of 13th May 1921.

FACTS.—Gobind Ram and Shamsher, petitioners, were tried and convicted by a Magistrate of the Second Class under section 7 of the Stage Carriages Act, XVI of 1861, and sentenced to pay fines.

GROUNDS.—Empress v. Moti Ram (1) is authority that a Magistrate of the Second Class has not jurisdiction to try an offence under section 89 of the said Act. The reasoning would also cover section 7.

I, therefore, recommend that the conviction be set aside and the fines, if paid, be refunded.

Mr. J. M. Mackay, for the Respondent.

ORDER.—I see no sufficient cause to differ from the ruling cited, Empress v. Moti Ram (1), which lays down that a Second Class Magistrate has no jurisdiction in such cases.

In the matter of SENEHI SINGH AND OTHERS—CONVICTS.

Prevention of Cruelty to Animals Act (XI of 1890), applicability of, to Saran District.

Prevention of Cruelty to Animals Act, XI of 1890, has no application to the local area of Saran in the Province of Bihar and Orissa and, therefore, an accused committing an offence under that Act within that area is not punishable.

Criminal reference by the Sessions Judge, Saran, dated 8th January 1921.

FACTS of the case are as follows:—Senehi Singh, Tarachand Singh and Ram Sajiwan Singh were charged in a petition of complaint with having maimed the complainant's buffalo by wounding it with a spear and striking it with lathis. The Magistrate found the accused guilty under section 3 (c) of the Cruelty to Animals Act (XI of 1890) and sentenced them to pay a fine of Rs. 15 or in default to undergo rigorous imprisonment for two weeks.

The Sessions Judge of Saran recommended to the High Court under section 438, Criminal Procedure Code, that this order of conviction should be set aside on the ground that Act XI of 1890 had no application to Saran.

ORDER.—The reference is accepted and, as recommended by the learned Sessions Judge, the conviction and sentences passed on the accused are set aside inasmuch as Act XI of 1890, under which the accused have been convicted, does not apply to the Local Area where the offence is said to have been committed.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 526—Transfer of criminal case—Unreasonable ground.

Where certain strikers against a Navigation Company are placed on their trial under sections 506 and 143, Penal Code, before the District Magistrate, it is no ground for the transfer of the case that the District Magistrate has been taking precautions against the intimidation and illegal picketing indulged in by the strikers likely to result in a breach of the peace. [p. 441, col. 2.]

Rules.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. N. C. Sen (with him M. A. K. Fuzlul Huq and Babu Probodh Chandra Kar), for the Petitioners.—This Rule was issued in connection with a petition for transfer of the petitioners' cases from the District of Bakarganj. The petitioners have a reasonable apprehension that they will not get justice if their cases are tried by the Sadar Sub-Divisional Magistrate or by any Judicial Officer, for that matter, of that District. In these cases the complainant has obviously been put up by the River Steam Navigation Company, and the Local Officers of the District have practically identified themselves with the interests of the Steamer Company at Barisal. The District Magistrate deputed a number of his officers, high and low, to see that the non-co-operation movement did not interfere with the normal work of the Steamer Company. Under the circumstances it is quite apparent that the petitioners are reasonably apprehensive that they will not have justice at Barisal. The learned Magistrate says he had merely taken measures to prevent breaches of the peace and disorder and also illegal picketing. Of course some of the volunteers of the non-co operation movement were persuading people not to board the steamers and help the Steamer Company. Your Lordships might transfer the case to a near station as Khulna or Dacca to remove fear from the minds of your Lordships' petitioners.

Mr. Orr, for the Crown.—The learned Magistrate's explanation is quite clear and disposes of the objections raised by my learned friend. The District Magistrate as the head of the executive of the district has got to see, under all circumstances, that peace and order are maintained. He had nothing absolutely to do with the Steamer Company. He was within his rights to do what he did, and it is a sheer travesty of language to say that he identified himself with the interests of the Steamer Company.

Babu Amulya Charan Sen, for the Opposite Party, supported Mr. Orr.

Mr. N. C. Sen briefly replied.

JUDGMENT.

No. 83.

From the petition on which the present Rule was issued it appears that in the first week of last June there began a strike among the employees of the River Steam Navigation Company, at Barisal. In this strike, which it is understood still continues, the three petitioners joined.

On the complaint of, or on information received from, one Rehan Ali whose services as a Serang had been secured by the Company, proceedings have now been taken against the petitioners and others on charges under sections 506 and 143 of the Indian Penal Code. The case against them is pending in the Court of the Sadar Sub-Divisional Magistrate at Barisal: and the prayer of the petitioners is that their trial should take place in some district other than Bakarganj. They allege in substance that the District Magistrate and the Local Officers generally have identified themselves with the interests of the Steamer Company and are doing their best "to harass the strikers in any and every way." They, therefore, apprehend that they will not obtain a fair trial before any Local Magistrate.

The District Magistrate has submitted an explanation in which he deals seriatim with the allegations of the petitioners. He states that he has found it necessary to take precautions against the intimidation and illegal picketing indulged in by persons known as "non-co-operators" and against the disorder and breaches of the peace likely to result from these practices. Of these precautionary measures he has placed some of the Local Deputy Magistrates in charge. The further allegations made against himself and the Local Officers are unfounded.

We accept the District Magistrate's explanation without reserve, and we need only say further that the performance by him and by the Local Officers under his instructions of their public duties affords no ground for any apprehension on the part of the petitioners that, whether before the Magistrate in whose Court the case against them now is or before any other Magistrate in the District, they will not obtain an impartial trial. We do not believe that they in fact entertain any such apprehension, and if they do, such apprehension is unfounded and unreasonable. We, therefore, discharge this Rule.

No. 84.

The judgment just delivered in Case No. 83 governs also this Rule, which is also discharged.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898) . 192 —Transfer of case—Magistrate, power of, to re-transfer.

Where a Magistrate transfers a case for trial under the provisions of section 192, Criminal Procedure Code, he has no power to transfer it again.

Criminal reference made by the District Magistrate, Etawah, dated the 23rd August 1921.

Mr. S. N. Mukerji, for the Applicant.

Mr. S. C. Mukerji, for the Opposite Parties.

FACTS appear from the following Referring Order of the District Magistrate:—

"In this case the complainant came to the Court with the allegation that the accused had broken a hole in the wall of his master's house and had taken away from it some property belonging to him, and further that when he remonstrated with the accused, they rushed into the house and offered to beat him. The complaint was stated to be under sections 455, 379 and 352 of the Indian Penal Code. The complainant was examined on oath and stated all this. The learned Magistrate who had the case before him recorded the following order:— "From the complainant's statement it is clear that there was no lurking house trespass but an open house trespass to commit an assault. The offence, if any, was under sections 380 and 452 of the Indian Penal Code, which is triable by a Second Class Magistrate. I, therefore, transfer the case to the Honorary Magistrate for trial and disposal." The Honorary Magistrate referred to was the Raja of Partapnagar, M. L. C., a Magistrate of the Second Class. As the Raja was away at Lucknow attending the Legislative Council's sittings, the file came back before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, who then transferred it to Babu Balkrishna Dass, a Third Class Magistrate. This Magistrate tried and acquitted the accused.

The complainant has now come to me under section 435 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and points out that the trial of an offence either under section 455 as alleged by him in the complaint, or even under section 452 as held by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, is one which can only have been held by a Second Class or higher Magistrate. He, therefore, says that the proceedings of the Third Class Magistrate are entirely null and void under section 430 (p) of the Code of Criminal Procedure. For the accused it is stated that the trial as held did not disclose an offence under either of these sections. But this argument is of no avail. In order to determine whether a Magistrate has jurisdiction to try a certain case or not, we have only to see whether the facts, as revealed on the examination of the complainant, constitute an offence within his jurisdiction or not. Were it to be held that the jurisdiction of the Magistrate would be determined after going through the whole trial and seeing what offence was constituted, there would be no bar to a Third Class Magistrate even trying a murder case, so long as after the trial he held that the offence did not amount to murder but to, say, simple assault. This is the reductio ad absurdum of the argument of the accused. In the present case both the facts as given in the complaint and the preliminary order of the Sub Divisional Magistrate make it clear that the offence to be tried was at least one under section 452 of the Indian Penal Code, and was, therefore, beyond the jurisdiction of the Third Class Magistrate It is inexplicable how the Sub-Divisional Magistrate sent it to him and how he persisted with the trial in spite of the facts having been brought to his notice. The whole of the trial is under section 430 (p) null and void. I, therefore, order that the records be submitted with this report to the Hon'ble High Court with the recommendation that re-trial may be ordered, if the Hon'ble High Court so wishes. I may add, however, that on the merits of the case the decision seems to be a correct one.

JUDGMENT.—The view taken by the District Magistrate must prevail. When the case came on before Mr. Zamiruddin, he transferred it for trial under the provisions of section 192 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Having done that, he had no power to transfer it again and in no circumstances are the proceedings before the Third Class Magistrate effective. It was legally transferred to the Raja of Partapnagar, Magistrate of the Second Class. All subsequent proceedings are null and void. The case must go back to the Raja of Partapnagar for trial. I order accordingly.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 297—Jury trial—Verdict—Misdirection—Inadmissible evidence, omission to refer to, effect of.

The verdict of a Jury cannot be set aside unless there is a clear misdirection in the charge by the Judge to the Jury. [p 443, col 1.]

Where a statement inadmissible in evidence is brought to the notice of a Jury, an omission by the Judge to refer to it in the charge to a Jury is a misdirection in law and vitiates the trial. [p. 444, col. 1.]

Criminal appeal against an order of the Sessions Judge, Muzafferpore.

Messrs. S. P. Verma and H. P. Sinha, for the Appellants.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The appellants were committed to the Court of Sessions on charges under sections 147, 148 and 379, Indian Penal Code. The accused No. 1, Sumeshwar Jha, was further charged under section 304 and the remaining accused were charged under section 304 read with section 149, Indian Penal Code.

As to the charge under section 379, the accused have been convicted by the learned Sessions Judge on acceptance of the unanimous verdict of the Jury. The verdict of the Jury cannot be set aside unless there is a clear misdirection in the charge by the Judge to the Jury. It is pointed out by the learned Counsel on behalf of the accused that the verdict of the Jury is vitiated on account of the statement of the accused, which was in the nature of an admission of his having removed potatoes from the field in question, having been brought on the record. During the examination of the Sub-Inspector P. W. No. 10, upon questions put to him by the Public Prosecutor he stated that Sumeshwar Jha had stated to him that "he had gone there (the field)' for sharing alua which was given by one Hiraman Dusadh of village Sultanpore on behalf of complainant, he having only batai interest in it; only 6 passeries of alua were dug by Hiraman, of which he took three passeries as his own share leaving the other half with Hiraman Dusadh for sharing with him, and they had exchange of blows in which Ramrush sustained injuries." The Sub-Inspector then stated that "it further appeared from him (Sumeshwar Jha) that he was alone and that he took away 3 passeries of alua on his own head." The learned Sessions Judge held that the latter portion of the statement, where Sumeshwar told the Sub-Inspector that he had taken 3 passeries of alua on his own head, was inadmissible in evidence, as it may in certain circumstances amount to a confession. He remarked in the margin of the evidence of the Sub-Inspector that this portion will not be placed before the Jury in summing up. In the charge to the Jury there is no reference made to this statement. If the evidence in the shape of the statement of the accused referred to above was inadmissible, in view of its having been brought to light in the presence of the Jury and formally recorded as part of the evidence, it cannot with any confidence be said that the Jury were not at all influenced by the statement. It is immaterial that the Judge did not refer to it in his charge to the Jury and it does not at all affect the question. The Jury had heard the statement and they knew that the accused Sumeshwar had admitted before the Police the fact of his having removed the three passeries of alua. It is possible, therefore, that their judgment in the case was affected by the statement in question. The removal of the alua is, we think, the most important ingredient in the charge of theft which the Jury was trying at the moment; and the statement of the accused Sumeshwar Jha before the Police tending to show that he had admitted the removal of alua, must have weighed with the Jury to a great extent in arriving at the conclusion as to whether the accused had or had not committed the offence in question. The mischief had been already done in bringing the statement to the notice of the Jury and, therefore, it could not be undone by the omission by the Judge to refer to it in the actual charge to the Jury.

It will also be observed that the charge to the Jury does not clearly bring out the delay that took place in the lodging of the first information, but it only asked the question as to whether the delay would go against the prosecution case.

If the statement referred to above was inadmissible as held by the learned Judge, then his omission to refer to it in the charge was a misdirection in law and vitiated the trial and the accused, therefore, must be re-tried. If, on the other hand, the statement in question was admissible as is contended for by the learned Assistant Governmet Advocate, then the trial is not vitiated. But this statement must have been prominently brought out by the learned Judge in his charge to the Jury. Therefore whether the statement is admissible or not, the result is the same and the verdict of the Jury is vitiated. The question then is whether the accused should be put upon their trial again on the charge under section 379.

In view of the findings we have arrived at on the general circumstances of the present case and in view of the circumstances of the case and also in view of the fact that Sumeshwar has already been punished under section 325, we do not think that a re-trial at this stage is at all desirable in the interests of justice.

The result is that we set aside the convictions and sentences of all the accused under all the sections except that of Sumeshwar Jha under section 325, Indian Penal Code. The sentence passed upon him under that section has been already reduced to a period of three years' rigorous imprisonment.

Petition, under section 107 of the Government of India Act, 1915, praying the High Court to revise the order, dated 18th May 1921, of the Court of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Dharmapuri, in Miscellaneous Case No. 6 of 1921.

Mr. P. K. Ohari, for the Petitioners.—The lower Court's order is illegal, as there is no finding as to which party was in possession at the date of the preliminary order. The finding that the counter-petitioner was in possession five days previously does not comply with section 145 (4), Criminal Procedure Code. Thumbalabed Hampanna v. Parisi Gangamma (1), Mundlamuny Ellamandu v. Gadipudi Chinnah Venkiah (2).

Mr. S. Srinivasa Iyer, for the Respondent.—In the cases relied on by petitioners' Counsel, there was a long interval of time between the date when the party was found to be in possession and the date of the preliminary order.

Here there was also a decree of the Civil Court in my client's favour, Gordon Sims v. Johurry Lal (3), Madholal Bithul Goywal v. Jug Lal Singh (4).

The Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

ORDER.—The preliminary order was passed on the 21st March 1921. The Magistrate finds that the counter-petitioner was in possession on the 15th March 1921, but there is no finding as to who was in possession on the 21st March. It is argued that the order passed is illegal owing to there being no finding as to who was in possession on the 21st March 1921, as required by section 145, clause (4) of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Thumbalabed Hampanna v. Parisi Gangamma (1) and Mundlamuny Ellamandu v. Gadipudi Chinnah Venkiah (2) support the contention. There is no doubt that the order is irregular, as it does not find that the counter petitioner was in possession on the 21st March.

The question remaining is whether, on the facts of the present case, I should set aside the order. The interval between the date when the Magistrate finds counter-petitioner to be in possession and the date of the preliminary order is only five days, and there is nothing in the record to show that there is any likelihood of possession having changed in the interval. In the case in Mundlamuny Ellamandu v. Gadipudi Chinnah Venkiah (2) the interval was more than a year and in the case reported as Thumbalabed Hampanna v. Parisi Gangamma (1) it was nearly a month. It also appears that the counter petitioner has a decree of Court in his favour and having regard to the rulings in Gordon Sims v. Johurry Lal (3) and Madholal Bithal Goyawal v. Jug Lal Singh (4), it would be the duty of the Magistrate to maintain the possession of the party who has a decree of a competent Court and who was put in possession in execution.

When a party is found to be in possession a few days before the preliminary order and when there is nothing on the record to suggest that there was any change of possession, I do not think the Court is bound in revision to vacate the order.

I dismiss the petition.

Juvenile offender—Sentence.

In inflicting a sentence a Magistrate must consider in the first instance the offence committed. A Magistrate is not entitled to sentence a juvenile offender to a longer term of imprisonment than he would be otherwise entitled to merely because it would be to his benefit to be detained in a Juvenile Prison.

Appeal from conviction and sentence passed by the Fourth Presidency Magistrate, Bombay.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD C. J.—If the second accused is sentenced to be detained under rigorous imprisonment in the Juvenile Prison at Dharwar for two years, as he is a lad of sixteen, and the first accused, who is an adult, although he admittedly has three previous convictions, is sentenced to one year's rigorous imprisonment, it follows that the Magistrate gave the second accused a longer sentence because he considered that it would be for his benefit to remain within the walls of the Dharwar Institution for two years. It is nowhere laid down that a Magistrate has such powers to increase the sentence of imprisonment on this ground. However desirable it might be for the Magistrates to have such powers, the sentence is one under the Indian Penal Code, but as the rules with regard to the detention of a juvenile in the Dharwar Jail provide that no one should be admitted into the jail unless he has been sentenced to a period of one year or upwards, the result is, that in the case of juveniles Magistrates increase the sentences in many cases up to one year so as to enable them to be sent to the Dharwar Jail instead of to the ordinary jail, and to that extent we might overlook the fact that they increase the sentences on juveniles beyond what the sentences would amount to in the case of adults, in order that juveniles should get the advantage of being detained in the Juvenile Prison. We doubt very much whether they are entitled to go beyond that and to sentence a juvenile to a period, as in this case, of two years, merely because they think that such detention would be to the benefit of the accused. We have to consider in the first instance the offence committed. Clearly, since the first accused, who was not only an adult but also had been previously convicted, only got one year's rigorous imprisonment, the second accused would, in the ordinary course, have been sentenced to less than one year. For these reasons we think the sentence must be reduced to one year.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 263—Convictions, reason for, necessity of—Revision—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 447—Trespass—Offence, ingredient of—Intention.

Under section 263 a Magistrate must give the reasons, though briefly, for justifying the conviction. Convictions are revisable by the Superior Court, and the Superior Court will always insist on having materials before it so that it may be in a position to say whether the conviction is proper or not.

The main ingredient of an offence under section 447, Indian Penal Code, is that the trespass must be with the intention of annoying or insulting some one or must be with the intention of committing an offence and where there is nothing in the order of a Magistrate convicting an accused for criminal trespass which would show the intention of the accused, the conviction cannot be sustained.

Criminal reference by the Sessions Judge, Cuttack.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is a reference by the Sessions Judge of Cuttack, recommending that the conviction of the accused under section 448 of the Indian Penal Code by the Deputy Magistrate be quashed. The trial was summary, but it appears to me that the order of the Deputy Magistrate does not comply with the provisions of section 263 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. It must be remembered that the summary procedure provided for in Chapter XXII of the Code of Criminal Procedure is not to become too summary. Under section 263 the Magistrate must give the reasons, though briefly, for justifying the conviction. The only reason that I find in the order that he has passed is that the accused is guilty under section 447. If that were sufficient, then no other reasons justifying the conviction could possibly be given. Convictions are revisable by a Superior Court, and the Superior Court will always insist on having materials before it so that it may be in a position to say whether the conviction is proper or not. The main ingredient of section 447 is that the trespass must be with the intention of annoying or insulting some one, or must be with the intention of committing an offence. There is nothing in the order of the Magistrate which would show the intention of the accused. That not having been found, the conviction for criminal trespass is an impossibility. At the highest it can be said that the accused trespassed into the room of the Sub-Inspector, but that would be criminal trespass if the criminal intention of the accused is clearly found. Therefore, I agree with the learned Sessions Judge that the conviction of the accused is not maintainable and, therefore, direct that the fine, if paid by himself, must be refunded, the conviction being quashed.

Criminal reference made by the District Magistrate, Meerut, dated the 2nd July 1921.

JUDGMENT.—This is a reference under section 438 of the Criminal Procedure Code by the District Magistrate of Meerut. It appears that while Barant was a notified area, Juggan accused applied to the Notified Area Committee for permission to build a wall On the 9th of January 1921 the Committee by a resolution ordered that a space of $9\frac{1}{2}$ feet should be left between the wall and an adjoining drain. On objections having been raised by the accused and a report having been called for, the Committee by a second resolution, dated the 16th February 1921, modified its previous order and reduced the width of the open space from $9\frac{1}{2}$ feet to 5 feet. The accused, however, built the wall without leaving the required space of 5 feet. The Notified Area Committee accordingly on the 26th of March 1921 issued a notice to him to remove the wall within fifteen days. After this, the notified area was converted into a Municipality with effect from the 1st of April 1921. The accused replied to the notice, saying that the land was his own and intimated that he would institute a suit in a Civil Court. On the 15th of April 1921 the Tahsildar, purporting to act under section 333 of the JUGSAN v. EMPEROR.

Municipalities Act, II of 1916, as the officer in charge, Municipal work, sanctioned prosecution under section 185 of the Municipalities Act.

The learned Magistrate did not accept the Committee's case that a public right of way existed over the land which was to be left open; on the other hand, he found that the land did not belong to the Committee at all, but was the private property of the accused and, in fact, considered that the order of the Committee was not justifiable. He, however, convicted the accused as, in his opinion, he had contravened the order of the Committee, and sentenced him to pay a fine of Rs. 20.

On the 15th of April 1921 the Notified Area Committee had ceased to exist and the Municipality had come into existence, but there is nothing on the record to show that this was so.

In my opinion this reference must be accepted and the conviction set aside. There is, in fact, no evidence to show that the Tahsildar had been empowered under section 333 of Act II of 1916 to exercise the powers of the Board. But assuming that he had such powers, in my opinion, he would have no authority under section 333 of Act II of 1916 to sanction a prosecution. Under that section his powers are limited and he can exercise them only (1) for the purpose of making preliminary arrangements for the holding of first elections or otherwise, and (2) generally of expediting the assumption by the Board of its duties when established. It is quite clear that sanctioning a prosecution is neither for the purpose of making preliminary arrangements for the holding of first elections, nor is it any step towards expediting the assumption by the Board of its duties when established. Section 333 of the Municipalities Act, II of 1916, therefore, gave him no such power. Under section 314 of that Act it is provided that "no Court shall take cognizance of any of the offences punishable under this Act or under any rule or bye-law, except on the complaint of, or upon information received from, the Board or some person authorized by the Board by general or special order in this behalf." It, therefore, follows that without a proper sanction the conviction was illegal. The irregularity in the sanction, as required by section 314 of the Act, cannot be cured by the provisions of section 537 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, which are not applicable to the sanction under this section.

There are other legal objections also, for instance, (1) that the order of the Committee requiring the appellant to leave a space of 5 feet was in itself illegal, inasmuch as the previous resolution had been passed within six months of it and the Committee could not modify its own resolution within that period, and (2) that there is nothing on the record to show that there are any regulations under which the Board is empowered to prohibit the erection of a wall on private land and not abutting on a public street. In the view which I have taken as to the want of a proper sanction it is unnecessary for me to go into these other questions.

I accordingly accept this reference, set aside the conviction and sentence and direct that the fine, if paid, be refunded.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiffs-respondents for the redemption of a mortgage effected by Pragdat in favour of the defendant-appellant on the 15th February 1910. Pragdat died, leaving a widow, Musammat Piari, who subsequently mortgaged the property with the plaintiffs on the 22nd July 1918.

The mortgage, which is the subject of redemption, provided that the mortgagor shall re-pay the mortgage money with interest at Rs. 1-4-0 per cent. per mensem within three years, that the interest aforesaid shall be payable yearly, and that if for two consecutive years the interest due remained unpaid, the mortgagee would be entitled to obtain possession of the mortgaged property in lieu of the principal sum secured by the mortgage subject to the condition that in the event of his getting possession of the mortgaged property the liability of the mortgagor for interest on the principal money shall cease and the profits of the mortgaged property shall go to the mortgagee. There was a further condition that whatever interest might remain due till such delivery of possession shall carry compound interest at the same rate till the redemption of the mortgage.

The mortgagor did not deliver possession over the mortgaged property. The mortgagees consequently claim interest on the entire principal money from the date of the mortgage. The Courts below have disallowed interest on the principal money from the date when the mortgagees became entitled to claim possession. They have relied in support of their decision on Sundar Dei v. Baldeo Bakhsh Singh (1). That was a case in which the mortgagor had agreed to pay the mortgage money within three years with interest at 2 per cent. per mensem payable half yearly and in case of default of payment of the said money within that period to put the mortgagee in possession of the mortgaged property for four years, and had further agreed that if he failed to pay the mortgage money within the extended period the mortgagee shall be entitled to claim foreclosure. The mortgagor, however, did not deliver possession and was, therefore, held liable for interest for seven years but for no interest thereafter because the remedy provided by the deed of mortgage after the expiry of seven years was that the mortgagee should obtain foreclosure. For the period during which the mortgagor had agreed to give possession but had not done so the mortgagee was allowed full interest. That decision does not, therefore, help the plaintiffs. On the other hand, as pointed out by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Lingam Krishna Bhupati Deva v. Maharaja Manya Sultan Bahadur of Vizianagram (2) where the mortgagor undertakes to deliver possession after a certain period but does not do so, the mortgagee is entitled to enforce the initial terms of his mortgage independently of the position which would have been created had such possession been delivered. If the mortgage was originally a simple mortgage, liable to be converted into a usufructuary mortgage at the expiry of a certain period, the mortgagee can fall back on the simple mortgage and enforce it in case the mortgagor does not fulfil the obligation, he had undertaken. In Lalta Prasad v. Hori Lal (3) it was held in somewhat similar circumstances that if the mortgagor failed to deliver possession the mortgage would continue to retain its character of a simple mortgage and a decree for sale would, therefore, be permissible.

The learned Counsel for the plaintiffs-respondents has also referred to the decision in Mata Din v. Sheikh Ahmad Ali (4) but in that case the mortgage was from its very inception a usufructuary mortgage.

The appeal is, therefore, allowed and the defendant-appellant will be awarded Rs. 1,324-1-6 on account of interest from the 15th February 1912 up to the date of the institution of the appeal in this Court with further interest thereon at the stipulated rate from the date of the appeal till six months from this date. In case of non-payment of the amount awarded by the Courts below and of the further amount awarded by this Court the mortgagee shall be entitled to a decree for sale for the entire money due on the said mortgage on the date above mentioned with future interest thereon at 6 per cent. per annum from the said date till payment. The decree shall be framed in terms of Order XXXIV, rule 7 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The defendant-appellant shall get his costs here and hitherto from the plaintiffs respondents.

the time for furnishing security and depositing costs may be extended for a further period of one month. Six weeks allowed by Order XLV, rule 7, of the Code of Civil Procedure expired on the 3rd May 1921. The application was heard on the 9th following. In her affidavit sworn on the 2nd May 1921 the applicant says that she owns a piece of land measuring about 64 acres and worth over Rs. 30,000, and that she has been trying to raise a loan on the security of this land to enable her to make the necessary deposit in this case, but that she has not so far succeeded. She further says that owing to old age and illness she has not been able to go about and raise a loan for the past three weeks. The applicant was present when the application was heard, and although she was said to be 64 years of age, she appeared to be very well preserved, and we came to the conclusion that, in spite of her old age, she was strong enough to go about. As to her alleged illness there is only her affidavit and nothing else to support her. The statement that she has been trying to raise a loan on the security of the land is also uncorroborated, and she does not show in her affidavit what steps she had taken to raise the necessary money, so that the Court may be in a position to determine whether she has been diligent in due time to be prepared to lodge the deposit within the limited period. So that there is only her bare word that she has been trying to raise a loan. One would have thought that it would be easy to raise Rs. 5,000 on the security of a piece of land worth Rs. 30,000 and that if by any chance any difficulty arose, the applicant ought to have explained the nature of that difficulty to the Court. The applicant does not refer to any arrangement she had made within the prescribed period for obtaining a loan which fell through from some cause for which she was not to blame.

In Burjore v. Bhagana (1) their Lordships of the Privy Council laid down that the Court has the power to extend the time, but that it ought not to do so without some cogent reason.

In Venkatachalam v. Mahalakshmamma (2) reported at the foot of the report of the case of Rangasayi v. Mahalakshmamma (3), it was held that the "cogent reasons referred by the Privy Council [in Burjore's case (1)] must be such as would lead the Court to believe that the party was diligent in due time to be prepared to lodge the deposit within the limited period; and that he was prevented from making his deposit, not owing to absence or dffiealty of getting funds but owing to some circumstance accidental or otherwise over which he had no control, or owing to mistake which the Court would consider not unreasonable or caused by negligence." In Rangasayi's case (3) Muttusami Ayyar, J., held that it is necessary for the petitioner to show that he was diligent in due time to be prepared to lodge the deposit within the limited period. The facts alleged were that the petitioner had letters in his possession from certain persons who promised to lend, if he waited till the jaggery season in the local market, but there was nothing to show that he had applied to them for loans in sufficient time before the expiration of the prescribed period. The learned Judge held that a mere promise by the petitioner's friends to lend on the arrival of a particular season is not a sufficient cause for extending the prescribed time. Best, J., observed that on the facts he would have held that sufficiently cogent reasons had been shown for the extension of time, but felt bound by the ruling in Venkatachalam's case (2). He further said: "It seems to me that absence of funds or difficulty in raising the same, if true, is a very cogent reason for granting an application such as the present one for extending the time and accepting the money now brought into Court."

In Bagga v. Salihon (4) Johnstone and Chevis, JJ., held that the interpretation of the Privy Council case by the Madras High Court in Venkatachalam's case (2) is a mere gloss upon the ruling of the Privy Council, and that it is not a necessary consequence of that ruling, and they declined to accept it. The facts of the Punjab case are that three days before the date on which the prescribed time expired an application was made for an extension on the ground of poverty. At the expiration of the period more than three fourths of the amount had been deposited in Court. The learned Judges held that the applicant had shown due diligence by having paid in three-fourth of the mony required, and they held that sufficient reasons had been shown for extending the prescribed period.

In Roy Jotindra Nath Chowdhury v. Rai Prasanna Kumar Banerjee Bahadur (5) the ground for the extension the petitioner asked was contained in the following paragraph of the petition:—"That your petitioners expected that the said amount of Rs. 2,460 would come to them from their Zamindari, but instead of that amount the sum of Rs. 2,000 reached them during the Christmas vacation." Maclean, C J, who delivered the judgment of the Court said: "There is no plea of poverty. The applicants knew on the 12th November that they must find the money within six weeks: there is no case of mistake or surprise: and the paragraph I have cited is very vague as to dates. The petitioners are Zamindars, and there is nothing to indicate that if they had given proper directions, they could not have obtained the whole amount from the Zamindari. In these circumstances can we say that any cogent reason has been shown? I think not."

In the present case the applicant has not, as we said before, given any facts from which we may draw the inference that she had been diligently endeavouring to get the necessary amount by raising a loan on the security of her land. She has not spoken as to any arrangement, which she had made, falling through for some reason for which she was not to blame. The prescribed period of six weeks is ordinarily sufficient for raising funds on credit. Therefore, an applicant who asks for an extension of the time is bound to show that during that period he exercised due diligence in endeavouring to obtain the necessary money. The mere statement that she has been trying to raise a loan and has failed, as the applicant in the present case has said, will not be considered to be a sufficient or, to use the word used by the Privy Council, "cogent" reason.

We will, therefore, reject the application with costs, Advocate's fee two gold mohurs.

Cause of action, definition of—Marriage, dissolution of, suit for—Divorce, declaration of, suit for—Conjugal rights, restitution of suit for—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 23, Sch. I, Art. 120.

A cause of action includes every fact which it would be necessary to prove, if traversed, in order to enable a plaintiff to sustain his action. [p. 454, col. 1.]

In 1912 defendant, husband, filed a suit against plaintiff, his wife, for restitution of conjugal rights. The plaintiff pleaded divorce and cruelty The suit was dismissed on the ground of cruelty but no specific finding was given on the question of divorce. The plaintiff thereafter sued for a declaration that the relationship of wife and husband between the parties ceased to exist in consequence of a divorce effected by the defendant and in the alternative for a decree for dissolution of the marriage and the cause of action was stated to have arisen on the date on which the Appellate Court delivered its judgment in the previous suit. The defendant denied the alleged divorce and cruelty and pleaded limitation:

Held, that the opinions expressed in the judgments of the previous litigation as to the affirmation of cruelty and the negation of divorce could not form a cause of action for the present suit of the plaintiff and that any admission of evidence of acts of cruelty and of divorce other than the acts and the divorce mentioned in the plaint would amount to a departure from the cause of action on which the suit was brought and that the plaintiff could not prove them. [p. 454, cols. 1 & 2.]

As a suit for dissolution of marriage or for a declaration as to an accomplished divorce is essentially different in cause of action from a suit for restitution of conjugal rights, the former suit does not fall within the purview of section 23 but is governed solely by Article 120, Schedule I, of the Limitation Act. [p. 454, col. 2.]

Appeal from a decree of the Officiating Subordinate Judge, Sitapur, dated 12th January 1920.

Messrs. A. P. Sen and Muhammad Wasim, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Shahenshah Husain Rizwi and Wasi Hasan, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Sitapur dated the 12th January 1920. The suit, out of which this appeal arises, was brought by the plaintiff-respondent, Musammat Fakhrjahan Begam, against the defendant appellant, Muhammad Hamidullah Khan, for a declaration that the relationship of wife and husband between the parties ceased to exist in consequence of a divorce effected by the defendant and in the alternative for a decree for dissolution of the marriage. The lower Court rejected the declaratory relief asked for but has granted a decree for dissolution of marriage. The appeal questions the validity of such a decree.

The plaintiff's case is that she was married to the defendant in November 1914 at Akbarpur, in the District of Sitapur, that subsequent to the marriage differences arose between the parties, that eventually the behaviour of the defendant towards the plaintiff was of positively cruel character and that the defendant divorced the plaintiff on account of her refusal to go back to his house. The acts of the defendant, which amounted to cruelty, and the alleged divorce, all happened admittedly prior to December 1912.

It appears that on the 19th December 1912 the defendant filed a suit against the plaintiff for restitution of conjugal rights. The lady in her defence to the suit set up the plea of divorce and the cruel treatment to which she had been subjected by the defendant as grounds which would justify the Court in refusing the relief of the restitution of conjugal rights, which the husband had asked for in that suit. That suit was dismissed by the Subordinate Judge of Sitapur on the 10th March 1914 and his judgment was upheld by the District Judge of the same place on the 19th November 1914. The findings of the Court of first instance were that the alleged divorce was not proved and that the cruelty was proved. The Court of Appeal did not give any specific finding on the question of divorce but agreed with the Court of first instance on the question of cruelty. The cause of action for the present suit is stated in the plaint to have arisen on the 19th November 1914, the date on which the Court of Appeal in the previous suit delivered its judgment. The defendant in his defence to the present suit denied the alleged divorce. He also denied cruelty and pleaded that the suit so far as it sought the dissolution of marriage on the ground of cruelty was not maintainable and that both the reliefs of the declaration as regards the divorce and the dissolution of marriage on the basis of cruelty were barred by limitation.

The lower Court has held that the plaintiff is estopped from re-opening the issue of divorce by reason of the judgment in the previous litigation and that the defendant is also estopped by the same judgment from re-opening the question of the factum of cruelty. It has rejected the plea of limitation and granted a decree for dissolution of marriage on the ground of cruelty as already indicated. The appeal raises two substantial questions of law:—(1) The whole suit is barred by limitation and (2) the suit for dissolution of marriage on the ground of cruelty is not maintainable. The respondent has challenged the validity of the finding of res judicata on the question of divorce under the provisions of Order XXI, rule 33, of the Code of Civil Procedure. I propose to dispose of the appeal as well as the objections on the simple ground of limitation.

The Indian Limitation Act (IX of 1908) does not exempt suits for dissolution of marriage brought by persons, who are not governed by the Indian Divorce Act, section 29, sub-section (2), of which says that "nothing in this Act shall apply to suits under the Indian Divorce Act." It is agreed that the present suit does not fall within the purview of the Indian Divorce Act. It follows, therefore, that section 3 of the Indian Limitation Act applies to it. The lower Court is of opinion that the suit is governed by Article 120 of the First Schedule of the Indian Limitation Act. This finding has been accepted by both the parties before me and in my judgment it is correct. As regards the point of time from which the period of limitation began to run the lower Court observes as follows:—"Following these authorities I think the decision of the First Court and the Appellate Court in the last litigation gives rise to a fresh cause of action. The suit is, therefore, within limitation." I am unable to agree with this opinion of the learned Subordinate Judge. The cases quoted by him in support of his view have no bearing whatsoever on the question under consideration. It is true that so long as the right to the subject-matter of a suit for a declaration subsists every invasion of that right gives rise to a fresh cause of action. In the present case the grounds for the relief of dissolution of marriage as well as the grounds for the declaration as to the divorce admittedly came into existence prior to the institution of the suit of 1912. It is not alleged in the plaint or anywhere else in the proceedings that since the date of the institution of that suit, that is to say, 19th December 1912, the defendant was guilty of any fresh act of cruelty or that there has been a fresh pronouncement of divorce. In paragraph 12 of the plaint it is distinctly alleged that since the divorce there existed no connection whatsoever between the parties. It is also clear from a perusal of the plaint that every act of cruelty attributed by the plaintiff to the defendant was committed before the institution of that suit. This view of the pleadings was accepted by the learned Pleader for the respondent. As nothing happened after the institution of the suit of 1912 it follows that the plaintiff's right to sue for the reliefs she has prayed to be granted to her in this suit arose on the cause of action furnished by the events which happened prior to the institution of the previous suit. Article 120 of the First Schedule of the Indian Limitation Act (IX of 1908) provides a period of six years for a suit for which no period of limitation is provided elsewhere in that Schedule and according to column 3 of that Article time begins to run "when the right to sue accrues." Generally speaking "the right to sue accrues" when the cause of action arises. The precise definition of cause of action was laid down by the Court of Appeal in England in the case of Read v. Brown (1). Lord Esher, M. R., said:—"Every fact which it would be necessary for the plaintiff to prove, if traversed, in order to support his right to the judgment of the Court," is the plaintiff's cause of action. Fry, L. J., in the same case, said:—"Everything which, if not proved, gives the defendant an immediate right to judgment, must be part of the cause of action," and Lopes, L. J., added, "I agree with the definition given by the Master of the Rolls of a cause of action, and that it includes every fact which it would be necessary to prove, if traversed, in order to enable a plaintiff to sustain his action." It is perfectly clear to my mind that the plaintiff in this case in order to support her right to the judgment of the Court must establish the specific acts of cruelty and the specific divorce, which she alleged in her plaint of the present suit. Any admission of evidence of acts of cruelty and of divorce other than the acts and the divorce mentioned in the plaint will amount to a clear departure from the cause of action on which is brought the present suit. Nor as a matter of fact has any act other than the acts prior to the litigation of 1912 or any divorce alleged to have happened prior to that litigation been pleaded in this case. The opinions expressed in the judgments of the previous litigation as to the affirmation of cruelty and the negation of divorce cannot, in my opinion, form a cause of action for the present suit of the plaintiff.

As a last resort it was argued by the learned Pleader for the plaintiff-respondent that his client's case was governed by section 23 of the Indian Limitation Act. He relied on the decision of the Allahabad High Court in the case of Binda v. Kaunsilia (2). But that case does not, in my opinion, furnish any analogy, which may be taken as a guide for the decision of the question with which I am concerned in this appeal. The case before the Allahabad High Court was one of restitution of conjugal rights by the husband against his wife. The learned Judges in that case held that Articles 34 and 35 of the Second Schedule of the Limitation Act, 1877, did not apply to a suit brought by a Hindu or Muhammadan husband for the recovery of wife and restitution of conjugal rights but that Article 120 applied subject to the provisions of section 23 of the Act. But a suit for dissolution of marriage or for a declaration as to an accomplished divorce is essentially different in cause of action from a suit for restitution of conjugal rights. The cause of action for a suit for restitution of conjugal rights is founded on a breach of the contract of marriage and as observed in the Allahabad case the breach continues so long as the person of the wife is withheld from the husband and he is denied the undoubted legal right of her conjugal society.

(1) (1889) 22 Q. B. D. 128; 58 L. J. Q. B. 120; 60 L. T. 260; 37 W. R. 131.

(2) 13 A. 126; A. W. N. (1891) 18; 7 Ind. Dec. (N. s.) 78.

This view of the cause of action in a suit for restitution of conjugal rights places it within the purview of section 23 of the Limitation Act. The same cannot be predicated of a cause of action for a suit for dissolution of marriage or for a declaration that a divorce had taken place between the parties. It may be observed that Articles 34 and 35 of the old Limitation Act have disappeared from the new Act (IX of 1908). The present suit both in respect of the relief of declaration as to the divorce and in that of dissolution of marriage is clearly barred by Article 120 of the First Schedule of the Indian Limitation Act (IX of 1908).

The appeal is, therefore, allowed and the plaintiff-respondent's suit dismissed with costs in both Courts.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Jullundur, dated the 15th July 1919, reversing that of the Munsif, First Class, Jullundur, dated the 7th of November 1918.

Lala Fakir Chand, for the Appellants.

Lala Jagan Nath for Mr. Badri Das, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the reversioners of the husband of Musammat Khushali respondent sue for a declaration that a mortgage effected by her shall not affect their reversionary rights. Musammat Khushali's husband, Ralla Ram, made a Will leaving his property to his widow and after her death to one Musammat Parwati a relation, whom he had brought up. Musammat Parwati is not his daughter as stated by the District Judge but his brother's granddaughter. She is dead and the property is with Musammat Khushali, and the only question for decision was whether under the Will Musammat Khushali had inherited an absolute right in the property. The lower Appellate Court relying on Ram Chand v. Dewan Chand (1) and Surajmani v. Rabi Nath Ojha (2) has considered that the Will conferred an absolute title and has dismissed the suit. Against this decision a second appeal has been preferred.

In the Will it is stated that "after my death Musammat Khushali will be the owner (malik) of the property and after her death Musammat Parwati will be the owner (malik) of the property." Counsel for the appellants urges that in interpreting a Will of this kind the ordinary notions and wishes of Hindus with respect to the devolution of property must be taken into consideration. "Ordinarily their ideas are repugnant to giving a female power of alienation over immoveable propety, especially if it is ancestral nor is it a necessary result from the use of the term malik in respect of a Hindu female to whom a bequest is made that she should be considered the absolute owner of the property so bequeathed to her" Rallia Ram v. Musammat Ved Kaur (3). This decision was considered obsolete in Gurmukh Singh v. Makhan Singh (4), but Counsel for the appellants urges that the learned Judges in that case did not take into consideration another Privy Council ruling which had then been published, viz., Radha Prasad Mullick v. Ranee Mani Dassee (5). He urges that in this judgment their Lordships of the Privy Council had modified their views expressed in Surajmani v. Rabi Nath Ojha (2). He also relies upon a recent judgment of the Patna High Court Sasiman v. Sibnarain (6). I am unable to agree with Counsel's contentions. I do not consider that Radha Prasad Mullick v. Ranee Mani Dassee (5) in any way modified the views expressed in Surajmani v. Rabi Nath Ojha (2). It merely proceeded on its own facts and held that a testator bequeathing his property to daughters and daughters' sons did not contemplate thereby the inheritance of his daughters' daughters. In this judgment it is true there is a reference to Moulvie Mohamed Shamsool Hooda v. Shewukram (7) which was followed in Rallia Ram v. Musammat Ved Kaur (3), but these remarks had really little reference to the matter in dispute and their Lordships in no way showed that they differed from the decision printed in Surajmani v. Rabi Nath Ojha (2). The other judgment relied upon by Counsel, viz., Sasiman v. Sibnarain (6), proceeds on its own particular facts and is of little assistance to the appellants in this case.

On the other hand, Gurmukh Singh v. Makhan Singh (4) following a Privy Council ruling is a clear authority that a deed in favour of a Hindu female has to be interpreted in the same way as any other deed. This judgment obviously represents good law and is in accordance with common sense, for if the ideas of a Hindu are naturally repugnant to giving an absolute title to females, there is nothing easier for him than to limit the title of the female. Moreover, Surajmani v. Rabi Nath Ojha (2) followed in that case has been affirmed in a later Privy Council judgment Katch Chand v. Rup Chand (8). There are many other judgments following the same view; see for instance Sulochana Debi v. Jagattarini Debi (9), Chidambaranatha Goundan v. Sellappa Reddi (10) and Naulakhi Kunwar v. Jai Kishen Singh (11). There is, therefore, no ground whatever for dissenting from the exposition of the law given in Gurmukh Singh v. Makhan Singh (4).

Counsel for the appellants also argued that the law laid down in Gurmukh Singh v. Makhan Singh (4) did not apply to this case as Musammat Khushali herself did not consider that she had an absolute title to the property. In 1915 she issued a notice to her reversioners saying that she wanted Rs. 600 and asked them to advance this money on the security of her property. They, however, refused. This offer to the reversioners who will naturally inherit the property unless Musammat Khushali alienates by sale, Will or otherwise was eminently a proper one and in no way proves any admission on her part that she had a limited title.

Finally I may state that without the assistance of previous authorities the only possible interpretation of the Will would be that the testator intended to give an absolute estate to his widow and to Musammat Parwati. The word malik is used three times in the Will and the testator begins by saying: "I am now the malik" and proceeds to bequeath the property to Musammat Khushali as malik and to Musammat Parvati as a malik. There could be no justification whatever for interpreting one word malik in different ways.

For the foregoing reasons I agree with the decision of the lower Appellate Court and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Will, construction of—Widows, property bequeathed to—Transfer, absolute power of, given subject to certain conditions—Conditions, whether enforceable.

The material portions of a Will were as follows:—"After me, the executant, no other person except the widows are heirs to the above mentioned share. Therefore, in accord with the opinion of each of the three widows, I do hereby bequeath my eight-anna share together with all the rights, recorded as well as unrecorded, without exemption of any thing or right, with power of alienation of every sort, to the above named ladies, in equal shares, and declare that after my death those ladies will remain in use and occupation of the said share like myself. In the event of the death of any of the three widows her share will devolve on the two surviving widows in equal shares, or if only one of them survives she will be in full possession and enjoyment of the entire property. But, the condition is that if any of these widows misbehaves herself, thereby bringing disgrace on the family, she will forfeit her share, which will go to the remaining widow or widows; and that if any of these widows intends to transfer the property she can do it only with the consent and approval of all or the remaining widows. Thus, whatever rights I possess will be exercised after my death by the widows subject to the conditions imposed as above."

Held, that under the terms of the above Will none of the ladies was entitled to transfer her share or any portion of it without obtaining the consent of her co-widows. p. 459, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Rae Bareli, dated 12th March 1920, confirming that of the Subordinate Judge, Partabgarh, dated 17th December 1919.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit for possession of a 2 annas 8 pies share in village Malhwa Milkia. An 8 annas share in this village was owned by one Har Sahai Ram who by a Will executed in 1894 left the property to the three widows of his son Payag Dat. One of the widows, Musammat Sukhrani, by a deed of gift dated the 28th of May 1912 transferred her 2-annas 8 pies share in the property to her daughter's sons. The plaintiffs, Musammat Makhana and Bhagwani, are the other widows of Payag Dat. Their claim was that in accordance with the terms of the Will Musammat Sukhrani could not transfer any portion of the property without their consents that as their consent had not been obtained the deed of gift was invalid and on the death of Musammat Sukhrani in accordance with the terms of the Will they (the plaintiffs) were entitled to possession of Musammat Sukhrani's share.

The Court of first instance held that the Will conferrred an absolute estate on each of the widows to the extent of 2 annas 8 pies share, that any conditions in the Will restricting the right of alienation were void under sections 10 and 11 of the Transfer of Property Act and that Musammat Sukhrani was competent under the Will to transfer her share without the consent of her co-widows. On these findings the plaintiffs' suit was dismissed. The lower Appellate Court has concurred in these findings and the plaintiffs have come to this Court in second appeal.

It is quite clear from the definition of the phrase "transfer of property" in section 5 of the Transfer of Property Act that sections 10 and 11 of that Act have no application and that they apply only to transfers inter vivos. The sole question

"bad man mukir siwai bewagan ke waris hissa mazkur-us sadar ke koi nahin hai, is liye.....apne hissa ath anna mai tamami hukuk dakhili wa khariji bila istasnai kisi shai wa haq ke ba ikhtiyar intikal har kism, ba ittifaq rai her seh bewagan, musammatan mazkurain ko ba hissa masawi wasiyat karta hun wa likhs deta hun ki bad wafat man mukir musammatan Sukhrani, wa Makhani, wa Bhagmani uper ath anna hissa wasiyat karda ke misl mere kabiz wa mutsarrif rahain - Agar minjumla har seh bewagan ke koi bewa faut ho jawe to hissa uska do bewagan minjumla ba hissa masawi lewain ya agar ek bhi zinda rahe to wohi malik wa kabiz hissa ki hogi magar shart yeh hai ki minjumlai bewagan mazkur us sadar ke koi bewa aisa fail kare ki jis se nang wo nek khandan ke ho to woh apne hissa se mahrum ho jawegi, jo bewa ya bewagan maujud rahegi usko ikhtiyar hoga ki usko hissa se mahrum kardewen — our agar kisi kism se intikal hissa ka karna manzur ho to ba ittifaq rai har seh bewagan ya jo us waqt maujud hon karen—bahar hal jo jo ikhtiyarat mujh ko hasil hain wohi ikhtiyar bad man mukir bewagan ko hasb sharayat mazkure bala hasil rahenge."

It is true that the testator declares that the three ladies shall have the same powers as he himself possesses over the property, but he adds the words "hasb sharayat mazkure bala," and the document must be read as a whole. The "conditions mentioned above" are that if any one of the widows wishes to transfer any portion of the property she shall do so only with the consent of the other widows, that on the death of any one of the widows her share will go to the surviving ladies and that if any of the ladies does any act which would bring disgrace on the family the others shall be entitled to deprive her of her share. There is nothing whatever illegal in any of these conditions and they are conditions limiting the absolute right of the ladies to make a disposition of the property. The Will in effect gives the ladies a limited estate which on the death of two of the widows will ripen into an absolute estate for the last surviving widow. It is urged that the condition requiring the consent of all the widows to any transfer applies only in case it is proposed to transfer the whole 8-annas share and not to a proposed transfer by any one of the widows of her 2-annas 8 pies share. I cannot read this meaning into the terms of the Will. In the first instance such a condition would be altogether superfluous as none of the widows could in any case transfer more than her own share of the property; and the testator clearly provides that each of the widows shall be entitled to a one-third share with power of transfer subject to the consent of her co-widows, "ba ikhtiyar intikal har kism ba ittifaq rai har seh bewagan musammatan mazkurain ko ba hissa masawi wasiyat karta hun"

Furthermore, immediately before the phrase "agar kisi kism se intikal hissa ka karna manzur ho" we have the provision that if any of the widows does anything which would bring disgrace on the family the other widows will have the right to deprive her of her share (unko ikhtiyar hoga ki us ko hissa se mahrum kar dewain). It seems, therefore beyond question that in the phrase "agar kisi kism se intikal hissa ka karna manzur ho" the word "hissa" refers not to the whole 8 annas share left by the testator but to the share left to each of the widows I am clearly of opinion that under the terms of the Will none of the ladies was entitled to transfer her share or any portion of it without obtaining the consent of her co widows. It is further urged that each of the widows has in fact been making transfers without obtaining such consent, and it is urged that the plaintiffs are, therefore, estopped from questioning the right of Musammat Sukhrani to execute the deed of gift without their consent. I may note that this point was not taken in either of the lower Courts and in any case it is altogether without force. The mere fact that the plaintiffs have mortgaged portions of their shares without obtaining the express consent of Musammat Sukhrani cannot act as an estoppel against them from questioning the right of Musammat Sukhrani to execute a deed of gift in respect of her share without their consent.

As it is admitted that the consent of the appellants to the execution of the deed of gift by Musammat Sukhrani was not obtained and as I have held that Musammat Sukhrani under the terms of the Will had no power to execute the deed of gift without the consent of the appellants it follows that the gift is invalid and that the plaintiffs-appellants are entitled to succeed.

The appeal is, therefore, allowed, the decree of the lower Appellate Court is set aside and the plaintiffs-appellants' suit is decreed with costs in all Courts.

JUDGMENT.

ROBINSON, C. J.—These are appeals in two suits which were tried together and may be disposed of by one judgment. Maung Po Saw was married first to Ma Net and there is one surviving son of this marriage Maung Tin, the appellant before us. Ma Net died in Waso 1272 B. E, corresponding to July 1910. In Tabodwe 1272 B. E. some seven months later Po Sa married Ma Mai Myint. After his mother's death Maung Tin went to live with his maternal grand-father, U San Ko, and has lived with him ever since. Po Saw was in debt to Chetties and a suit was filed against him by his Chetty creditor on the 28th July 1911. This was decreed on the 2nd September 1911. A second suit was filed against him on the 22nd November 1911. Po Saw confessed judgment, and a decree was passed on the 17th January 1912. On the 14th July 1911 Po Saw executed three deeds of partition in favour of his son Maung Tin who was then a minor, his maternal grandfather, U San Ko, acting on his behalf. At the same time Po Saw transferred certain other properties to his second wife as Kanwin or a gift or settlement made on marriage. These documents were executed some five months after the marriage, and it is alleged that they were benami transactions entered into merely to protect the property from being attached by Po Saw's creditors. In execution of their decrees the Chetties attached the lands that had been transferred to Maung Tin and on his behalf U San Ko applied to remove the attachment setting up the deeds of partition which were filed in Court. The Chetties on learning of these deeds withdrew the attachment and then proceeded to settle with Po Saw compounding their claims by accepting a fairly large reduction of the amount due. If, therefore, the transfers were made for the purpose

before us is what is the correct interpretation of the Will left by Har Sahai Ram. The material portions of the Will are as follows:—

"bad man mukir siwai bewagan ke waris hissa mazkur-us sadar ke koi nahin hai, is liye.....apne hissa ath anna mai tamami hukuk dakhili wa khariji bila istasnai kisi shai wa haq ke ba ikhtiyar intikal har kism, ba ittifaq rai her seh bewagan, musammatan mazkurain ko ba hissa masawi wasiyat karta hun wa likhs deta hun ki bad wafat man mukir musammatan Sukhrani, wa Makhani, wa Bhagmani uper ath anna hissa wasiyat karda ke misl mere kabiz wa mutsarrif rahain - Agar minjumla har seh bewagan ke koi bewa faut ho jawe to hissa uska do bewagan minjumla ba hissa masawi lewain ya agar ek bhi zinda rahe to wohi malik wa kabiz hissa ki hogi magar shart yeh hai ki minjumlai bewagan mazkur us sadar ke koi bewa aisa fail kare ki jis se nang wo nek khandan ke ho to woh apne hissa se mahrum ho jawegi, jo bewa ya bewagan maujud rahegi usko ikhtiyar hoga ki usko hissa se mahrum kardewen —our agar kisi kism se intikal hissa ka karna manzur ho to ba ittifaq rai har seh bewagan ya jo us waqt maujud hon karen—bahar hal jo jo ikhtiyarat mujh ko hasil hain wohi ikhtiyar bad man mukir bewagan ko hasb sharayat mazkure bila hasil rahenge."

It is true that the testator declares that the three ladies shall have the same powers as he himself possesses over the property, but he adds the words "hasb sharayat mazkure bila," and the document must be read as a whole. The "conditions mentioned above" are that if any one of the widows wishes to transfer any portion of the property she shall do so only with the consent of the other widows, that on the death of any one of the widows her share will go to the surviving ladies and that if any of the ladies does any act which would bring disgrace on the family the others shall be entitled to deprive her of her share. There is nothing whatever illegal in any of these conditions and they are conditions limiting the absolute right of the ladies to make a disposition of the property. The Will in effect gives the ladies a limited estate which on the death of two of the widows will ripen into an absolute estate for the last surviving widow. It is urged that the condition requiring the consent of all the widows to any transfer applies only in case it is proposed to transfer the whole 8-annas share and not to a proposed transfer by any one of the widows of her 2-annas 8 pies share. I cannot read this meaning into the terms of the Will. In the first instance such a condition would be altogether superfluous as none of the widows could in any case transfer more than her own share of the property; and the testator clearly provides that each of the widows shall be entitled to a one-third share with power of transfer subject to the consent of her co-widows, "ba ikhtiyar intikal har kism ba ittifaq rai har seh bewagan musammatan mazkurain ko ba hissa masawi wasiyat karta hun"

Furthermore, immediately before the phrase "agar kisi kism se intikal hissa ka karna manzur ho" we have the provision that if any of the widows does anything which would bring disgrace on the family the other widows will have the right to deprive her of her share (unko ikhtiyar hoga ki us ko hissa se mahrum kar dewain). It seems, therefore beyond question that in the phrase "agar kisi kism se intikal hissa ka karna manzur ho" the word "hissa" refers not to the whole 8 annas share left by the testator but to the share left to each of the widows I am clearly of opinion that under the terms of the Will none of the ladies was entitled to transfer her share or any portion of it without obtaining the consent of her co widows. As it is admitted that the consent of the appellants to the execution of the deed of gift by Musammat Sukhrani was not obtained and as I have held that Musammat

Sukhrani under the terms of the Will had no power to execute the deed of gift without the consent of the appellants it follows that the gift is invalid and that the plaintiffs-appellants are entitled to succeed.

The appeal is, therefore, allowed, the decree of the lower Appellate Court is set aside and the plaintiffs-appellants' suit is decreed with costs in all Courts.

JUDGMENT.

ROBINSON, C. J.—These are appeals in two suits which were tried together and may be disposed of by one judgment. Maung Po Saw was married first to Ma Net and there is one surviving son of this marriage Maung Tin, the appellant before us. Ma Net died in Waso 1272 B. E, corresponding to July 1910. In Tabodwe 1272 B. E. some seven months later Po Sa married Ma Mai Myint. After his mother's death Maung Tin went to live with his maternal grand-father, U San Ko, and has lived with him ever since. Po Saw was in debt to Chetties and a suit was filed against him by his Chetty creditor on the 28th July 1911. This was decreed on the 2nd September 1911. A second suit was filed against him on the 22nd November 1911. Po Saw confessed judgment, and a decree was passed on the 17th January 1912. On the 14th July 1911 Po Saw executed three deeds of partition in favour of his son Maung Tin who was then a minor, his maternal grandfather, U San Ko, acting on his behalf. At the same time Po Saw transferred certain other properties to his second wife as Kanwin or a gift or settlement made on marriage. These documents were executed some five months after the marriage, and it is alleged that they were benami transactions entered into merely to protect the property from being attached by Po Saw's creditors. In execution of their decrees the Chetties attached the lands that had been transferred to Maung Tin and on his behalf U San Ko applied to remove the attachment setting up the deeds of partition which were filed in Court. The Chetties on learning of these deeds withdrew the attachment and then proceeded to settle with Po Saw compounding their claims by accepting a fairly large reduction of the amount due. If, therefore, the transfers were made for the purpose of defeating the creditors, the fraud was completely effected. The second wife also applied for removal of the attachment so far as the property transferred to her was concerned. The properties have all along remained in the possession of Po Saw and he has drawn and enjoyed the rents and profits thereof. It is said that it was agreed that he should continue to manage the properties on behalf of his son and retain the profits which were to be handed over to the son on his attaining his majority. It is not denied that the net profits amount to Rs. 900 a year and that in the six years preceding the suits with which we are now concerned only Rs. 220 had been paid by Po Saw towards the maintenance of his son. Po Saw then brought a suit to have it declared that the three deeds of partition were merely benami transactions executed with intent to defeat his creditors and were void. U San Ko in reply on behalf of Maung Tin filed a suit for a declaration that the deeds of partition were valid, and for possession of the lands, and for the mesne profits that had accrued during the time they were in the possession of Po Saw. The learned District Judge has granted Po Saw a decree declaring the deeds to be void, and he has dismissed Maung Tin's suit. Appeals are filed from both these decrees. As regards Po Saw's suit it is not denied now that it must fail and should have been dismissed, and if it is established that these documents were executed merely to defraud the creditors, which is undoubtedly the case. As regards Maung Tin's suit it is urged that it is not open to Po Saw to plead in defence his own fraud and secondly that the minor was no party to that fraud and was ignorant of it and, therefore, that his suit is not tainted and should have been decreed.

It is perfectly clear that at the time these transfers were made Po Saw was heavily in debt. Whether he was absolutely insolvent or not cannot be decided on the material on the record but it is clear that his debts were considerable and that the deeds of partition related to a very large share of his landed properties. They conveyed some 105 acres out of 135. This is a much larger amount than the share of inheritance to which Maung Tin would have been entitled. In addition to the lands granted to his son other properties were granted to his wife, and it seems perfectly clear from other facts which cannot be disputed that the transactions were not bona fide ones. The Chetties were pressing for payment and it was from Po Saw that the suggestion first came that he should give his son at once his share in the joint estate of Po Saw and his mother. There is the fact that for many years the property has remained in Po Saw's possession and that he has kept the rents and profits thereof. Had this been a bona fide transaction, it is impossible to believe that U San Ko would not have taken possession of the lands and managed them himself on behalf of the minor as whose guardian he was acting. It is certainly most unusual to make a settlement on the wife several months after marriage and it is quite unnecessary to do so having regard to the relationship which exists between a Burmese husband and wife with reference to their property. The deeds themselves remained in Po Saw's possession and were apparently only handed over to San Ko in order that he might effect a removal of the attachments. After the attachments had been withdrawn Po Saw obtained the documents from the Court to the knowledge of San Ko who has allowed him to remain in possession of them ever since. Taking, therefore, all the facts into consideration it appears that Po Saw was heavily in debt, that his creditors were pressing him and that he made these most unusual transfers very shortly before the suits were filed, and we think there can be no doubt that these transfers were made merely to defraud the creditors by keeping these properties, if possible, out of their reach. The transfers, therefore, were benami and fraudulent, and it is settled law that a plaintiff cannot be allowed to come into Court and plead his own fraud in support of the claim that he makes. Po Saw's suit, therefore, should obviously have been dismissed and we accept the appeal as to his suit and set aside the decision of the Court below with costs in both Courts.

As regards Maung Tin's suit the question arises whether Po Saw can be allowed to plead that the transactions were benami in order to defeat the apparent title created by the deeds. In Babaji v. Krishna (1) judgments of their Lordships of the Privy Council were cited and held to show that it is open to the defendant to defend his possession by showing that the real transaction between him and the plaintiff was to defraud, whether a third party or the defendant's creditors generally. In Mandaya v. Ma E (2) it was held that where the deed of sale was found to have been executed benami and with a view to defraud the creditors of the vendors it was not open to the purchaser to recover possession, and in that case it did not matter whether the object of the fraudulent transfer was actually effected or not. In the present case as in that case the Court is asked to take the property from the rightful owner and hand it over to the benamidar. That is a different case to one in which the real owner sues for possession which was the position in Petherpermal Chetty v. Muniandy Servai (3) in which their Lordships of the Privy Council held that the vendor could recover the property and to hold otherwise would have been to allow a pretended purchaser to retain the property from the rightful owner when no fraud had been effected in consequence of the fraudulent intention. Again in Ireo Nath Koer v. Kazi Mahomed Shazid (4) it was held that the reason of the rule laid down is that the Court will refuse relief to a party who sets up his own fraud and leave matters where they are. The same principle does not hold good where the defendant in possession seeks to show the real nature of a transaction to defend his possession. In Sidlingappa v. Hirasa (5) it was held to be the sounder policy to accept the rule which will be most apt to deter persons from frauds of this kind. In that case it was said that "the defendant is not resisting the enforcement of a contract, but is invoking the aid of the Court to enable him to escape on the strength of his own fraud from the consequences of the sale-deeds which ostensibly create a valid title in the plaintiff. In these circumstances, it is, we think, by not displacing the plaintiffs' apparent title that we give true effect to the maxim, 'let the estate lie where it falls.'" There was another ground in that case, viz, that it was the plaintiff's father and not the plaintiff who had joined the defendant in the fraud which may have influenced the Court though it was not decided or made an actual ground for the decision. In that case also it must be noted that the plaintiff alleged that he was in legal possession of the lands. This case was distinguished in Maniram v. Ganesh (6) where it was held that the fact that a creditor of the defendant has actually been defeated by the sale does not debar the defendant from pleading that the conveyance was benami to defeat the creditors. The maxim in pari delicto potior est conditio defendentis et possidentis was held to apply. It was further held that there was no reason why the Court should assist the transferee to perpetuate a new fraud by giving him the property. Sidlingappa's case (5) was further considered in the case of Girdharilal v. Manikamma (7). In this case the defendant's creditor had not been defrauded, and it was held that there was no reason why the Court should punish the defendant's intention to defraud by passing a decree against him. Mr. Justice Beamar, who was a party to Sidlingappa's case (5), explained it by pointing out that there the contract was not executory but executed and that the real basis of the decision in Sidlingappa's case (5) was that no fraud was actually effectuated.

The balance of authority is in favour of that which is, in my opinion, the true rule for decision in these cases, namely, that where the contesting parties have been parties to the fraud the maxim "Let the estate lie where it falls" should be enforced. In other words that the Courts will not assist a party to a fraud to obtain possession of the subject of the fraud and they will not allow him to succeed by preventing the other party to the fraud from showing the true nature of the transaction. It is one thing to forbid the pleading of a fraud to obtain an advantage and quite another thing to refuse to allow a party to the fraud to plead the true nature of the transaction. In the one case the Courts would be lending themselves to helping a party to a fraud to obtain the benefit of his fraud, while in the other case it would be preventing a party to the fraud from pleading and thereby permitting a further fraud to be committed. Where the fraud had actually been effectuated the sound rule, in my opinion, is to leave the parties exactly as they are, that is to say, to leave the property in the possession of whichever of the two parties to the fraud it happened to rest with. I would, therefore, hold that even though the fraud had been effectuated where the defendant is still in possession of the property the plaintiff cannot be allowed to plead his fraud, and though the deeds may show a title in him the Court should not lend its assistance to enable him to recover possession, and that to enable the Court to dispose of the matter with justice and equity the defendant ought to be allowed to plead the true nature of the transaction. This is, I consider, the view their Lordships in Petherpermal's case (3) approved.

There remains the plea that Maung Tin was a minor and was not a party to the fraud. In Eugene Pogose v. Delhi & London Banking Co., Ltd. (8) it was laid down that if a guardian whilst acting for a minor is guilty of a fraud or illegality in contracts which he makes on the minor's behalf, the minor can no more enforce such contracts than the guardian could, if he were acting on his own behalf. It may be true that no suit can be brought against the minor for any fraud or misrepresentation of which his guardian has been guilty, but that is a different matter. A minor may not be answerable on the one hand for the fraud of his guardian, but on the other hand he cannot take advantage of it. That decision, as far as I know, had never been differed from, and in my opinion as U San Ko was perfectly aware of the object with which these transfers were made it is not open to Maung Tin by pleading infancy and ignorance to take advantage of the fraud of his guardian. These transfers were clearly benami and the property in these lands still remained in Po Saw and as Po Saw is in possession there is no ground whatever for decreeing Maung Tin's suit.

The appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Hindu Law—Will, construction of—Devise in favour of widow—Estate taken, nature of.

A Hindu testator after reciting in his Will that the whole of his property was self-acquired, proceeded to devise the same in favour of his wife, saying that she would be his waris and qabiz with power to alienate in case of need. He went on to state that his wife would have the same power over the property as he himself had:

Held, that the wife obtained an absolute estate in the property devised. [p. 463, col. 2.]

Appeal from an order of the District Judge, Ludhiana, dated the 9th December 1920, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, First Class, Ludhiana, dated the 14th February 1920.

Lala Fakir Chand, for the Appellant.

Pandit Sheo Narain, R. B., for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The question involved in this appeal relates to the construction of a Will executed by one Babu Ram, a Brahman of Ludhiana City, on the 31st December 1894. After carefully reciting that all his property was self acquired he proceeded to devise the same in favour of his wife, Musammat Kishen Devi, saying she should be the waris and qabiz with power to alienate zarurat par (upon necessity). The Will provided that on the death of Musammat Kishen Devi the testator's daughter, Musammat Lachhmi, was to succeed and then it further proceeded to declare that on the testator's death his wife should have all powers kulli ikhtiarat misl mere hasil honge and that after her death his daughter would have the same power. Finally a provision was made to the effect that in the event of a son being born to him he (the said son) would succeed to all the property. Babu Ram died after having made this Will and was succeeded by Musammat Kishen Devi who, on the 12th of September 1916, sold the house to one Gopi Ram. She died on the 1st October 1918 and on the 23rd October 1918 one Achhru Ram, claiming to be a collateral of Babu Ram, brought the suit out of which this appeal has arisen, alleging that Musammat Kishen Devi had only a limited estate and was not entitled to alienate the house in question, there being no necessity for the alienation. The Trial Court construed the Will propounded as conveying a full estate to Musammat Kishen Devi and dismissed the plaintiff's suit on the ground that he had no locus standi to challenge Kishen Devi's alienation. Achhru Ram thereupon appealed to the District Judge who took a different view of this document and coming to the conclusion that Musammat Kishen Devi only took a limited estate under the Will held that the plaintiff had a locus standi and acting under Order XLI, rule 23 remanded the case for decision on the merits.

Against this order of remand Gopi Ram has preferred this appeal to this Court through Mr. Fakir Chand who has contended that the learned District Judge has misconstrued and misinterpreted the Will in question. He has drawn our attention to Wasir Devi v. Ram Chand (1), Mohan Lal v. Niranjan Das (2), Dhanpat Rai v. Badri Das (3), Ram Chand v. Dewan Chand (4), Ramachandra Rao v. Ramachandra Rao (5) and Suraimani v. Rabi Nath Ojha (6). Mr. Sheo Narain for the respondent has not challenged the correctness of the law as enunciated in those rulings and it is, therefore, unnecessary to discuss them.

The question really narrows itself to the construction to be placed on the Will before us. It seems to us that the intention of the testator was to definitely exclude his collaterals from succeeding to property that he himself had acquired. In order to give effect to this it was necessary to create a full estate and it remains to be seen whether Babu Ram succeeded in giving effect to his intention. Mr. Sheo Narain contended that by using the word waris wa qabiz Babu Ram clearly intended to convey only a limited estate and that subsequent expressions giving Musammat Kishen Devi the same powers as the testator himself possessed were not intended to include the power of alienation at will. We are, however, not impressed by this contention. It seems to us that the expression waris was loosely used and was not intended to be an expression of limitation. When further the testator proceeded to state that Kishen Devi had full powers of alienation (zarurat par) (which we consider means as the need arose) and followed this up by a definite declaration that she was to be the owner in the same position as he himself was, the estate conveyed was a full one.

In this view of the case we are of opinion that the decision of the Trial Court was correct and we accordingly set aside the order of remand passed by the District Judge and restore the order of the Trial Court dismissing the plaintiff's suit. The appeal is accepted with costs.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 118—Sale of goods—Goods not in accordance with order—Return of goods—Reasonable time—Pleadings—Evidence, admission of—Appeal—Burden of proof.

A buyer of goods loses his right to reject the goods delivered to him under the contract, by any act amounting to acceptance. Mere receipt of goods, however, does not amount to acceptance; but it will become an acceptance if the goods are not rejected within a reasonable time. The buyer is entitled to have the goods in his custody for a reasonable time in order that he may examine them and see whether they comply with the warranty. What is reasonable time is purely a question of fact and has to be decided on the circumstances of each case. In this case, where the goods sold were five bales of dhoties it was held that a period of eighteen days was not a reasonable time within the meaning of section 118 of the Contract Act. [p. 467, col. 1.]

Kissendoyal Jitsaria v. Askaran Chowthmull, 34 Ind. Cas. 290; 23 C. L. J. 415, referred to.

In answer to a suit for the return of certain goods and to recover their price the defendant pleaded that the plaintiff was not entitled to return the goods. At the trial the defendant sought to lead evidence to prove that the plaintiff had pledged the goods to a Bank and had thus exercised an act of ownership in respect of them, which precluded him now from returning the goods. The plaintiff objected to the admission of this evidence on the ground that this specific act which the defendant sought to prove had not been pleaded by him :

Held, that the defendant having denied the right of the plaintiff to return the goods he was entitled to prove any fact which would disentitle the plaintiff from returning them and that, therefore, the evidence which the defendant sought to lead was admissible. [p. 466, col. 1.]

It is incumbent on an appellant to show that the judgment appealed from is wrong but where the decision of the lower Court on a point is arbitrary, the Appellate Court is entitled to come to an independent decision on the point. [p. 467, cols. 1 & 2.]

First appeal from a decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, First Class, Delhi, dated the 14th November 1919.

Lala Moti Sagar, R. S., for the Appellants.

Pandit Sheo Narain, R. B, and Babu Sadha Ram, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from a decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Delhi, dated the 14th November 1919, under which the defendants-appellants were directed to pay to the plaintiffs a sum of Rs. 15,322 8 0 and costs, with interest at Rs. 7-8-0 per cent. per annum on the sum of Rs. 15,125 from the date of suit to date of payment and to take back five bales of dhotis. The money had to be paid by the 14th of December 1919, and failing payment the five bales of dhotis were to be attached and sold the defendants-appellants being liable for any deficit that might arise from the sale. It appears that on the 9th of August 1918 a contract was entered into between the plaintiff and the defendants-appellants for the sale to plaintiff of five bales of certain piece-goods known as dhoti joras No. 84 chirwa kanni at Rs. 7-9-0 per pair. On the 4th of September 1918 the defendants-appellants informed the plaintiff of the arrival of the goods. The plaintiff thereupon paid the moneys due under the contract and took delivery of the five bales through an employee. According to the statement of the plaintiff these goods had been placed by him in certain godowns belonging to the Alliance Bank of Simla, Limited, for which he was paying rent. Somewhere about the 24th to 26th of September 1918 the plaintiff induced by certain rumours, he had heard, examined these five bales and found that they were not what he had bought according to his contract. He thereupon sent one Bishen Chand to the defendants-appellants with a message that the goods did not answer to the description of what he had bought and should be taken back, the money being returned. Prabhu Dial, defendant-appellant, is said to have seen the plaintiff and to have admitted that the goods were not in accordance with the contract and that he would take them back within a few days as soon as he had arranged for the re-payment of the money. As he had not done so, however, Bishen Chand was again sent to the defendants-appellants somewhere in the beginning of October to inform them that as the money had not been paid, a suit would have to be filed. As the money had not been paid by the 10th of October 1918, a notice was sent to the defendants-appellants calling upon them to refund the money and take back the goods as they had been rejected. Finally, the plaintiff, on the 6th November 1918, instituted the present suit asking for a decree for Rs 15,322-8 0 with future interest at the rate of annas ten per cent, per mensem.

The defendants-appellants contested the suit. They admitted the contract alleged, but said that they had sold to the plaintiff goods which they themselves had purchased from the firm of Lehri Das-Banarsi Das. They denied liability for the refund of the money, and alleged that the plaintiff had taken delivery and that it was incumbent on him to have examined the goods before he took delivery thereof. It was denied that there was any defect in the goods, and alleged that, even if any such defect existed, the defendants were not responsible. It was also denied that the plaintiff had any right to claim godown rent or to return the goods.

After examining the parties the following issues were settled: —

"1. Whether the five bales of dhotis joras of which plaintiff took delivery were not of the quality or description specified in the contract?

"2. Whether there has been breach of warranty on the part of the defendant firm and plaintiff is entitled to reject the goods and to return of the price paid by him with interest at Rs. 7-8-0 per cent. per annum?"

The plaintiff's evidence was duly recorded on the 13th of March 1919.

The plaintiff went into the witness-box at the end of his case and in the course of his cross examination he was questioned as to whether the bales in suit had been pledged to the Alliance Bank. He denied that the said bales had in any way been hypothecated to the Bank or been used as security for any advances made to him. On the 15th of October 1919, the defendants appellants opened their case and wished to produce, as their first witness, a clerk in the Alliance Bank of Simla with certain papers relating to the accounts of the plaintiff with the said Bank, with the object of showing that the plaintiff had pledged the goods in suit with the Bank, and by so doing had exercised ownership over them and had thus lost his right of rejection. The plaintiff strongly objected to the admissibility of this evidence, urging that the exercise of ownership had never been pleaded and had not been put in issue. This objection was upheld by the Trial Court and evidence on this point was disallowed. An application made by the defendants appellants for leave to amend their pleas was also dismissed on the same date. The examination of the other witnesses was then proceeded with and the case continued to the 16th of October 1919, on which date further evidence was recorded and an application for review made by the defendants appellants for re-consideration of the order of the 15th of October 1919 "refusing to allow the evidence of the Alliance Bank and to permit an amendment of the pleas." This application was rejected on the 20th of October 1919 after which arguments were heard and in due course a decree, as stated above, was passed in the plaintiff's favour.

The Trial Court has held that the goods supplied by the defendants were not of the quality or description specified in the contract. This finding is supported by the evidence and Mr. Moti Sagar stated that he did not challenge its correctness. He, however, contended that the decision on issue No. 2 was wrong. Firstly, he urged that the order refusing to allow the defendants appellants to lead evidence to show that the plaintiff had exercised ownership of the goods was wrong. He maintained that the second issue was wide enough to include this question and that the defendants-appellants' plea that the plaintiff was not entitled to return the bales was sufficient to require the plaintiff to prove all the requirements of section 118 of the Contract Act on which he relied, one of these requirements being that he had not exercised any act of ownership over them. He, however, stated that the defendants-appellants did not ask for a remand on this point, as they were content with the evidence already on the record, which evidence consists of certain accounts printed at page 14—40 of the printed book. It was pointed out that, in order to establish a right to return the goods it was necessary for the plaintiff to prove that he had kept the goods for a time which was reasonably sufficient for examining them and that during this period he had exercised no act of ownership over them. Mr. Sheo Narain contended that it was for the defendants-appellants to definitely plead some act of ownership, and Order VI, rule (6), Civil Procedure Code, was referred to. After hearing Counsel on this point we decided to accept the evidence, as, in our opinion the said evidence should have been admitted. It seems to us that the point in question had been sufficiently raised in the pleas. The plaintiff's right to return the goods had been definitely denied, although the specific act, namely, the making over of the goods to the Bank, had not been specifically pleaded and could not have been, as it was not known to the defendants appellants till about the 12th October 1919. In any event, however, the defendants appellants should have been allowed to lead this evidence in rebuttal of the plaintiff's case.

Mr. Moti Sagar then pointed out that at pages 14 and 15 the accounts showed that on the 5th and 6th September the plaintiff had taken in all a sum of Rs. 15,000 from the Bank and had evidently done so in order to pay for the goods. He further contended that the accounts at page 30 showed that these goods had been made over to the Bank on the 7th of September. He argues that, inasmuch as the plaintiff owed to the Bank a sum of over Rs. 20,000 on the 6th September, the making over of these goods on the 7th September to the Bank must have been by way of pledge. We are, however, unable to accept this contention. When the clerk filed these accounts, he filed along with them a letter from the Bank, printed at page 9, in which it is definitely stated that these goods did not appear to have been deposited with them as security against any advance. We must, therefore, hold that, so far as this incident is concerned, no act of ownership has been established. We would further note that the plaintiff himself unequivocally stated in his cross-examination that the five bales in suit had not been pledged to the Bank.

The next contention was, that the plaintiff had kept the goods for a period which was not reasonable and had, therefore, accepted the five bales and was precluded from returning them, being entitled to damages only. The Court below has held that the retention of goods for a period of 18—21 days was a reasonable time within the meaning of section 118 of the Contract Act.

The first point taken by Mr. Moti Sagar was, that the plaintiff had not intimated his rejection of the goods till he gave a notice in writing on the 11th October 1918. On the other hand, Mr. Sheo Narain contended that notice had been given not later than 26th of September and in support of his contention we were referred to the evidence of Dina Nath, plaintiff himself, at page 49, where he says that, as soon as he found that the goods did not agree with the contract, he sent Bishen Chand to the defendants with a message that they should take back the goods and return his money. He further stated that Bishen Chand had told him that Prabhu Diyal was coming to see him, and that Prabhu Diyal did come and had promised to take back the goods. Bishan Chand (P. W. No. 1) does not support the plaintiff's statement in all its details, but does say that he was sent by the plaintiff to the defendants, and that he went to them, and that Prabhu Diyal told him he would see the plaintiff. Prabhu Dial himself, as D. W. No. 6, denied that Bishen Chand ever came to him as alleged or that he had ever been to see the plaintiff. On the other hand, in the notice dated the 11th of October 1918, (page 3 of the printed book) the plaintiff wrote to the defendants asking them to take back the goods and return his money, saying "you have been already asked several times but you have been making evasive answers." The Trial Court has accepted this evidence as sufficient to prove that the plaintiff had called upon the defendants to take back the goods by the 26th of September, and, after a careful consideration of the evidence, we are unable to say that the Court below is wrong. We must, therefore, take it that the plaintiff informed the defendants-appellants that there had been a breach of warranty and that the goods were to be taken back by the 26th September 1919. There remains the question, however, whether this period of 18—21 days can be regarded as reasonable within the meaning of section 118 of the Contract Act. Mr. Moti Sagar drew our attention to Kissendoyal Jitsaria v. Askaran Ohowthmull (1) in which section 118 of the Contract Act was considered, and it was held that if the goods had not been rejected within the period of 21 days they would not have been rejected within a reasonable time. It was further pointed out that, inasmuch as the goods had been delivered to the defendants, the onus of proving that they had in fact been rejected lay upon the defendants in that case. Mr. Moti Sagar then referred to Remfry's Sale of Goods, page 542, and urged that the goods in this case having been accepted such an acceptance barred a suit for non-delivery. At page 564 the learned author points out that the buyer loses his right to reject the goods by any act amounting to acceptance. It may be conceded at once that if the goods had been accepted in the full sense of that word the right to reject would be barred. But, as the same author points out at page 630, mere receipt of goods is no acceptance, but such receipt will become an acceptance if the goods are not rejected within a reasonable time. With this view we are in accord. It seems to us that a buyer is entitled to have the goods in his custody for a reasonable time in order that he may examine them and see whether they comply with the warranty. The plaintiff, therefore, was entitled to receive the goods and to keep them for such time as can be regarded reasonable for the purpose of satisfying himself that they were the goods he had contracted to buy. For the defendants-appellants it was urged that only such time could be regarded as reasonable as would be necessary for an examination of the goods themselves, and it was urged that as these five bales could have been opened and examined within a period of, say, three hours any retention beyond that period should be regarded as unreasonable. We do not think that such a narrow construction can be placed on this section. What is reasonable time is purely a question of fact and has to be decided on the circumstances of each case. Mr. Sheo Narain contended on the authority of Fakrunissa v. Izarus Sadik (2) that in an appeal it was incumbent upon the appellant to show some reason for holding that the judgment appealed from was bad, and it was urged that as the Trial Court had come to the conclusion after a consideration of all the circumstances that the period taken in this case of 18-21 days was reasonable, this decision should be maintained. Undoubtedly, it is incumbent on an appellant to show that the judgment appealed from is wrong, but an examination of the judgment of the Court below shows that the decision on this point is purely arbitrary. No reasons are given for the conclusion arrived at and there appears to be no evidence on the record to show that such a time would be regarded as reasonable. Both sides led evidence as to what the mercantile usage was, the plaintiff's witnesses fixing the period at 60 days and the defendants-appellants' witnesses fixing it at three days. No question of mercantile usage, however, really arises in this case and none was pleaded by either side. The question is entirely one that relates to section 118 of the Contract Act itself. Now, it would appear that the plaintiff, in taking over these goods, placed them at once into godowns belonging to the Alliance Bank. It certainly would not take very long to open and examine five bales. For a period of 18-21 days the plaintiff took no steps to examine these goods and, indeed, according to his own showing, there is reason to believe, that he would never have examined them, had it not been for the fact that he was advised to do so by persons unnamed. As has been said above, a buyer is entitled to have goods in his custody for a reasonable time for the purpose of examining them. It seems to us, however, that the period taken by the plaintiff in this case cannot be regarded as reasonable: As pointed out by their Lordships in Kissendoyal Jitsaria v. Askaran Ohowthmull (1), no body could except that business people with regard to a contract of this nature could sit still for three weeks after the goods were delivered, taking no action with regard to them and then come forward after that period and say "we reject the goods." It has to be borne in mind that goods such as these vary in price almost from day to day. Mr. Sheo Narain contended that market fluctuations should not be allowed to affect the question of whether time was reasonable or not and our attention was drawn to Jones v. Just (3).

G. S. BHARGAVA v. B. KOBAYASHI.

That authority, however, does not appear to us to be in point.

After a careful consideration of all the circumstances in this case, we are of opinion that the plaintiff retained these goods for a time which cannot be regarded as reasonably sufficient for examining them. He, therefore, lost his right to reject them. We accordingly accept this appeal and dismiss the plaintiff's suit with costs.

Principal and agent—Contract signed by agent—Liability.

In a case where a man is by profession an agent of some particular firm and describes himself as such, he may still be contracting in his personal capacity, but the mere fact that he fails to specify his capacity as an agent in signing a contract does not raise any such presumption when the terms of the contract itself are clearly to the contrary. Mr. Des Raj Sawhney, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff firm which does commission agency business entered into a contract apparently for its principals with a firm doing busine s in Japan. Some goods were delivered, but then a dispute arose as to the party liable for paying demurrage and other charges. According to the plaint, the defendant, who does business in Calcutta, acting on his personal responsibility, entered into an agreement with the plaintiff firm for the settlement of this dispute. As this settlement was not adhered to, the plaintiff sued for damages. The reply of the defendant was, that he was merely acting as an agent on behalf of the Japanese firm and that he was in no way personally responsible. His plea has been upheld by the lower Courts, and the plaintiff has perferred a second appeal which has been argued by Mr. Jai Gopal Sethi.

The facts of the dispute were that after the delivery of some goods, owing to a dispute over the liability for demurrage and other charges, the plaintiff refused to take delivery of further goods. The demurrage and other charges were increasing and a settlement was necessary. On this the plaintiff asked the defendant to come to Delhi to settle the matter and an agreement was drawn up and duly signed. The important part of this agreement has been given by the lower Appellate Court. This agreement begins by reciting that the plaintiff and defendant agree to settle the dispute as to the goods shipped by the Japanese firm. It then proceeds "that we both of us, on behalf of our respective clients, would each bear half of demurrage, etc. The contract was signed by the parties and there was no qualification that the defendant was acting as an agent, Counsel argues that from this agreement itself and from other correspondence between the parties it was clearly understood that the defendant was acting on his personal responsibility. He also urges that, under section 230 (1) of the Contract Act, the defendant was personally liable, and, finally, he referred to certain English authorities that, where an agent in signing any contract does not clearly specify himself as such, he can be sued as the principal. As for the first part of the argument, Counsel took us through some correspondence which passed between the parties, but we need not refer to this in detail as none of it, in our opinion, shows any intention that the defendant was to be personally responsible for the carrying out of the agreement. On the other hand, it is clear from the words of the agreement itself "on behalf of our respective clients" that the defendant was merely acting as an agent and it is also clear that the plaintiff always understood that the defendant was merely an agent of the Japanese firm. In fact, there is a letter written by the plaintiff firm itself to the defendant addressing him as an agent of the Japanese firm. We, therefore, have no hesitation in agreeing with the lower Appellate Court that the agreement was entered into by an agent and that the plaintiff fully understood this to be the case.

As for the second part of the argument that section 230 (1) applies to this case, we may dismiss it with the remark that it is not alleged that the original contract, from which the present dispute arose, was made by an agent for the sale or purchase of goods for a merchant resident abroad. Indeed, it is admitted that it was made by the Japanese firm itself. This provision of law, therefore, clearly has no application.

Finally, Counsel contended that if an agent did not sign as such, he became personally liable for the carrying out of the contract. He referred to authorities quoted in Bowstead on Agency, Sixth Edition, page 388, and to obsolete English authorities in support of his argument. We fully agree that in a case where a man is by profession an agent of some particular firm and describes himself as such, he may still be contracting in his personal capacity, but we do not consider that the mere fact that he fails to specify his capacity as an agent in signing a contract raises any such presumption when the terms of the contract itself are clearly to the contrary. This view of the law is clearly laid down by five Judges in Gadd v. Houghton (1).

There are also numerous other authorities to the same effect.

We did not think it necessary to call upon Counsel for the respondent. We dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Nadia, dated the 3rd of December 1918, modifying that of the Subordinate Judge of that district, dated the 27th of May 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Mohendra Nath Ray (with him Babu Amarendra Nath Bose), for the Appellants.—The defendants are the appellants. The appeal arises out of a suit for enhancement of rent and for additional rent for additional area comprised in a jote. The defence was that the jote was an occupancy holding and that rent was not enhanceable, that there was no accretion and that the present rent was fair and equitable, and that the present suit was not maintainable by the plaintiff inasmuch as he was a co-sharer landlord. The defendants have an 11-annas share of the landlord's interest and the entire interest of the tenant. The plaintiff has a five annas interest as a landlord. Prior to this suit there was an agreement between the plaintiff and the defendant as to the amount of rent payable which was fixed at Rs. 554-10-10. The first Court held that the jote was a tenure the rent being liable to enhancement and that there was some accretion. On appeal the learned Judge modified the first Court's decree. Hence the appeal has been preferred by us against that decision. I submit the present suit is not maintainable by the plaintiff alone. Refers to section 188, Bengal Tenancy Act. Jutindra Nath v. Prasanna Kumar (1), Hirendra Nath Dutt v. Hari Mohan Ghose (2), Rambishen Dutt v. Haripada Mukerjee (3); section 111 of the Transfer of Property Act. My next submission is that the agreement prior to the present suit between the plaintiff and the defendant does not create a new tenancy. There was no fresh kabuliyat. The parties merely agreed to pay the plaintiff's share of the rent separately. That cannot be taken to be the creation of a new tenancy. The plaintiff cannot claim enhanced rent from Pous 1318. Refers to section 154 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The plaintiff is not entitled to get rent for the excess area at a rate higher than the original rate before 1321. The learned Judge having found 203 bighas to be the accreted area is wrong in taking 545 bighas to be the excess area upon which the rent is to be assessed. On these grounds I submit the judgment of the Court of Appeal below is wrong and ought to be set aside.

Babu Bepin Behari Ghose (with him Babu Pyari Mohan Chatterjee), for the Respondents. —I submit the appeal is concluded by findings of fact. As regards the first point the lower Appellate Court found that there was a merger of the 11-annas share of the jote right in the 11-annas proprietary right after the purchase of the jote by the defendants. In the present case there is no person interested in the land other than the plaintiffs and the defendants. They have been found to be tenure holders. As regards the second point, viz, whether there has been created a new tenancy by the agreement, the Courts below have found that, as a matter of fact, a new jama was created by the arrangement. As regards the excess area, the rent is being assessed for the first time. Therefore, there can be no question of enhancement of rent with respect to it. The learned Judge has committed no mistake because he has found that 545 bighas is the total addition to the tenure, the alluvial accretion being 203 bighas. We have also preferred cross-objections to the judgment. They are—that the learned Judge should have assessed 63 bighas of land covered by roads, with rent. He should also have assessed rent for 98 bighas of land. The last ground is that the Courts below did not take into account the rate paid for a big tenure in the vicinity and the settlement papers.

Babu Mohendra Nath Ray replied in brief.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for enhancement of rent, and for additional rent for additional area comprised in a jote.

The jote consisted originally of about 3,320 bighas of land, and was held by one Mr. Poulson at a rent of Rs. [illegible],163-13-5,

(1) 8 Ind. Cas. 842; 38 C. 270; 15 C. W. N. 74; 9 M. L. T. 1; 13 C. L. J. 51; 8 A. L. J. 1; 13 Bom. L. R. 1; 21 M. L. J. 92; (1911) 2 M. W. N. 149; 38 I. A. 1 (P. C.).

(2) 22 Ind. Cas. 966; 18 C. W. N. 860.

(3) 51 Ind. Cas. 389; 29 C. L. J. 427; 23 C. W. N. 689.

The defendants' father was the landlord in respect of the jote a 5-annas share in patni right and 11-annas share as a proprietor. He brought a suit for enhancement of rent of the jote in 1867 which went up to the Privy Council, and the jama was enhanced to Rs. 1,805-10 10 the lands of the jote being found to be 3,340 bighas. During the pendency of that litigation, one Khantokali Dasi obtained a decree against the defendants in respect of the 5-annas patni right of the village in which the lands are situate. She let out the 5-annas share to the plaintiffs in 1876. The defendants then purchased the entire tenancy from the heirs of Mr. Poulson. The defendants thus had a 11-annas share of the landlord's interest and the entire interest of the tenant, and the plaintiff had the landlord's interest in respect of a 5-annas share.

It appears that when the plaintiff was about to sue the defendants for his share of the rent at the enhanced rate, an arrangement was arrived at, and the defendants agreed to pay rent to the plaintiffs at the rate of Rs. 554-10 10.

The plaintiffs have brought the present suit on the allegation that there has been accretion to the jote, and that the defendants are liable to pay reasonable rent, for the excess lands, which might be assessed for 1315-13-8 B. S. They have also claimed enhanced rent for the lands of the original jote and for recovery of such rent for Pous kist of 1318 B. S.

The defence was that the jote was an occupancy holding; that the rent was not enhanceable; that there was no accretion, and the rent was being paid at a fair and equitable rate, and that the plaintiff was a co sharer landlord and, therefore, could not maintain the suit.

The Court of first instance held that the jote was a tenure the rent of which was liable to enhancement; that there was some accretion for which the defendants were liable to pay rent at the rate of Rs. 1-1-0 per bigha. On appeal, the learned Judge held that the plaintiff was entitled to enhance the rent, and fix the enhanced rate at 13½ annas per bigha; that 203 bighas 18 chittaks was the accretion to the jote, and in the result modified the decree of the Court of first instance. The defendants have appealed to this Court, and the plaintiffs have preferred cross-objections.

The first question for consideration is, whether the plaintiffs are entitled to maintain the suit. That depends upon whether the plaintiffs are the sole landlords or joint landlords of the 5 annas share of the jote. If they are joint landlords it is clear that they cannot maintain the suit. [See section 188, Bengal Tenancy Act and Jatindra Nath v. Prasanna Kumar (1)]. The learned District Judge is of opinion that there was a merger of the 11-annas share of the jote right in the 11-annas proprietary right after the purchase of the jote by the defendants. We do not think that there was merger by the purchase of the jote right by the defendants. Apart from Statute, a tenure does not necessarily merge in the proprietary right upon the union of the two interests. See Hirendra Nath Dutt v. Hari Mohan Ghose (2), Rambishen Dutt v. Haripada Mukerjee (3)]. In the present case the union of the two interests took place before the passing of the Transfer of Property Act. But even under the Statute, there must be an union of the entire interest of the lessor and the lessee. See section 111, clause (d), of the Transfer of Property Act. So that, even if the Transfer of Property Act applied, there would be no merger, as the proprietary interest of the defendants and their interest as tenure holders are not co-extensive.

But, although there was no merger, the question arises whether by the arrangement referred to above a new tenancy was created between the parties under the plaintiffs with respect to the 5 annas share of the tenure. The mere fact that the tenant agrees to pay rent separately to one of the co-sharer landlords would not constitute a separate tenancy. Where, however, there is a separate kabuliyat in favour of one of the co sharer landlords it has been held in some cases that there is a separate tenancy.

It is contended on behalf of the appellants that the arrangement arrived at was nothing more than an agreement on the part of the defendants to pay the rent payable in the plaintiffs' share minus certain amount as (mahkup) remission separately, and did not create a new jama. We were referred to a hisab of the defendants of the year 1290 which states the total rent of the jote, the proportionate rent in plaintiffs' share and after deducting the amount of the mahakup, the balance is shown to be the jama in the plaintiffs' share. The jama agreed upon as payable to the plaintiffs is not proportionate to the original jama, as the sum of Rs. 38 was deducted as mahakup. We do not see how it can be said that the old jama continued to exist when the jama agreed upon to be paid to the plaintiffs was Rs. 34 less than what was proportionately payable in their 5-annas share. It does not appear that the mahakup of Rs. 24 was for a particular year of a temporary one. It also does not appear that there was any such mahakup in the defendants' share, nor could there be, having regard to the finding that there was no intention to keep that share of the tenancy alive. The jama is found to have been reduced at the time when the plaintiffs were about to sue the defendants for rent at the rate allowed by the Privy Council. It is true that the hisab is headed as 'Re Poulson's jote' but it might have been so written for the purpose of identifying the jote. The learned Pleader for the respondent contends that the hisab of 1290 is not the only evidence and there are other documents on the point.

As stated above, in the present case the interest of the defendants in the jote is found to be that of a tenure-holder, and, although the land of the 5-annas share is undivided, no question of undivided parcels of land arises as in the case of a holding. Then, again, in the present case there is no person interested in the land other than the plaintiffs and the defendants.

The question whether a separate tenancy is created, depends upon the circumstances of the case. The learned Subordinate Judge has, upon all the circumstances of the case, come to the conclusion that a new jama was created by the arrangement referred to above, and we are unable to hold that he was wrong.

The plaintiffs have claimed rent at the enhanced rate for the Pous kist of 1318. This they are not entitled to do having regard to the provisions of section 154 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The enhanced rate will be operative from the year 1321 B. S. It is contended that the plaintiff is not entitled to get rent for the excess area also at a rate higher than the original rate before the year 1321. It is contended for the respondents that as the excess area was being assessed with rent for the first time, there could be no question of enhancement of rent. It is true that the accreted land must be considered as an increment to the tenure and governed by the same terms and conditions, and, in the absence of any special circumstances, the rate of rent payable for the accreted land would be the same as that for the land of the parent tenure. But no rent was paid for the accreted land, though, as stated above, in the absence of special circumstances, it was payable at the same rate as that for the parent tenure and there being no provision in section 52 such as is contained in section 154, we think that the defendants are liable to pay the enhanced rent, for the past period also. It is contended for the appellant that the learned Judge having found 203 bighas, 18 cottahs to be the accreted area, is wrong in taking 545 bighas to be the excess area upon which the rent is to be assessed. It is contended by the learned Pleader for the respondent that 545 bighas is the total addition to the tenure, 203 bighas being the alluvial accretion. There is nothing, however, in the judgment to show that there was any excess area other than by accretion and we are of opinion that additional rent should be assessed upon the basis of 203 bighas, 18 cottahs being the excess area.

The plaintiffs have preferred cross objections on three grounds. The first is, that 63 bighas of lands covered by roads in the tenure should have been assessed with rent. But the learned Judge practically finds that the roads did not come into existence after the creation of the tenure. He also finds that there is nothing to show that the defendants are in a position to make these lands yield any income to them and that it would not be equitable to assess rent on plaintiffs' share of these lands.

The next ground relates to 98 bighas which the defendants say do not appertain to the tenure. The learned Judge finds that the plot of 98 bighas is separated from the lands of the tenure by another block of land, and the tenure admittedly is one compact block of land. He also finds that the evidence on behalf of the plaintiffs is not at all satisfactory to show that the plot is a part of the disputed jote. It is contended that no objection was taken with respect to it in their written statement. But the learned Pleader for the appellant explains it on the ground that the boundaries (west of Chaudhurie's jote) given in the plaint excluded these 98 bighas, and no objection was, therefore, taken in the written statement, but that when the Commissioner went to the spot and the plaintiffs pointed out the Chaudhurie's land (the 93 bighas) as part of the jote it was then that the defendants raised the objection before the Commissioner that it was not part of the jote.

The third ground relates to the rate of rent. The Court of first instance held the rate to be Rs. 1-1-0 per bigha. But that Court found that no customary rate had been proved with reference to which the rent of the tenure could be enhanced. The learned Judge on appeal observes that the evidence on the record justified that conclusion. The evidence of the only one witness on the point, as to the payment of rent at the rate of Rs. 1-1 0 per bigha to the defendants has been considered by the Judge, and he has given good reasons for holding that $13\frac{1}{2}$ annas per bigha is the fair and reasonable rate. It is contended that the learned Judge has not taken into account the rate paid for a big tenure in the vicinity and the settlement papers. But no ground is taken in the grounds of cross appeal that the Judge had omitted to consider any evidence.

We are accordingly of opinion that the cross objections should be disallowed. The decree of the Court below is modified as stated above. A fresh calculation of the rents will be made in this Court, and the costs of the lower Courts will be assessed accordingly. No order as to costs in this Court on the appeal or the cross-objections.

Kanwar Dalip Singh, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The Lyallpur Sugar Company sued one Mul Raj for recovery of Rs. 1,875 alleged to be due as damages for breach of contract. The defence set up by Mul Raj was, firstly, that no completed contract had been entered into between him and the plaintiff Company, and, secondly, that in any event he was acting as the agent of the Sewan Sugar Company and was, therefore, not personally liable. The Trial Court held that the contract to supply one thousand bags of Sewan sugar at Rs. 8-8 per maund had been completed, but that Mul Raj had been acting as the agent of the Sewan Sugar Company a fact that was known to the plaintiff Company, and that, therefore, having regard to the provisions of section 230 of the Indian Contract Act, Mul Raj was not personally liable. The Trial Court relied on Mackinnon Mackenzie & Co v. Lang, Moir & Co. (1). The learned District Judge, without coming to any clear finding on the question whether the contract had been entered into between the parties, agreed with the Trial Court in holding that the plaintiff Company had full knowledge that Mul Raj was acting in this transaction as the agent of Sewan Sugar Company and that, therefore, he was not personally liable under the said contract.

The plaintiff Company have now come up to this Court on second appeal and we have heard Mr. Shuja-ud-Din on the firm's behalf, while Mr. Dalip Singh has addressed us on behalf of Mul Raj. Mr. Shuja-ud-Din has referred us to Pollock on Contracts, page 597, 3rd Edition, Soopromonian Setty v. Heilgers (2) Bowstead on Agency, 6th Edition, page 388 and Bhargava v. Kobayashi (3). He also drew our attention to Gubboy v. Avetoom (4). With these authorities we have no quarrel, but we are unable to see that they really affect the decision in the present case. Indeed, Bhargava v. Kobayashi (3) appears to us to be an authority against Mr. Shuja-ud-Din's contention. It seems to us that in order to make an agent personally liable under a contract entered into by him it must be clearly established that the agent had not disclosed the name of his principal. If, however, the name of the principal is already known to the other party to the contract who also knows that he is dealing with the agent as an agent, a mere formal disclosure appears to us to be clearly unnecessary, and the principles enunciated in Mackinnon Mackenzie & Co. v. Lang, Moir & Co. (1) would be applicable. It was held there that the essential point was the knowledge and that actual knowledge was equivalent to disclosure, the whole object of which would be to convey such knowledge. In the present case it has been found that the plaintiff Company had full knowledge that Mul Raj was the agent of the Sewan Sugar Company and that in the present transaction he was acting as agent of that Company. No formal contract was drawn up and, therefore, it was competent for the Courts below to arrive at a decision on this question by an examination of all the surrounding circumstances These circumstances are to be deduced from the correspondence on the record and this correspondence clearly supports the view taken by the Courts below.

We accordingly dismiss this appeal with costs.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), ss. 105, 109—Settlement of rate of rent—Suit for rent decreed at another rate of rent—Decision as to rate of rent not res judicata in subsequent suit.

Where the rate of rent payable by a tenant has already been decided in a proceeding under section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, a Civil Court deciding a suit for arrears of rent brought subsequently has no jurisdiction, by reason of section 109 of the same Act, to pass a decree fixing the rate of rent and if it does so the decision is not res judicata in any later suit for arrears of rent. [p. 475, col. 1.]

Letters Patent appeals against the judgment of Mr. Justice Das, in Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 835 of 1918, dated the 26th May 1920, reported as 57 Ind Cas. 48.

Messrs. S. C. Mitter and Murari Prasad, for the Appellant.

Mr. Ram Prasad, for the Respondent in Appeal No. 1 of 1921.

JUDGMENT.

COUTTS, J.—This Appeal (No. 77 of 1920) arises out of a suit for rent for the years 1319 to 1322. The rent is claimed at the rate of Rs. 10-11-6 which was the rate fixed on compromise in a proceeding under section 105.

It appears that previous to the present suit the plaintiff in the year 19 0 instituted a suit for rent at this rate. The suit was contested by the defendant who relied on the Record of Rights in which the rent of the holding was shown as Rs. 9-11-7½. The suit was decreed at the rate admitted by the defendant. Subsequently, in the year 1915, there was another rent suit by the plaintiff, and the plaintiff again claimed at the rate fixed on compromise in the proceeding under section 105. This suit was not contested by the defendant and the plaintiff was given an ex parte decree at the rate claimed by him. He has now brought the suit out of which this appeal has arisen. The suit was decreed in the Court of first instance at the rate admitted by the defendant, namely, Rs. 9-11-7½, and on appeal to the District Judge this decision was upheld. There was a second appeal to this Court which was heard by a Single Judge and the decisions of both the lower Courts have been upheld. It is against this decision that the present appeal has been filed.

The basis of the decision appealed against is, that the rate of rent decreed in the rent suit of 1910 is res judicata and that, therefore, the plaintiff is not entitled to a decree at the rate of rent fixed in the compromise.

The only point which is urged before us in this appeal is, that the decree of the Court which decided the rent suit of 1910, in so far as it decided the rate of rent, was without jurisdiction and section 109 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is relied on. That section runs as follows: —

"Subject to the provisions of section 109A, a Civil Court shall not entertain any application or suit concerning any matter which is or has already been the subject of an application made under sections 105 to 108 both inclusive."

There is no doubt that the Court which decided the rent-suit in 1910 had jurisdiction to pass a decree for the rent for the years which were in suit in that particular case but, in view of the provisions of section 109 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, it obviously had no jurisdiction to pass a decree fixing the rate of rent as this had already been decided in the proceeding under section 105, and, in so far as it did so, there is, in my opinion, no doubt that it was acting without jurisdiction. This being so, the decision, so far as this particular point is concerned, cannot be res judicata. In this view of the case, the contention urged on behalf of the appellant must, in my opinion, prevail. I would accordingly set aside the decision appealed against and decree the suit at the rate fixed in the compromise in the section 105 proceeding. In other words I would decree this appeal with costs throughout.

Ross, J.—I agree.

Appeal, second—Findings of fact—Judgment of lower Appellate Court—Hindu Law—Separation.

It is not necessary for a Court of first appeal to refer in detail to every piece of evidence on the record. Whether or not there has been a separation of a joint Hindu family is a question of fact. [p. 476, col. 1.]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Sialkot, dated the 13th October 1915, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, Second Class, Sialkot, dated the 31st May 1912.

Mr. Sunder Das, for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble Bakhshi Sohan Lal, R. B, for the Respondents,

JUDGMENT.—The facts of the case out of which this appeal has arisen are given in detail in the judgment of the Courts below and need not be recapitulated. Briefly, they are as follows:—One Jwala Shah had eight sons and these eight at one time formed a joint Hindu family. On the 9th of April 1895, a partition took place and the eight brothers separated. This fact was evidenced by an entry in an account-book, according to which entry certain land and debts still remained to be divided up. In 1908 an agreement was entered into between the other members of the family. Haveli Shah not being a party to it. According to this arrangement, the parties to the agreement divided up all their property, and one of them, Singha Shah, was given land in adjustment of his share in lieu of certain ornaments. Gulab Shah, son of Jwala Shah, instituted the present suit against the remaining descendants of Jwala Shah claiming possession of 1-6th of certain lands and Rs. 36-14. Most of these lands are in the possession of Haveli Shah who was the only defendant who contested the case. Gulab Shah alleged that, qua the land held by Haveli Shah, there had been no separation in the family. The learned District Judge, after having given the parties every opportunity, came to the conclusion that the plaintiff had failed to prove that he was entitled to any share in the lands in suit in the possession of Haveli Shah. He has held that Haveli Shah has definitely separated and that, so far as he was concerned, there had been a complete partition amongst the descendants of Jwala Shah in 1395. Against this decision Gulab Shah preferred this second appeal, and on his behalf we have heard Mr. Sundar Das, while Bakhshi Sohan Lal has addressed us on behalf of Haveli Shah.

Whether or not there had been a complete separation in 1895 is clearly a question of fact, but Mr. Sundar Das contended that, in arriving at his conclusions, the learned District Judge had omitted to consider certain evidence, documentary and oral. We are, however, unable to agree with this contention. It is perfectly clear that the accounts referred to by Mr. Sundar Das were examined and considered by the learned District Judge who distinctly says that these accounts prove nothing in themselves and, when read in the light of Gulab Shah's statements of the 4th of April 1912, might justly be said to disprove his claim, and, further, that there was no trace of any division of the produce of these lands which were alleged to be joint. We do not think that it is necessary in law for an Appellate Court, such as the District Judge, to refer in detail to every piece of evidence on the record. So long as his judgment leaves no doubt that all the available evidence has been given due weight to, we consider that his findings on questions of fact cannot be attacked in second appeal. We are satisfied that the learned District Judge has considered all the evidence on the record and we accordingly dismiss this appeal with costs.

Rule against an order of the Munsif Second Court, Midnapur, in Claim Case No. 21 of of 1919.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Mahendra Nath Roy (with him Babu Promode Kumar Ghosh for Babu Lalit Mohan Sanyal), for the Petitioner.—The petitioner comes up before your Lordships in your revisional jurisdiction under section 115, Civil Procedure Code, as there has been a failure to exercise jurisdiction. Refers to Balakrishna Udayar v. Vasudeva Aiyar (1). The lower Court is refusing to exercise jurisdiction vested in it by law on an erroneous view of the law. Refers to Shew Prosad Bungshidhar v. Ram Ohunder Haribux (2).

Babu Durkanath Chakraverty (with him Babu Umes Chandra Banerjee), for the Opposite Party.—I submit that your Lordships will not interfere under section 115, Civil Procedure Code. The adoption of a wrong view of law does not entitle your Lordships to interfere under section 115, Civil Procedure Code. The High Court's powers under section 115 are discretionary. Your Lordships will refuse to interfere under this section as there is another remedy open to the petitioner, the existence of such a remedy precludes your Lordships' interference. There has been no serious miscarriage of justice. Let the petitioner bring a regular suit. That is a conclusive remedy.

Babu M. N. Roy replied.

JUDGMENT.—This Rule arises out of an application under Order XXI, rule 100, Civil Procedure Code. The petitioner's case is that she had purchased the property, which is a non-transferable occupancy holding, in execution of a mortgage-decree against the tenant some time before the sale brought about by the opposite party in execution of a rent-decree. The opposite party who is a landlord has purchased the holding in execution of that rent-decree and has obtained possession of the property through Court dispossessing the petitioner.

The learned Munsif before whom the application was made has come to the conclusion that the applicant has no locus standi, that is, she is not competent to make the application under rule 100, Order XXI, Code of Civil Procedure. He has relied mainly upon the case of Panchratan Koeri v. Ram Sahay (3) in which it has been held that where a person is a representative within the meaning of section 47, Code of Civil Procedure; he is not competent to maintain an application under Order XXI, rule 100, Code of Civil Procedure. We are not prepared to go so far and might have come to a different conclusion if it were necessary for us to determine that question.

An objection has been made to the competency of this application by the opposite party on the ground that this Court should not interfere under section 115 because the Court below has adopted a wrong view of the law, and more so when there is another remedy open to the petitioner, namely, bringing a regular suit. We take it as a settled practice of this Court that, where a party has got a remedy open to him to obtain the relief which he is seeking this Court will not ordinarily interfere, unless there has been a very serious miscarriage of justice. We do not think that this is a case of that character and we are of opinion that it would not be right for us to interfere under section 115, Code of Civil Procedure.

The Rule is, therefore, discharged with costs. Hearing-fee two gold mohurs.

Dr. H. S. Gour, for the Appellant.

Mr. B. R. Pendharkar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The facts are simple and no longer in dispute, as the learned Counsel for the appellant has expressly abandoned all his appeal except the contention that the transfer of a house to him by sale in execution of a decree is not voidable under section 41 of the Transfer of Property Act. One Bakshiram, an Oswal Bania, that is to say, a Jain, owned all the property in suit. He died in 1897 leaving a widow, Bhuri Sethani, and a daughter, Imaratbai, who is the plaintiff. Musammat Bhuri died in 1906 and a few days before her death she said that Suganchand, the son of her husband's separated nephew Nathuram, was to succed her as owner of all the property. This was apparently accepted by the members of the family and of the caste as an adoption of Suganchand as the son of Bakshiram, and, shortly after the death of Bhuri Sethani, a turban was plaed on his head by them in token of his sucession and he took possession of all the property. Imratbai did not hear her mother's declaration but was told that Suganchand had been adopted and accepted it as true as indeed she appears to do still. She seems to have been given something out of her father's property. There was clearly no valid adoption, but everybody accepted Suganchand as the adopted son of Bakshiram, or rather as his heir, there being no very great difference between the two among Jains as was pointed out in Sheokuarbai v. Jeoraj (1).

In 1913 the appellant Ramprasad attached one of the houses of Bakshiram's estate of which Suganchand and his father Nathuram were the ostensible owners, in execution of a decree against them both. No objection was made and the house was sold by auction and purchased by Ramprasad himself. Thereafter, several suits filed by Suganchand on bonds executed in favour of Bakshiram were dismissed on the plea taken by the various defendants that he was not the adopted son of Bakshiram. On this Imaratbai filed the present suit against Suganchand and his father and Ramprasad for possession of the whole of Bakshiram's property, stating quite honestly in the plaint that she had been under the impression that Suganchand was the adopted son of her father, but this had been found not to be so in the suits filed by him. She obtained a decree for possession of the whole of the property, including the house purchased by Ramprasad, and he alone has appealed.

As has been said, the only question that arises is, whether he is protected by section 41 of the Transfer of Property Act. To say that the question is one of estoppel under section 115 of the Evidence Act is merely to put the same matter in different words. Whether Imaratbai is prevented by section 115 of the Evidence Act from denying that Suganchand was the owner of the house when Ramprasad attached and bought it, or is prevented by section 41 of the Transfer of Property Act from avoiding the sale to Ramprasad, the final result would be the same and would arise from the same cause. In one view, because she intentionally allowed Ramprasad to believe that Suganchand was the owner of the house and to buy it under that belief, she cannot plead that Suganchand was not the owner and her suit, in respect of that house, must be dismissed. In the other view, she can take the plea, but because she consented to Suganchand being the ostensible owner she cannot avoid the transfer, so that the plea must fail and her suit must equally be dismissed.

The question then is narrowed down to this. Does the consent mentioned in section 41 of the Transfer of Property Act or the intention mentioned in section 115 of the Evidence Act include a consent or an intention which is based on a mistake? This is fully and finally answered by the ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Sarat Chunder Dey v. Gopal Chunder Laha (2). That deals only with section 115 of the Evidence Act but applies equally to the section of the Transfer of Property Act. The facts, indeed, are very similar to those of the present case. For these reasons, the decree of the lower Court will be modified by the deletion of the orders that the fourth defendant shall put the plaintiff in possession of the house at Gadarwara and that he shall pay a portion of the plaintiff's costs, and the substitution therefor of an order that the plaintiff's suit against the fourth defendant Ramprasad shall be dismissed and that the plaintiff shall pay all his costs. The costs of this appeal will also be paid by the plaintiff-respondent.

Babu Biran Kumar Mukerjee, for the Appellants.—The decree holder is the appellant. The appeal arises out of certain execution proceedings. The decree was for possession. The judgment debtor resisted the execution of a certain portion of the decree. The Appellate Court erroneously dismissed the appeal summarily under Order XLI, rule 11, Civil Procedure Code, without giving any judgment. I submit he is bound to write out a judgment, however short. Order XLI rule 11 is controlled by Order XLI, rule 31. In a case in which second appeal lies a judgment must be delivered. Refers to Rami Deka v. Brojo Nath Saikia (1), Rakhal Chunder Tewari v. Satindra Deb Rai (2). In the latter case there was judgment written but it was very short. Refers to Pachi Dasi v. Bala Das (3). There Coxe, J., was of opinion that the case in Rami Deka v. Brojo Nath Saikia (1) was not correct. the present case the learned Judge simply says "Heard Pleader. The appeal is summarily dismissed." I submit that is no judgment according to law.

Babu Manmatha Nath Ganguli, for the Respondents.—Order XLI, rule 11, is not controlled by rule 31. There cannot be any doubt that the Judge has power to dismiss an appeal summarily. Rule 31 applies when the respondent appears. Then the Judge, after hearing both sides, has got to write out a judgment I would rely on Samin Hasan v. Piran (7).

Babu Bijan Kumar Mukerji replied in brief.

JUDGMENT.—In this case, the lower Appellate Court dismissed the appeal evidently under Order XLI, rule 11. The order runs as follows:—"Heard Pleader. The appeal is summarily dismissed."

It is contended on behalf of the appellant before us that the provisions of Order XLI, rule 11, are controlled by those of Order XLI, rule 31.

There is a divergence of opinion on the point in the several High Courts in India. In our Court, in the case of Rami Deka v. Brojo Nath Saikia (1), where the judgment was "Suit laid at Rs. 430, value of buffaloes. Appeal rejected under section 551, Civil Procedure Code", it was held that the dismissal of an appeal under section 551, Civil Procedure Code, by a Court whose decision may be the subject of an appeal does not relieve the Court from the necessity of writing a judgment which, according to the provisions of section 574 of the Code, should show the points raised, the decision upon those points and the reasons for deciding them. In the next case in our Court, Kakhal Chandra Tewari v. Satindra Deb Rai (2), Maclean, C. J., (Caspersz, J., agreeing with him) quoted with approval the above case of Rami Deka v. Brojo Nath Saikia (1), but distinguished it on the ground that in the case before them there was substantial compliance with the requirements of section 574 of the Code. In the case of Pachi Dasi v. Bola Das (3) Coxe, J., was of opinion that section 551 of the Code was not controlled by section 574. Richardson, J., on the other hand, fully accepted the view of law taken in the two earlier cases. Both the learned Judges, however, were of opinion that in the case before them the judgment recorded by the Subordinate Judge was sufficient. It appears from pages 1032-33* of the report that the facts of the case, the points for determination and the reasons for deciding them were stated, though briefly. The question whether the provisions of section 551 are controlled by those of section 574, therefore, did not arise for determination in that case and the observations of the learned Judges on the point must be taken as obiter.

In the Bombay High Court, in the case of Puttapa v. Yellappa (4), the same view was taken as in the two earlier Calcutta cases. A contrary view was taken later in the case of Tanaji Dagde v. Shankar Sakharam (5). That decision, however, was overruled by a Full Bench of the Bombay High Court in Hanmant Rukhmaji v. Annaji Hanmant (6). But the decision of the Full Bench proceeded upon the ground that there was a Circular Order of the Bombay High Court by which the lower Courts were bound.

The Allahabad High Court, in the case of Samin Hasan v. Piran (7), dissented from the view taken by this Court in Rami Deka v. Brojo Nath Saikia (1) and held that the provisions of section 574, Civil Procedure Code, are not applicable in their entirety to the case of an appeal dismissed under section 551 of the Code. In that case also, as appears from the report, there were some reasons stated for the judgment and not merely that the appeal was summarily dismissed.

We think we ought to follow the decisions of this Court and hold that the judgment of the lower Appellate Court in this case is defective and should be set aside.

The case will accordingly go back to the lower Appellate Court. As the Additional District Judge who summarily dismissed the case is not now at Howrah, the appeal must be heard by the lower Appellate Court under Order XLI, rule 11 and disposed of according to law.

The costs of this appeal, which we assess at one gold mohur, will abide the result of the appeal to the lower Appellate Court if the appeal is admitted under Order XLI, rule 11. If the appeal is not admitted, the parties will bear their own costs.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 190—Order of District and Sessions Judge to subordinate Magistrate to try certain persons for robbery—Ultra vires—Procedure.

An order of a District and Sessions Judge to a Magistrate subordinate to him, to try certain persons sent to him in custody, on charges of robbery and abetment of robbery is ultra vires and no proceedings can be taken on that order inasmuch as none of the requirements of section 190, Criminal Procedure Code, for initiation of prosecutions are fulfilled by that order. Application for quashing proceedings pending before Resident Magistrate, Rohri.

Mr. F. J. de Verteuil, for the Applicant.

Mr. T. G. Elphinston, Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

KINCAID, J. C.—The facts of the case are more or less undisputed and are shortly as follows :—

Pohumal, applicant No. 1, appears to have obtained in the Court of the Second Class Sub-Judge Rohri, a decree against four Sikhs named in the application before us and a warrant of attachment of their moveable property in execution of his decree. He went with Vishnu and Kouro, applicants Nos 2 and 3, and one Khial to Lakhsing's village where the Sikhs lived, but they were absent. On or about the 17th or 18th March the District Judge of Sukkur received two or three vernacular petitions in which three persons, Parmsing Lakhsing, Mithusing Harsosing and Rupsing Sidhusing, complained that the four applicants had with the bailiff Pitomal entered their houses, although they were not judgment-debtors, and had taken therefrom certain ornaments. The District Judge sent these petitions to the Second Class Sub Judge of Rohri for enquiry and report. Before the Sub-Judge had reported thereon, Parmsing Mithusing and Rupsing presented themselves in person before the District Judge and tendered to him petitions written in English, complaining that the Nazir of the Sub-Court had relied on an endorsement made by the bailiff on the warrant that nothing had been realised owing to the judgment-debtor's absence and had ordered that the matter to be dropped The District Judge believed the applicant's story and decided to enquire into the allegations himself. On the 25th March he examined them as well as Pitomal, the bailiff, and, believing that there existed a prima facie case against Pohumal, Vishnu, Kouro and Khial "and other Banias," issued a search warrant for the search of Pohumal's house. At the same time, he told Mithusing to bring to him Morusing and Jaising, who, as Mithusing alleged, had witnessed the entry into the house of Mithusing and Rupsing. On the 27th March the search warrant was returned with an endorsement that nothing had been found in Pohumal's house. On the 29th March Mithusing brought Morusing and Jaising before the District Judge who examined them as well as two other eye-witnesses, Khunosing and Ramsing. After their examination he issued bailable warrants to secure the attendance of Pohumal, Vishnu, Kouro and Khial, and one Jetho, presumably one of the other Banias, and asked the Mukhtiarkar of Rohri to go to the village of the judgment-debtors and examine the wives of Parmsing and Rupsing. On the 1st April, Pohumal, Vishnu, Kouro, Khial and Jetho appeared before the Judge, who examined them and formed the conclusion that Pohumal and Vishnu had committed robbery and that Kouro and Jetho had abetted them in the offense. He did not think that Khial had committed any offense. Acting on this conclusion the Judge on the same day wrote an order directing that Pohumal, Vishnu, Kouro and Jetho should "be taken in custody to the Court of the Resident Magistrate, Rohri" on charges of robbery and abetment of robbery. He concluded the order with the words: "As to the enquiry, evidence will be given by R. E. A. Elliot, District Judge."

The Resident Magistrate seems to have examined Mr. Elliot on the 2nd April and then to have adjourned the enquiry granting bail to Pohumal, Vishnu, Kouro and Jetho. On the 17th April the latter filed an application in this Court asking that the proceedings should be quashed. The Court stayed the proceedings and sent for the record.

At the hearing Mr. De Verteuil appeared for the applicants. The Public Prosecutor, Mr. Elphinston, appeared for the Crown.

We may at the outset say that we are unable to find any section in either the Civil Procedure Code or the Criminal Procedure Code which justified the learned Judge in ordering the arrest of the applicants and in sending them in custody to be tried on charges of robbery and abetment of robbery before the Resident Magistrate of Rohri. Section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, empowers any Civil, Criminal or Revenue Court to send persons in custody to the nearest First Class Magistrate when it is of opinion "that there is ground for enquiry into any offence referred to in section 195 and committed before it or brought under its notice in the course of a judicial proceeding." But robbery and abetment of robbery are not offences referred to in section 195. Indeed, the learned Judge himself seems afterwards to have felt the same difficulty that we feel because, when cross-examined, he admitted that he had acted "without reference to any particular law at the time" and under powers inherent in the District Judge. It is, however, unnecessary to labour this point, because the learned Public Prosecutor informed the Court that he was unable to support the action of the learned Judge. He, however, opposed the application to quash proceedings on the ground that it was open to this Court to treat the Judge's order of the 1st April as a complaint under section 190 (a), Criminal Procedure Code. It is true, he argued, that the Magistrate had not examined the complainant under section 200, Criminal Procedure Code, but the failure to examine the complainant under section 200, Criminal Procedure Code, had been made good by the Court's examination under section 252, Criminal Procedure Code, and that in any case, a failure to examine the complainant under section 200, Criminal Procedure Code, was a mere irregularity that could be cured by section 537, Criminal Procedure Code. He relied on in Aparao Jhaverilal, In re (1), Emperor v. Sundar Sarup (2), Saheb Tewari v. Emperor (3), Queen-Empress v. Monu (4), Queen-Empress v. Murphy (5), Girdhari Lal v. Emperor (6) and Muso v. Emperor (7).

We do not propose to decide the questions whether a failure to examine the complainant under section 200, Criminal Procedure Code, can be cured by his examination under section 252, Criminal Procedure Code, or whether it can be cured by the provisions of section 537, Criminal Procedure Code. For the purposes of this case, it is unnecessary to do so, as we cannot hold that the order of Mr. Elliot was within the meaning of the Criminal Procedure Code a "complaint." In the case of Aparao Jhaverilal, In re (1), on which the Public Prosecutor mainly relied, the facts were entirely different. The District Judge called the District Magistrate's attention by letter to certain remarks of his as regards the forgery and suggested that, in the interests of justice, there should be a prompt investigation of a will. As their Lordships, Heaton and Hayward, JJ., observed, the District Judge's letter fulfilled "in every particular the requirements of the definition of "complaint" in the Criminal Procedure Code. Nor is the case of Emperor v. Sundar Sarup (2) more pertinent. There an Assistant Collector came to the conclusion that in a rent suit before him the plaintiff had committed perjury. He stated his reasons in a letter and sent the record to the Collector "for starting a case under section 193, Indian Penal Code." The Collector ordered a case under section 193, Indian Penal Code, to be initiated against the plaintiff. When the matter came up before the High Court, Knox, J., held that the Assistant Collector's letter was a "complaint to the District Magistrate." The mere fact that it was addressed to the Collector instead of to the District Magistrate was a mistake which could not affect his jurisdiction. But in this case Mr. Elliot himself issued an "order" that certain persons should be taken in custody to the Court of the Resident Magistrate on the charges of robbery and abetment of robbery. Now, can such a document be deemed to be a "complaint"? The definition of this word will be found in section 4 (h) of the Criminal Procedure Code. It runs as follows:—

"'Complaint' means the allegation made orally or in writing to a Magistrate, with a view to his taking action, under this Code, that some person whether known or unknown, has committed an offence, but it does not include the report of a Police Officer."

Now, Mr. Elliot made no mere allegation to the Magistrate with a view to his taking action. He issued an order that the Magistrate should try the accused persons. The Public Prosecutor has argued that the order only referred to the taking of the accused persons into custody and not to their trial. We do not think that he is correct. The entire document is headed "order". It is true that the word "trial" does not occur in the order but that was the only object for which the accused could have been taken to the Magistrate in custody. On receiving the said order the Magistrate, unless he refused to obey it, was bound to proceed to try the accused. It was not open to him to pass an order of dismissal under section 203. He had at once to proceed to hear the complainant under section 252 and that is the course which the Magistrate actually followed. A case very similar to the present one is of Sital Das v. Emperor (8). Therein, the District Judge directed the prosecution of a guardian of a minor named Sitaldas and the District Magistrate ordered the case to be tried by the Additional Magistrate. The Chief Court of the Punjab held that the District Judge had no power to order the prosecution of Sitaldas. It also held that the said order could not be treated as information under section 190 (1) (c). The plea that the order could be treated as a complaint does not seem to have been advanced by the Crown. Chevis, J., observed: "The order of the District Judge being ultra vires goes for nothing ..... I find that up to the present no criminal case has been properly instituted, and I direct that no further proceedings be taken on the District Magistrate's order of 17th January 1910. At the same time, I note that nothing in the present order is to be regarded as a bar to any further prosecution which may be directed against Sitaldas, either on complaint or otherwise; I express no opinion whatever on the merits as to whether such a prosecution should or should not be started, but I merely point out that, if a prosecution is to be brought, proceedings must be duly initiated as required by section 190, Criminal Procedure Code."

In the same way we find that the "order" of the District Judge of Sukkur was made ultra vires. The result is, that none of the requirements of section 190, Criminal Procedure Code, have been fulfilled. No legal proceedings, therefore, have been initiated against the applicants and we order that they at once be discharged, and that no further proceedings be taken against them on the Judge's order of 1st April 1919. At the same time we wish to express no opinion whatever on the merits as to whether legal proceedings, as required by the Criminal Procedure Code, should or should not be initiated against them.

RAYMOND, A. J. C.—I concur. I think the action of the District Judge in this case is as unwarranted in law as it is unprecedented, and the Public Prosecutor was quite right in expressing his inability to support it. The main question in the case is, whether the proceedings against the accused before the Resident Magistrate, Rohri, were initiated in any manner prescribed by section 190, Criminal Procedure Code, which prescribes the conditions requisite for the inititation of proceedings. Section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, has clearly no application, nor have clauses (b) and (c) of section 190. It has been contended by the Public Prosecutor that clause (a) to section 190 is applicable and that the proceedings were instituted on complaint. Complaint is defined in clause (h) to section 4 as the allegation made orally or in writing to a Magistrate with a view to his taking action under the Code that some person whether known or unknown has committed an offence. Now, when a Magistrate takes cognizance of an offence on complaint, he may do one of three things, he may either dismiss the complaint, or fix it for preliminary inquiry or issue process. He has to exercise his judgment, and determine whether the complaint ought to be entertained or not. His position is one of responsibility, for on his determination the interests of one person or the other may be prejudicially affected. The right of the Magistrate to consider the complaint when an "allegation', is made to him that some person has committed an offence cannot be fettered, and he must decide, according to the circumstances of each case, whether a particular complaint should be admitted or dismissed. Now, what the Public Prosecutor describes as a complaint in this case, is headed an "order". It is true that it embodies an allegation that certain persons described therein have committed certain offences, but the allegations are coupled with a mandate that those offences should be enquired into, and with that object the persons complained against are sent in custody to stand their trial before the Resident Magistrate, Rohri. The latter himself must have understood that that there was no option left to him but to immediately start with the trial of the accused and this is what he precisely does, for he records the evidence of the Sessions Judge as the first witness in the case. The fact of the written order of the Sessions Judge and the sending of the accused in custody to the Resident Magistrate were tantamount to a direction to the Magistrate to try the accused irrespective of the fact whether any complaint had been filed before him and whether it disclosed the commission of any offence. I feel it impossible to describe the order in this case, emanating from the Sessions Judge, to a Magistrate subordinate to him as a complaint. It is, for all practical purposes, what it purports to be, viz., an order. The fundamental requisite for the initiation of proceedings is absent. The Magistrate's right of exercise of his judgment upon the presentation of a complaint to him is taken away from him and he had been directed to proceed with the trial in a way unknown to the law. The proceedings of the Magistrate are vitiated at their very root and must, therefore, be quashed.

JUDGMENT.

JWALA PRASAD, J.—The petitioners, eight in number, Raja Ram Sao, Jhari Lal, Balgovind Lal, Gajoo Sao, Chilhauri Sao, Jai Sao, Parshadi Sao, Chamru Sao, of village Aunta, near Mokameh Ghat Station, have been directed by the Sub-Divisional Officer of Barh, by his order dated the 29th of April 1921, to execute bonds of Rs. 100 each, with two securities of Rs. 100 each, to be of good behaviour for one year or in default to undergo rigorous imprisonment for one year each under section 110 (b) of the Criminal Procedure Code. This order has been based upon the finding of the Magistrate that the accused habitually "dealt in goods which they knew to have been stolen from railway goods shed at Mokameh Ghat."

Upon the report of the Police at Mokameh, dated the 15th of October 1920, the Magistrate drew up the following proceeding: "Whereas from the report of G. R. Police, Mokameh, dated the 15th of October 1920, it appears that the above named eight accused persons are by habit receivers of stolen property knowing the same to have been stolen, I, therefore, order the above eight accused to show cause at 10 A. M. on 8th November 1920 why they should not be bound down for three years to be of good behaviour under section 110, Criminal Procedure Code, in terms given below—Raja Ram a bond of Rs. 1,000 with two sureties of Rs. 500 each—other seven defendants bonds of Rs. 100 each with two sureties of Rs. 100 each."

Now, the circumstances set forth in the report of the Police referred to above are as follows:—

1. That about 302 bags of linseed and other articles were found short at destination from Mokameh Ghat although seals on the waggons were intact, leading to a conclusion that the thefts occurred at Mokameh Ghat before the waggons left the place.

2. That the coolies, who mostly came from the village Aunta, have been generally found concealing the grains from the Ghat Station and disposing them off to their receivers at Aunta.

3. That one gang of receivers, under the leadership of Jhari Sao, was prosecuted in the year 1913 under section 110, Criminal Procedure Code, and Jhari and Balgovind were convicted.

4. That it came to light during enquiry of the proceedings in 1913, that the stolen property received by the then accused receivers was despatched by them by rail to Lakhisarai Station under different fictitious names.

5. That the remnants of the above mentioned gang gradually formed afresh the present gang of receivers under leadership of accused Raja Ram. This time they changed their modus operandi to defy the Police and to avoid detection, that is, they began to send away their stolen property by carts or boats towards Lakhisarai, Barh, and other places across the river.

6. In the year 1919 there was an abnormal increase of crime at Mokameh Ghat and about 27 coolies were arrested red-handed carrying property in almost each case towards the village of the accused. Eighteen coolies were similarly arrested in 1918 and eleven in 1920 with more or less the same result.

7. That during the enquiry of this case, it transpired that present accused are mainly responsible for the thefts as receivers and that they actually sent large consignments from time to time to Lakhisarai and Barh per carts and boats.

8. That the accused Raja Ram, Jai, Parshadi and Chamru have transacted in linseed to the extent of Rs. 20,250, in spite of the fact that none of them has got even a small plot of land producing linseed, nor have they been known to have ever imported it from other places.

9. That the accused have been maintaining each a nominal shop only to screen their mala fide dealings with the coolies and to afford the latter opportunities, to frequent their shops with the ulterior object of purchasing things.

In order to show that the accused persons had facility in perpetrating the offences of receiving stolen property, the Sub-Inspector in his report has given a description of the situation of the village Aunta, their shops and the Railway transhipment platform, which shows that they are all in close proximity. In his report the Sub-Inspector says that "Aunta is a large village inhabited mostly by Babbar and low class people. Almost every adult male member of the latter class works as a cooly in the Mokameh Ghat Goods Shed where transhipment of goods from B. & N.W.Ry. and E.I. Ry., and vice versa, is carried on on a very grand scale. The accused have got nominal shops of groceries. Their shops and houses are located on the outskirts of the village just outside the Railway fencing within easy reach of distance from the Railway Shed. The Mokameh Ghat shed is one of the biggest transhipment stations in India. Some times about three hundred waggons are transhipped in one day. The commodities passing through the shed are of a variety, but chiefly rice, wheat, grain, linseed, sugar, salt and the like. The yard is about two miles in length. A portion of that is tinned,—known as the shed—but without any enclosure. The goods are usually detained for one day, sometimes for two or more, for being transhipped. About 250 coolies are always at work. About 100 of them hail alone from Aunta. A considerable number of these coolies have got every facility of pilfering from the consignments in the shed or carrying away a bag or two as opportunity offers." The plan of the Mokameh Ghat Station, the transhipment platform and the Aunta village, where the shops of the accused are, has been appended to the report of the Sub-Divisional Officer dated the 15th of January 1921. In order to show that the accused are members of one gang associated together for the purpose of carrying on the offence of receiving stolen property from the coolies, the Sub-Inspector says in his diary: "The accused live in one village and are intimate with each other. They have been seen often associating together and with the coolies working in the shed who are admittedly bad characters. They have also been found transacting together with one and the same Mahajan at Lakhisarai, Barh and Mokameh. They were given an opportunity but could not explain satisfactorily about their transaction and the sudden change in their circumstances. A few years back they were men of no means but now they are men of thousands living comfortably in a high style."

The evidence laid in the present case is enormous. As many as 148 witnesses for the prosecution and 48 witnesses for the defence have been examined, and no less than 115 Exhibits, excluding their sub-numbers, have been produced. By means of the aforesaid evidence the prosecution has tried to establish what is contained in the report of the Sub-Inspector upon which the proceeding under section 110, Criminal Procedure Code, was come to. The report of the Sub-Inspector does not itself show any specific instance of receiving stolen property in which all the accused were acting jointly and in concert. No doubt, the Sub-Inspector's report says that the accused persons belong to a gang of receivers of stolen property, the conclusion is not justified by the material set forth in the report. The report refers to one gang of receivers of stolen property in 1913 headed by Jhari in which Jhari and Balgobind were convicted but nothing has been stated in report, nor anything shown in the evidence, that the remaining six accused were members of that gang. The present gang is said to have been formed under leadership of Raja Ram and the only circumstances mentioned for thinking that the remaining seven accused were also members of that gang is the fact that four of the accused, Rajaram, Jai, Parshadi and Chamru, have transacted in linseed, etc., to the extent of an enormous sum of rupees, namely Rs. 20,280 with the Mahajans in Lakhisarai, Mokameh and Barh. This circumstance, again, even if accepted as an evidence of association, leaves out of account the remaining four of the accused. It has not been stated in the report, nor shown in the evidence, that the remaining four of the accused had any concern with the transaction referred to above. The facts and incidents relied upon by the prosecution do not establish an association of all the accused in the nefarious act of receiving stolen property. There are, no doubt, certain facts, namely, that they were carrying on shops in the close proximity of the Railway transhipment shed; that they were residents of a village from where Railway coolies are largely recruited; that they were carrying on shops affording facilities to the coolies in disposing of the stolen grains through them, and also giving facility in receiving the stolen goods. Each of the accused holds separate shops in that locality. There is nothing to show that these accused have associated together and received any stolen goods from the coolies. The coolies coming from the village Aunta, as shown above, are about 100 in number. Some of these, as set forth in the report of the Sub Inspector, have been convicted for theft. No particulars have been given as to which of the coolies have formed into a league with the accused in the present case. The reasons, therefore, for the Sub-Inspector to report that these accused persons formed a gang do not hold good. Therefore, upon his report, the Magistrate could not draw up a charge under section 117 (4) for the joint trial of the present accused upon the ground that they had associated together for the purpose of receiving stolen property. The report of the Police, therefore, if truly analysed, leads only to the conclusion that the accused were receivers of stolen property but not necessarily the fact that they were members of a gang having associated themselves under a common leader, Raja Ram, for the purpose of carrying on this nefarious act. The Magistrate, in his proceeding under section 110, Criminal Procedure Code, apparently does not accept the report of the Police as being sufficient to frame a charge of association of these accused persons; for he only says in the proceeding that "the accused are by habit receivers of stolen property." The fact that they are members of a gang or have associated together for the purpose of carrying their profession of receiving stolen property, is a very material fact which ought to have been clearly stated in the proceeding in question. The proceeding stands in the position of the charge and on the principle of framing a charge, the proceeding must have mentioned the material facts of the accused having associated together or being members of a gang to carry out the offence of receiving stolen property in order to give the accused notice of this so as to enable them to meet it. Upon the charge, therefore, thus framed, I very much doubt whether the accused could be jointly tried. At the very initial stage of trial, that is, just when the accused appeared before the Magistrate in pursuance of the notice served upon them of the proceeding, they took objection to the joint trial of all of them. This application was refused by the Magistrate in the following words: "application for separate trial disallowed without giving any reason for doing so." This is not the judicial determination of the legal question raised in the accused's petition. The prayer appears to have been pressed again in the course of the argument before the Magistrate who, again, for the reasons set forth in his judgment rejected the contention. In this connection, reference may profitably be made to the petition of Rajaram and Jai Sao, made before the Court of the Sub-Divisional Officer of Barh and the order passed thereon by that officer. The petition runs thus:

"That your petitioner's Pleader from the very beginning of the case has been objecting to your petitioner's joint trial along with other accused persons. That your petitioners understand that your Honour once expressed your Honour's opinion that after the close of the case your Honour would consider the propriety or otherwise of your petitioners separate trial. That now, as the prosecution has closed its case except to examine two or three formal witnesses, your petitioners beg to request your Honour to order separate trials. That the prosecution also applied for the separate trial of each accused. That the joint trial is illegal and greatly prejudicial to your petitioners." The order passed on this petition runs thus: "The application is refused. 145 witnesses have been examined and 54 have been cross-examined. The hearing has occupied 19 days already. My opinion has been misunderstood and the words 'after the close of the case' must be understood literally and not to mean after the close of the case for the prosecution." I have underlined (italicised) the passage in the aforesaid quotation for showing that prosecution also applied for separate trial. Thus, both the prosecution and the accused persistently asked the Magistrate to try the accused separately but the Magistrate had been putting off his decision thereon. The objection was pressed before the lower Appellate Court but was overruled on the finding that there was evidence of joint association of the accused in the commission of the offence of receiving stolen property, and that the Magistrate had properly exercised the discretion in him by the section 117 (4) of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The plea has been taken pointedly before us.

We have been taken through the long and voluminous evidence of both the parties in the present case. The learned Counsel for the petitioners has urged strenuously that the evidence, such as that has been adduced in the present case, does not show that there was any association of the accused persons for the purpose of perpetrating the offense of receiving stolen property. The learned Assistant Government Advocate, on the other hand, has read the evidence with his comments throughout for the purpose of refuting the argument of the defense and for saying that the evidence was sufficient for establishing that the accused were acting in concert for the purpose of committing the offense for which they have been charged. We have given our anxious consideration to the points urged before us on both sides and we have come to the conclusion that the evidence given in the case, voluminous though it is, has not carried the case of the prosecution an inch further than what was stated in the report of the Sub-Inspector upon which the proceeding under section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code had been founded, and what has been shown to us already is insufficient for establishing any criminal association. The learned Assistant Government Advocate has relied upon the same witnesses that have been referred to in the judgment of the Trial Court for the purpose of showing association of the accused persons for committing the offence in question, and I am extremely indebted to my learned brother for furnishing me with an analysis of that evidence which I here quote in extenso with his kind permission: "The witnesses to whom the learned Government-Advocate referred on the question of association were Nos. 5, 6, 7, 33 to 38, 41 to 48, 110 and 111.

"Witnesses Nos. 5, 6, and 7, are Chaukidars of Aunta and Mokameh Ghat. I take witness No. 5 as a sample of this part of evidence. He says that the accused are of bad character and receive stolen property from goods shed coolies at the Ghat and that all the eight accused persons sit and associate together. Evidently, this statement is not relevant to proof of association 'in the matter under enquiry' required by section 117 (4).

"The other witnesses are chiefly cultivators of Aunta. I shall give some sample of their evidence. P. W. No. 33 says that all the accused associate together and send goods together by boat and by cart. This is not evidence of the required association. P. W. No. 34 speaks generally about the accused; he says that they receive stolen property and that they associate together and consult together about the despatching of the property by boat and by bullock cart. In cross-examination, however, he refers specifically only to Jai, Rajaram and Balgobind as sitting together at each other's house and says that he does not remember about the other accused persons and that he only referred in his examination in chief to these three. This is, therefore, no evidence of general association. P.W. No. 35 only says that they associate jointly and send their goods by boat and cart. P. W. No. 36 admits that he has never seen the accused purchasing from coolies and consequently his evidence comes to nothing. P. W. No. 37 says that the accused associate together and when they have got consignments together, they send them together by boat and cart. The value of this evidence is shown in his cross-examination by Pershadi where he said that he had been seeing Pershadi taking goods by cart and when asked what he was taking he said that it was Rainchi and Tissi that he was sending to Lakhisarai. The strongest statement is that made by witness No. 46, who says that the accused associate and consult together in purchasing and disposing of property. This statement, however, disappears completely in cross-examination where he says, referring to a meeting of Jai, Jhari, Pershadi and Rajaram, that he did not hear what they were saying or whether they were saying any thing. That is why I said they associate and consult togther in purchasing and disposing of the property."

The evidence of all the witnesses of this group is similar in character and is equally vague and indefinite.

Witness No. 110 says that the accused associate together and consult together and send their goods away together. In cross-examination he admits that he has never seen Balgobind sending away goods by cart: the specific instance that he gives of despatch of goods affects only five of the accused: and this statement is difficult to credit. He says the bags of grain were taken from the houses of Parshadi, Jhari, Raja Ram, Gajoo, Chilauri, and that he saw this from his house; but he admits that Parshadi's house is not visible from his, nor is Jhari Lal's nor are any of the other accused's. P.W. No. 111 says nothing about association in his examination in chief. The learned Assistant Government Advocate referred to a passage in his cross examination where he said that Parshadi sends goods jointly with the other accused and that he saw him last Bhado. If this witness had been a witness to the association of the accused it is difficult to understand why he was not examined in chief on the point, and this single instance which he referred to can hardly be seriously regarded as evidence of association. My estimate of the evidence has been the same.

There is, therefore, no evidance of association of the accused to justify a joint trial.

The learned Assistant Government Advocate, however, contends that the proceeding cannot be quashed even if it has transpired during the trial that the evidence given to prove such an association falls short of what is required in law. He contends that there is an allegation and, perhaps, an assertion in the report of the Police, that the accused belong to a gang whose main profession was to receive stolen property and, therefore, the charge or proceeding which was founded upon that report cannot be questioned in the subsequent stage of the trial, although the prosecution might have failed to establish it by evidence. This contention is based upon the decision in the case of Jogendra Kumar Nag v. Emperor (1). No doubt, in the judgment of Beacheroft, J., in the case referred to, the following passage occurs: "The legality of a joint trial must depend upon what is alleged for the prosecution not on the facts subsequently found to be true. In the very nature of things that must be so. Otherwise, we should be driven to this state of things, that in many cases, there could be no determination whether the joint trial was legal or not till the result of the case was known, a proposition which has only to be stated to be rejected. The case for the Crown was, that certain facts existed; the existence of such facts would undoubtedly prove such association as was necessary to justify joint trial; the legality of the trial could not depend on whether the Crown succeeded in proving those facts." With great respect to the learned Judge, I have no hesitation in dissenting from the view expressed therein. No doubt, in that case, the learned Judge came to the conclusion that there was evidence which, if believed, would justify a joint trial. The facts of that case are different from the present one where we find that there is no evidence of joint association which would justify the joint trial. If, therefore, there was evidence in that case, the question did not arise as to whether the joint trial would not be vitiated merely because there was an allegation on the part of the prosecution which was not established by evidence at the trial. The observation of the learned Judge is, therefore, an obiter dictum. Apart from it, if the mere allegation of the prosecution were to determine the legality of a trial there is no reason why an allegation by the accused refuting the prosecution allegation at the very outset of the trial should not be accepted and the accused tried separately. In the present case, the Police Officer, in the report, stigmatised the accused as belonging to a gang of receivers of stolen property. The accused, at the very first hearing, refuted this charge and said that they were not members of any gang and that the joint trial was illegal. Why should the allegation of the prosecution be preferred to that of the accused for the purpose of initiating a joint trial? There is no justification in principle for this differentiation. What is sauce for the gander is sauce for the goose. We are, on the other hand, fortified in our opinion by the decision of a Divisional Bench of this Court in the case of Godhan Ahir v. Emperor (2): At page 10* Mullick, J., observed as follows: "It has been strongly contended that there is no evidence of habitual mischief to bring the petitioners within the operation of section 110 (d) of the Criminal Procedure Code, nor of any association such as would justify a joint trial, nor any specific finding as to the part which each of the accused took in the acts which have been held to constitute habitual mischief. These are matters, however, which must be the subject of the new trial, which we now direct the Magistrate to hold. The Magistrate, of course, will bear in mind that a joint trial is not permissible unless there is evidence of something in the nature of conspiracy or of concert in respect of the various acts of habitual mischief to which the witnesses have deposed." In the above quotation the lines have been underlined (italicised) by me. We, therefore, hold that the joint trial of the accused persons was illegal.

The learned Assistant Government Advocate then contends that section 117 (4) is permissive and gives ample discretion to the Magistrate to try the accused persons under section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code either individually or jointly. This is the argument which has also been advanced by the lower Appellate Court in support of this trial. Clause (4) of section 117 of the Code of Criminal Procedure runs as follows: "Where two or more persons have been associated together in the matter under enquiry, they may be dealt with in the same or separate enquiries as the Magistrate shall think just." Ordinarily, under section 110 of the Code of Criminal Procedure every person has to be tried separately for the offences enumerated therein. Clause (4) of section 117, Criminal Procedure Code only permits the Magistrate to try "two or more persons jointly when they have associated together in the matter under enquiry."

In other words, a joint trial is only permissible when two or more persons have been associated for the purpose of committing the offences mentioned in section 110, clauses (a) to (f), which are under enquiry. But for clause (4) of section 117 of the Code of Criminal Procedure a joint trial would not have been in any case permitted. The circumstances mentioned therein, namely, the association of several persons in the commission of the offences mentioned in section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code must be established in order to entitle the Magistrate to try several persons jointly. This contention of the learned Assistant Government Advocate is, therefore, also overruled.

Lastly, it has been contended that the joint trial of the accused cannot be set aside unless it has prejudiced the accused persons. This argument cannot be advanced seriously, for, in a case under section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code in which the evidence of bad character of the accused persons and of the individual nefarious acts committed by them from the integral parts of the offence, it is impossible to conceive that the evidence led against one will not at all prejudice the case of the other accused persons assembled together in the same dock.

Looking into the evidence, we are satisfied that the accused have been seriously prejudiced in the trial by the evidence in the present case just in the same way as the Sub-Inspector of Police was prejudiced against all the accused on account of having found evidence against some of them. We, therefore, hold that the joint trial in this case was illegal and without jurisdiction. The convictions of the accused persons and the order passed against them under section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code must be set aside. It will be open to the Magistrate to try the accused separately if he finds that the evidence is sufficient in the case of each accused person.

All the trouble would have been saved had the Magistrate not persisted in trying the accused persons jointly in spite of repeated objections at every stage of the trial on their behalf and notably on behalf of the prosecution itself. The Magistrate in such matters should not brush aside the suggestion of the Public Prosecutor in charge of the case who knows how far he can establish criminal association by actual evidence which the Magistrate cannot anticipate. This is a salutory principle which the Magistrate ignored in this case and took upon himself the responsibility of acting both as a Public Prosecutor and as a Judge with the result that the calculation of the Magistrate to save time and trouble of trying the accused persons separately has come to naught and there has been serious waste of time and possibly prejudice to the case.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 9, 531—Appeal made over to Additional Sessions Judge for hearing—Appeal ultimately heard by Sessions Judge himself—Jurisdiction, question of.

Where a Sessions Judge makes over a criminal appeal for decision to an Additional Sessions Judge working in the same jurisdiction as himself and empowered to try cases or appeals made over to him by the Sessions Judge but subsequently, after notice to the parties, hears the appeal himself, he does not act outside his jurisdiction inasmuch as the making over of a case is not a "transfer" of the case.

The absence of any provision corresponding to section 531, Criminal Procedure Code, in respect of cases tried within the same Sessions Division by a lawfully appointed Judge of that Sessions Division whether he be the Sessions Judge or an Additional Sessions Judge shows that the Legislature did not think that any doubt as to the jurisdiction of such Judges could arise in view of the wording of section 9 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

Criminal revision from an order of the Sessions Judge, Gorakhpur, dated the 2nd of August 1921.

FACTS.—This case first came up for hearing before Mr. Justice Linsday who was of opinion that the learned Sessions Judge having once transferred the case to the Second Additional Sessions Judge, had no authority to withdraw the case and to dispose of it himself, but as His Lordship considered that this question would become up for decision again in view of the numerous Judgeships in which Additional Judges are employed he referred the matter to a Bench of two Judges. The matter then came up for hearing before Mr. Justice Piggott and Mr. Justice Walsh.

Mr. T. N. Ohadha, for the Applicants.

Mr. R. Malcomson, Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—In the Court of Session of Gorakhpur, as established under section 9 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, there is a Sessions Judge and there are, or have been, also two Additional Sessions Judges. There was a criminal appeal filed by Birju and others against their conviction by a Magistrate. So far as the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure go, any one of the Judges of the Court of Session competent to exercise jurisdiction in the said Court could lawfully have heard that appeal. For the convenience of the administration, the Local Government had limited the powers of the Second Additional Sessions Judge to the trial of cases or appeals made over to him by the Sessions Judge. This particular appeal was made over to the Second Additional Sessions Judge, but circumstances subsequently occurred which made it more convenient for the Sessions Judge to hear the appeal himself. After proper notice to the parties he proceeded to do so. The question has been raised whether in so doing he acted outside his jurisdiction. We find nothing in the Code of Criminal Procedure to suggest that the jurisdiction of the Sessions Judge of Gorakhpur in respect of this appeal had been ousted in consequence of any arrangement which he might previously have made for the convenient disposal of the work of that Sessions Court. We do not think this is a case of transfer. The expression used in the Notification is "made over to be tried," and section 9 of the Criminal Procedure Code simply gives jurisdiction to all Judges and Additional Sessions Judges of each Court of Session to which they may be appointed. If this appeal had been heard by a Judge who was not a Judge of the Sessions Division of Gorakhpur, section 531 of the Criminal Procedure Code would have prohibited interference except upon the ground that a failure of justice had been occasioned by the hearing of the appeal in the wrong Sessions Division. We see no reason whatever for holding that there has been a failure of justice in this case. From one point of view, it might be said that the provisions of section 531 aforesaid applied a fortiori to the present case. We are more inclined to hold that the absence of any corresponding provision in respect of cases tried within the same Sessions Division by a lawfully appointed Judge of that Sessions Division, whether he be the Sessions Judge or an Additional Sessions Judge, shows that the Legislature did not think that any doubt as to the jurisdiction of such Judges could arise in view of the wording of section 9 of the Code. We are satisfied that there is no cause for our interference. We dismiss this application.

Criminal reference by the Session Judge, Darbhanga.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is a reference by the Sessions Judge of Darbhanga recommending that the conviction of and the sentence passed upon the accused under section 420/511, Indian Penal Code by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Samastipore be set aside.

The accused was a clerk employed at the Samastipore Central Sugar Company and as such in charge of weighing the carts of sugar canes upon the machine and to enter the weights thereof in the Weighment Register prescribed for the purpose. That register contains a column headed "Weighment" and is divided into three sub-columns (1) Gross, (2) Tare, and (3) Net. Carts with sugar canes loaded thereon used to be weighed upon the machine and the gross weight of the sugar-canes and the carts used to be entered in sub-column (1). The carts were then emptied and were again weighed, and this weight entered in sub column (2). In sub column 3 was shown the net weight of sugar-canes by substracting the weight of empty carts noted in sub-column (2) from the gross weight entered in sub-column (1). Upon the net weight of sugar-canes mentioned in column No. 3 payments used to be made to the sellers according to the current market rate of sugar canes.

The accused went on leave for three days towards the end of February 1921, and one Hirdai Narain acted for him during those days. Hirdai Narain suspected that the accused was showing more weight of the carts in the Register than the actual weight with a view to cause loss to the factory and that this he used to do in collusion with the suppliers of sugar-canes probably on receiving some illegal gratification from them. Hirdai Narain (P. W. No. 6) reported his suspicion to the Head Clerk, Kanto Choudhry, (P. W. No. 2) who in his turn reported the matter to the Assistant Superintendent (P. W. No. 1). Under the directions of the Assistant Superintendent the Head Clerk awaited the arrival of the cart of one Nathuni on the 2nd of March. Nathuni's cart was weighed by the accused and the gross weight thereof was entered in the register as 16 maunds, 30 seers. As the cart passed, the Head Clerk stopped it from being emptied and took it back to the weighment machine and re-weighed it. He found that the weight was 14 maunds, 20 seers. While the Head Clerk was weighing the cart, the accused changed the figure ".6" in the register into "12" by altering "6" into "2". The matter was then reported to the Assistant Superintendent who sent the letter (Exhibit 1) to the Sub-Inspector of Police. After investigation, the accused was put on his trial.

The Magistrate found the facts summarised above as having been satisfactorily proved by evidence. The learned Sessions Judge also has accepted the facts as having been proved, but he is of opinion that upon the facts the accused is not guilty of an attempt to cheat. He has accordingly referred the case to this Court, under section 438 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, for quashing the conviction of the accused.

The case appeared to be somewhat important and intricate, and I, therefore, requisitioned the assistance of the learned Assistant Government Advocate, which he has very gladly rendered to me.

I have considered the authorities relied upon by the learned Sessions Judge: Hurjee Mall v. Imam Ali Sircar (1) and Queen-Empress v. Dhundi (2) and those cited by the learned Assistant Government Advocate Regina v. Padala Venkatasami (3) and Queen-Empress v. Paku (4).

There is no doubt that the accused did enter false figures in the register showing a greater quantity of sugar-canes than was actually supplied by Nathuni. There is also no doubt that by so doing he intended to cheat the Company by making it pay a higher sum to Nathuni than he was entitled to. The clerk was in charge of writing the Register and making entries in all the columns. He had written the first sub-column under the heading "Weight" namely, the gross weight of the sugar canes along with the cart. He had still to find out the net weight of the sugar-canes for which the Company was liable to pay the price to the supplier. This, no doubt, was a mere matter of arithmetic, inasmuch as the weight of Nathuni's cart, namely, 5 maunds and 30 seers, was a constant quantity as found from the entries on the previous dates for the whole of the month of February up to the 1st of March. Before the remaining two sub-columns, that is, "Tare" and "Net" weight were filled in, the Head Clerk intercepted and the accused was not able to write those columns. It is not known when the clerk was to make out this net weight, whether after the close of the weighment for the whole day of all the carts of sugar-canes supplied or at the end of the month, or as each cart was being weighed. The evidence on this point is not sufficient. At any rate, the time had not come and nothing was done by the accused to show that he was going to carry out his intention of cheating by entering those sub-columns of "Tare" and "Net" weight and fixing the liability absolutely upon the Company. Until that was done, the Company could not be said to have been cheated. Again, until that was done and the register had passed out of the control of the clerk and submitted to the Company as evidence of the liability of the Company, there was yet time for the clerk to change his mind or intention and, as put by Brodhurst, J., in the case of Queen Empress Dhundi, (2) "from prudence, if not from penitence". We have to assume that better reasons would prevail at any moment and the man would change his intention to commit a sin or crime before the actual consummation thereof; and until he has done all in his power to let his action be out of his control, so that the commission of the sin or the crime would be a natural effect of the actions already committed, there is still a mere preparation for the commission, and not an attempt to commit the offence or the sin. That learned Judge, in the decision referred to above, says: "It is to be noted that the act or omission must be one that causes, or is likely to cause, damage to such person, damage or loss, etc. But here the mere certificate by itself and until endorsed, and until further action had been taken upon it, could not possibly have caused loss or damage to any person." This is also the view supported by the decision in the case of Regina v. Padala Venkatasami (3). Mr. Mayne in his commentary has also laid down the dictum of an American Jurist that there is a wide difference between the preparation and an attempt to commit an offence. He says the preparation consists in devising or arranging means necessary for the commission of an offence, an attempt is the direct movement towards the commission after preparations are made.

(1) 8 C. W. N. 278; 1 Cr. L. J. 124.
(2) 8 A. 501 at p. 506; A. W. N. (1886) 125; 5 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 122.
(3) 3 M. 4; 1 Weir 543; 1 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 559.

I, therefore, agree with the view taken by the learned Sessions Judge that the writing of the false figure in the register had not passed from the stage of preparation into that of an attempt to commit the offence of cheating. It appears to me that the accused was tried under a wrong section. The accused came clearly within the purview of section 477 (a) of the Indian Penal Code, which relates to the falsification of an account-book by a clerk or a servant and I wonder why this section was not taken advantage of.

In view, however, of the age of the accused and of its being the first offence, I do not think any advantage will now be gained by re trying the accused. The Magistrate, while giving a lenient punishment to the accused, observed that the accused is a young man and does not appear to belong to a class of confirmed criminals. The accused has already been in Jail for about five or six days, and I hope this will be a warning to him and he will reform himself and really repent for what he did and would try to lead an honest life.

I accept the reference and set aside the conviction and the sentence.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 517—Property in custody of Police—Delivery to one party—Return to another party.

Section 517 of the Criminal Procedure Code is not applicable to a case where the property has already passed out of the custody of a Court.

Therefore, a party who has taken delivery from the Police of crops attached cannot be ordered to return the same to the opposite party.

Application against an order passed by the District Magistrate, Monghyr, dated the 28th April 1920.

Mr. Akbary, for the Petitioner.

Mr. G. C. Pal, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application against an order passed by the District Magistrate of Monghyr, dated 28th April 1920, directing the first party to return certain crops to the second party of which they had taken delivery from the Police. The order, as it stands, cannot be supported under the law.

The learned Vakil appearing for the opposite party seeks to justify this order under section 517 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Section 517 of the Criminal Procedure Code, however, is not applicable to a case where the property has already passed out of the custody of the Court. It is perfectly clear, on the order of the Magistrate himself, that the petitioner had taken delivery of the property from the Police. Whether the delivery of this property to the petitioner by the Police was right or wrong under the law, is not a matter which can in the least affect the question which I have to decide. The fact remains that the property had already been restored to the first party and neither the Court nor the Police had the custody of that property. That being so, section 517 cannot apply. Section 517 does not contemplate double restoration. There was nothing in the custody of the Court which could be restored. Therefore, the order of the Magistrate directing the petitioner to return the crops to the second party of which the petitioner has taken delivery from the Police must be set aside.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 300, thirdly—Death caused by single blow—Offence—Criteria for determining.

Where a person causes the death of another by a single blow from a stick, the criteria for determining whether or not he has committed the offence of murder, are, the nature of the weapon used, its size and weight, the manner in which it is used, and the actual injuries caused; if the injuries are so severe and uncommon as to indicate the use of terrific force, the offence falls under section 300, thirdly, of the Penal Code, i. e., that he intended to cause injury sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death, even though the weapon used is not such as would of necessity have caused fatal injury. Appeal against a capital sentence passed by the Sessions Judge, Prome.

Mr. Maung Lat, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant, Nga Khan, had been away from home for a few days and on his return his uncle in-law, Tha Dun E, went to see him. They sat in Nga Khan's house. Then, Aung Kin, who is his uncle twice removed, joined them. Shortly after, Po Khaing, the deceased, joined them. After the four men had chatted for a while deceased went down followed by Aung Kin and Tha Dun E They had only gone a few yards when Nga Khan followed, picked up the exhibit bamboo and struck Po Khaing a heavy blow on the head from behind. He then ran off to the headman's house. Po Khaing fell and died almost immediately. To the headman Nga Khan said that Po Khaing and Aung Kin had come into his compound armed with dahs and he wanted the headman to come and enquire. Almost immediately after, Aung Kin arrived and told the headman that Nga Khan had struck Po Khaing and he did not know whether he would live or die. The headman told Pan Tha who was there to watch Nga Khan and went to Po Khaing. He found him dead and took charge of a bamboo lying near him which Aung Kin told him was the weapon used. Nga Khan was arrested and sent with deceased and the bamboo to the Police Station where Pan Tha made a clear report.

There is no ground for doubting the evidence. The two principal witnesses are connections of accused and it is not suggested that either has any ground for falsely charging him. Another witness, Tha Han, who was in a house near by corroborates them. No motive for the assault is forthcoming and none is suggested. In cross-examination it was suggested that the men had been drinking, but there seems to be no substance in this and it is clear that none of them were to any extent affected by drink. The defence is the right of private defence. Nga Khan says Aung Kin and Po Khaing entered his compound armed with dahs and the latter demanded a debt of ten pies and then thrust at him with a dah. He jumped down, picked up a small bamboo lying there as his house was being built and waved it and ran to the headman for protection. That any of the men had dahs is denied by all. Nga Khan did mention dahs to the headman but it is significant that he did not tell this story to the headman. It seems to be an afterthought and it is clearly a false tale as the blow that killed Po Khaing was dealt from behind.

Only one blow was struck and with a hollow bamboo 5 feet, $11\frac{1}{4}$ inches long and $4\frac{1}{2}$ inches in circumference. It weighed 116 tolas. There was a contused lacerated wound $3\frac{1}{2}$ inches long and 1 inch broad and scalp deep exposing the underlying bone on the right parietal bone 5 inches above the right ear. The sagittal suture was so loosened that the skull could be practically divided into two parts. On the right side there was a lineal fracture of both tables of the skull 4 inches long and 4 inches from the right ear. The skull was of normal thickness and presented no sign of being abnormally brittle. The loosening of the whole suture is extremely uncommon and indicates that very great force was used.

That Nga Khan caused the death of Po Khaing is clearly established and, indeed, having regard to the defence set up, it can only be taken to be admitted. The question, therefore, is whether, in striking him this one blow on the head, he intended to cause bodily injury sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death, or merely injury that was likely to cause death. Having regard to the weapon used, the violence of the blow inflicted, and the part on which the blow was given, an intention to cause any lesser injury cannot be considered.

In the present case the weapon used was not one that would of necessity cause fatal injury but it was, nevertheless, a very dangerous weapon to use on a man's head. The length gives a leverage that enables a very serious blow to be given. It weighed 116 tolas. Very great force was employed in giving the blow. How capricious are injuries to the head in their after effects is pointed out in Shwe Hla U v. King Emperor (1) and we agree with the opinion expressed in Shue Ein v. King Emperor (2) that, speaking generally, where a man strikes another on the head with a not very formidable weapon, one blow only, no greater intention can be attributed to him than that of causing injury likely to cause death. But each case must depend on its own facts, on the circumstances surrounding the assault, on the motive and the particular weapon used. If accused had been actuated by a fierce motive urging him on to commit serious hurt and if he had used a heavy male bamboo, or a weighted stick or club, then, having regard to the injury actually caused and to the great violence used, we should have had no course open to us but to hold him guilty of murder. As it is, the case is very near the border line, and requires careful consideration. We do not know the motive, and something seems to us to have been concealed by the more important prosecution witnesses.

We would note, once more, that the weapon used was a long and heavy one, and that uncommonly great force must have been used by appellant, as evidenced by the actual injuries caused by him in the case of a normal skull. The case thus differs very materially from the case of Shwe Ein v. King-Emperor (2) and Nga Na Bin v. King Emperor (3) in which it was held that death caused by a single blow with a stick was, in those specific instances, not murder but an offence punishable under the first portion of section 304 of the Indian Penal Code.

In our judgment it would be most unsafe to suggest that, in all cases where death is caused by a single blow from a hollow bamboo, the offence is not murder, i. e., that the sole criterion is the nature of the weapon used. The size, and the weight of the stick, the manner in which it is used, and the actual injuries caused by the blow must all be considered. Here the injury caused was so severe and uncommon, and the force used must have been so terrific, that we are of the opinion that the offence of the appellant fell under section 300, thirdly, Indian Penal Code, i. e., that he intended to cause injury sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. He was, therefore, rightly convicted of murder. However, since he is a young man, and we do not know the motives which actuated him, and we are not certain that we are in possession of all essential facts, we do not consider it necessary to confirm the sentence of death.

The conviction is maintained and the sentence reduced to one of transportation for life.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for damages for breach of a contract brought by the plaintiffs appellants Messrs. Mangal Sain Duni Chand, a firm of cloth-merchants at Delhi, under the following circumstances: On the 17th November 1916 the parties entered into a contract under which the defendants' firm undertook to supply to the plaintiffs' firm twenty-five cases of flowered Italian of the firm of Messrs. S. Sundar and Company of February and March shipments at a certain price, which is not in dispute in the present case. The contract was made on the Delhi-Hindustani Mercantile Association indent form and the material portions of the contract on which the parties were at issue are the following :—

Clause (8) "Should the goods of the contract or any portion of them not be shipped by the specified time, the contract for the quantity so delayed shall at our (plaintiffs') option if exercised within three days either be cancelled without an allowance or such extension of time as you (defendants) may ask for shall be granted by us as allowances as under, otherwise the goods shall be cancelled."

Clause (15) "Any claim on dispute arising in connection with this contract unless an amicable settlement can be arrived at must be referred to arbitration in Delhi in accordance with the survey and arbitration rules of the Delhi-Hindustani Mercantile Association (except when we refuse to accept and pay the draft in which case the goods may be surveyed at the port of discharge). When the arbitrators or the surveyors disagree and do not appoint an umpire, the Delhi-Hindustani Mercantile Association if applied to by either party to the dispute shall appoint an umpire. The decision of the arbitrators or surveyors or of the umpire shall be final and binding on both parties.

"It is further agreed that if within twenty clear days (should the 20th be a Sunday it shall not count) after being requested by letter addressed to their usual place of business, either party fail to appoint an arbitrator or surveyor ready and willing to act the decision of the arbitrator or surveyor appointed by the other party shall be in like manner binding on both parties. It shall be obligatory on the party raising a dispute to see that a survey takes place within twenty clear days from the date of their letter raising the dispute, failing which they lose the right to survey."

The defendants had purchased these goods from Messrs. S. Sundar and Company, and on being informed by their sellers that their shipment would be delayed, they wrote to the plaintiffs on the 18th November 1916, a letter, marked as Exhibit P 3, informing them of the late shipment, and calling upon them to exercise their option of either cancelling the goods or of allowing them (defendants) an extension of time for delivery as required by clause (8) of the indent. It was also stated in this letter that if no reply was received within two hours from the receipt of that letter, it will be understood that the goods had been cancelled. The plaintiffs' case is, that they agreed to the extension applied for, and that they gave intimation of this fact to the defendants by a telegram of the same date, which has, however, not been produced. The defendants deny the receipt of this telegram, and, beyond the bare statement of one Ram Gopal, who was examined as a party on behalf of the plaintiffs before the settlement of the issues, there is no evidence on the record direct or otherwise showing that such a telegram had ever been sent to the defendants. It is obvious that this statement is not evidence in the case, and does not, therefore, in any way help the plaintiffs in proving their contention that an extension had been agreed upon. The contention is certainly inconsistent with the letter which the plaintiffs allege to have written to the defendants on the same date, and a copy of which they themselves have placed on the record, marked as Exhibit P-12. This letter is to the following effect:—"Kal mal kharida tha aj late mangte ho, tar dikhao jab jawab dunga, i. e., "We had purchased the goods only yesterday, to-day you want late shipment, show us the original telegram when we will give you our final answer." This clearly shows that the plaintiffs were not agreeable to an extension of time, or, at any rate, they were not prepared to give a final answer until they were satisfied that it was really a case of genuine and bona fide late shipment. Defendants do not admit the receipt of this letter, and it is beyond dispute that, like the telegram, this letter has also not been proved, but it is clear that, though the defendants may not be bound by this letter, the plaintiffs, who have produced it as one of the Exhibits in the case, are certainly bound thereby, and cannot repudiate it. It is, however, admitted by the defendants that, in spite of the fact that no reply was received by them to their letter (P 3) requiring plaintiffs to exercise their option under clause (3), the contract for some reason or other was allowed to remain subsisting and was not cancelled. No correspondence appears to have passed between the parties until the 18th June 1917, when the defendants again wrote to the plaintiffs that out of the 25 cases indented for 20 cases will be shipped in June and July, and that the plaintiffs should cancel the goods or extend time for delivery owing to the late shipment thereof. This was in consequence of a similar letter received by the defendants from their own sellers Messrs. Sham Sundar—Sham Lal, on the same date, giving them 3 days' time, as required by clause (8) of the indent, to exercise their option. On the 20th June the plaintiffs replied to this letter saying that the defendants' letter of the 18th June had been received by them on the 20th, and that they had written to their own vendees giving them intimation of the late shipment and that they would finally send their answer after they had heard from the latter in reply. On the 22nd June plaintiffs sent another letter to the defendants saying that they had heard from their vendees who wanted to see the original papers and the letters connected with this contract received from the manufacturers at home, and that they were not prepared to cancel the goods. On the 28th June the defendants wrote to the plaintiffs the letter, marked as Exhibit (P 5), intimating that as they had failed to exercise their option within three days, the time allowed by the indent, the contract with respect to 20 cases had ipso facto come to an end. Invoices and patterns with respect to four of the remaining five cases were sent to the plaintiffs along with this letter. In reply to this the plaintiffs wrote the following important letter to the defendants, which is marked as Exhibit P-15, and which has been entirely ignored by the Court below:—

"Apki chithi kal mili, apne likha bijak pattern bheite hain magar bijak hamain koi nahin mila,' aur pattern apka wapis kara jata hai, kyun yeh mal ham cancel karte hain, isko

note karna." The heading of this letter is "25 cases flowered Italian.' Translated literally into English, the letter reads "Received your letter yesterday, you write that you are sending invoices and patterns but we have not received any invoice, and we are returning the patterns to you, the reason being that we are cancelling these goods. Note this fact." In reply, the defendants again returned the invoices and patterns with respect to the four cases to the plaintiffs saying that these four cases were not late, and that the plaintiffs were consequently bound to accept delivery thereof. After some correspondence, and a notice on the part of the defendants that if delivery was not taken with respect to these four cases, they will be sold at plaintiffs' risk, the latter took delivery and made payments to the defendants on the 23rd August 1917. One of the cases was admittedly sunk in transit, and there is no dispute now with respect to this case or the remaining four cases of which delivery had been accepted by the plaintiffs.

Now, there is evidence on the record that in the months of June and July which, according to the terms of the contract, "would be the proper time for the arrival of the February and March shipments there was no demand for these goods and that the prices prevailing in the market were lower even than the contract prices. It was only towards the end of July and the beginning of August that the prices began to rise, and we, accordingly, find the plaintiffs writing to the defendants on the 5th September 1917 demanding invoices and patterns of the two cases which, according to their own letter P. 15, dated the 28th June 1917, had already been cancelled. On the 12th September, the defendants wrote back in reply that the goods had been cancelled and that the plaintiffs were consequently not entitled to demand delivery thereof. Upon the receipt of this letter plaintiffs sent a registered notice to the defendants on the 19th September denying that any cancellation of the goods had taken place and intimating that they were appointing Mr. S. Sundar as their surveyor and that the defendants should also nominate their surveyor within twenty days as required by clause (15) of the indent, failing which they will proceed to have an ex parte survey held. On the 8th October 1917 Mr. S. Sundar sent the following letter to the defendants :—

Delhi, 8th October 1917.

To

Messrs. Mansa Ram-Gordhan Das,
Delhi.

From

S. Sundar and Co,
Delhi.

Re: Your dispute with Messrs. Mathra Parshad-Bishambar Nath, Dyed Brocades.

Dear Sirs,

I, as you know, represent the buyers, and to-day, being the last day of survey, I beg to tell you that if you fail to nominate your surveyor within seven days hence, I am prepared to write my report on the basis of your papers to be sent to me and on the basis of those produced before me by the buyers, otherwise I will proceed ex parte after seven days.

Yours faithfully.
S. Sundar and Co."

No reply was admittedly sent by the defendants to this notice, presumably because there was nothing to survey and also because they had no dispute with Messrs. Mathra Parshad-Bishambar Nath which could possibly be referred to the surveyors. Curiously enough, however, the surveyor, Mr. S. Sundar, gave an ex parte award on the 16th October 1917 holding defendants liable for damages to the extent of Rs. 225 per case, and declaring plaintiffs entitled to a decree for Rs. 4,500 for the twenty cases originally indented for but which had remained undelivered. On the basis of this ex parte survey or award the plaintiffs instituted the present suit for the recovery of Rs. 4,537, which amount is composed of the following three items :—

4,500,	damages awarded by the surveyor for non delivery of 20 cases.
32	fees paid to the surveyor.
5	stamp for the survey report.
4,537	TOTAL.

The main points on which the suit was resisted were (1) that no extension of time for late shipment had been allowed by the plaintiffs either in November 1916 or in June 1917 and that the contract was consequently ipso facto cancelled with respect to the twenty cases in question according to the provisions of clause (8) of the indent; (2) that the plaintiffs had cancelled the contract by their letter P. 15 dated the 18th June 1917, and were consequently not entitled to claim any damages for non delivery; (3) that the survey was invalid and of no binding effect on the defendants and that consequently no suit could be maintained thereon, and (4) that even if the contract with respect to the twenty cases in question was not cancelled the plaintiffs were not entitled to claim damages at a rate higher than that prevailing in the months of June and July, the date on which the breach according to the terms of the contract had taken place. In the months of June and July there was admittedly no market for these goods and the rates were lower than the contract prices, and consequently plaintiffs were not entitled to any damages in this suit.

The Trial Court found on all points in favour of the defendants and dismissed the plaintiffs' suit. The learned District Judge took a most extraordinary view of the case and, reversing the findings of the Trial Court, decreed the claim in full. Against this decision of the lower Appellate Court the defendants have preferred a second appeal to this Court and we have heard Mr. Sardha Ram on behalf of the appellants, while Mr. Tek Chand has addressed us on behalf of the respondents.

There can be no doubt that, so far as the merits of the case are concerned, the plaintiffs-respondents have no case. Admittedly, the defendants asked for an extension for the first time on the 18th November 1916 and unless the plaintiffs can show that an extension was allowed, it must be held that the contract remained subsisting in its original form without any modifications as to the time for delivery. It has been contended by Bakshi Tek Chand that the lower Appellate Court has found that the time for the shipment of the goods had been extended, and that this being a finding of fact cannot be challenged in second appeal. Now, we do not find any evidence on the record in support of this finding. The telegram of the 18th November 1916, alleged to have been sent in reply to the defendants' letter of the same date, has not been proved and there is no other evidence, circumstantial or otherwise, on which this finding could be sustained. It has been repeatedly held that, where a finding of fact is arrived at upon no evidence, the finding is liable to be set aside in second appeal. We accordingly hold that it has not been established that any extension of time was granted in the month of November 1916. Plaintiffs do not allege any extension in the month of June 1917, and it is consequently unnecessary to discuss the question of the alleged extension any further.

The next question for consideration is, whether defendants have proved that the goods had been cancelled. In our opinion the whole correspondence, beginning from the 18th June 1917 and ending with the plaintiffs' letter P. 15 of the 28th June 1917, conclusively shows that a cancellation of the twenty cases in question had taken place. It may be because the market for flowered Italian had gone down in these months and the plaintiffs wanted to protect themselves from all possible loss that they cancelled the goods, or it may be for some other unexplained reason, but the fact remains that the plaintiffs did send the letter marked as Exhibit P-15, dated the 28th June 1917, to the defendants and thus put an end to the contract. This letter is not denied by the plaintiffs, and Bakshi Tek Chand has not been able to explain how the contract could be held to be subsisting with respect to the twenty cases in the face of this direct admission on the part of his clients that the contract had been cancelled. The only ground he has been able to urge in support of the learned District Judge's finding to the contrary is that, here also, the finding as regards the non-cancellation of the goods is a finding of fact, and that we, sitting here as a Court of second appeal, are precluded from going behind this findings, however erroneous this finding may be. Now, we are quite prepared to concede that, ordinarily, grounds which impugn findings of fact cannot be entertained in second appeal: but where an Appellate Court bases a finding of fact upon one piece of evidence alone without considering the whole of the evidence bearing upon the point the finding is not, in our opinion, binding on a Court of second appeal. A finding of fact to be binding on a Court of second appeal must be a judicial decision reached on a consideration of the whole of the evidence, and where it appears that all the available evidence has not been considered, the High Court will interfere and should interfere in second appeal. See Debi Lal Singh v. Hriday Mahto (1), Sheikh Mohammad v. Janki (2), Mahraj Singh v. Pitambar Singh (3), Nathu Shah v. Haveli Shah (4). In the present case the letter of the plaintiffs of the 28th June 1917, which was really the sole foundation of the defendants' case, and which conclusively proved the cancellation of the contract, has been entirely ignored by the learned District Judge for which there is absolutely no justification. Other evidence on the record, more especially clause (8) of the indent and the letters which were sent by the defendants to the plaintiffs in the month of June 1917, have been completely misread and misapprehended by the learned Judge. Under these circumstances, we do not think that the findings of fact arrived at by the learned District Judge, vitiated as they are by an utter disregard of all rules of evidence, can be held to be binding on us in second appeal. After a careful review of all the correspondence that passed between the parties we cannot come to any other conclusion but that the contract with respect to the twenty cases in question was cancelled by the plaintiffs, and that they were consequently not entitled to claim any damages for their non-delivery. But even if we were to keep the letter of the 28th June aside, there can be no doubt whatever that the contract with respect to these goods was otherwise put an end to by the parties in view of the provisions of clause (8) of the indent. The plain meanings of this clause are that the purchasers, on receiving information from their sellers that there will be a late shipment, will either cancel the goods or extend time for their delivery as may suit them best, and that they shall have three days time within which to make their choice. If an election is not made within three days, it will be understood that the purchasers are not willing to extend the time and that the contract is rescinded. This clause is generally inserted in commercial contracts in the interest of both the parties, the sellers as well as the purchasers. The object is to have a speedy decision as to whether the purchasers will accept late shipment or not. If the purchasers are unable to make up their minds speedily the law will take its own course, and the contract will be deemed to have been cancelled. It seems to us that there is no room for any doubt as to the construction of this clause. The defendants in this case gave an intimation to the plaintiffs on the 18th June that the goods were late. According to plaintiffs' own showing, this letter reached them on the 20th June. They could have made their choice up to the evening of the 23rd, either to cancel the goods or to accept late shipment. They did neither, but kept on shilly shallying. The fact that the defendants gave them 24 hours within which to make their choice is of no importance and does not affect the contract itself under which the plaintiffs had three days to make an election. In our opinion, the plaintiffs having failed to make their choice by the evening of 23rd June, the contracts ipso facto came to an end, and we are wholly at a loss to understand how, under these circumstances, the plaintiffs could treat the contract as still subsisting and claim performance when they by their own silence had allowed it to be rescinded.

The next point urged by Bakhshi Tek Chand is, that the question as to whether plaintiffs were or were not entitled to claim damages, in view of the defendants' plea that the goods had been cancelled was a dispute within the meaning of clause (15) of the indent, and that it could be decided only by arbitration as provided for by this clause. It was contended that the plaintiffs had, in accordance with the provisions of clause (15), appointed Mr. S. Sunder as their arbitrator, and that the defendants had failed to nominate one in spite of the fact that a notice had been given to them requiring them to do so. The ex parte award given by the arbitrator was, under the circumstances, claimed to be a perfectly good award, and it was contended that the defendants having committed a default were not entitled now to challenge its validity. We are unable to agree with this contention. Before a party can be held bound by an award, it must be shown that it was a valid award and that all the requirements of the law with respect to the appointment of an arbitrator and with regard to the actual reference to arbitration, had been duly fulfilled. The proceedings of the arbitrators must also be above board, and it must be shown that the arbitrator had given full opportiunities to both parties to appear and represent their case to him. In the present case, we do not understand what matters were referred to the arbitration of Mr. Sundar, and where was, in fact, the necessity to arbitrate? The contract with respect to the 20 cases now in suit had already been rescinded by mutual consent on the 28th June, and unless the whole thing was a huge swindle from beginning to end, one fails to see why the matter should have been at all referred to arbitration. Again, the notice given by Mr. Sundar to the defendants on the 8th October 1917 to nominate a surveyor within seven days was most defective and the defendants were fully justified in ignoring it. They had no dispute with Messrs. Mathra Parshad Bishambar Nath, and were consequently not bound to nominate a surveyor or an arbitrator on this notice in respect of a dispute with the plaintiffs which had been settled long before in June 1917. In our opinion, both the appointment of the arbitrator as well as the reference to arbitration were bad and not in accordance with the provisions of clause (8) of the indent. The arbitrator also does not appear to us to have acted quite fairly and squarely in this matter. His award is wholly one-sided and does not at all deal with the matter in dispute. He gives no finding as to whether an extension had or had not been agreed upon, and, if so, to what extent. He gives no finding as to whether the goods had or had not been cancelled in view of clause (8) of the indent and plaintiffs' own letter of the 28th June 1917. He gave no opportunity to the defendants to appear and to place their own version of the case before him. His letter of the 8th October 1917 related to some dispute with Messrs. Mathra Parshad-Bishamber Nath and cannot be taken as a valid notice to the defendants in respect of the matter in question. In short, the whole proceedings were most irregular, if not actually dishonest, and we have no hesitation in holding that the defendants are not bound by them.

(1) 58 Ind. Cas. 482; 2 U. P. L. R. (Pat.) 60.

(4) 65 Ind. Cas. 475; 1 L. L. J. 72.

There is only one more point which remains to be noticed. It has been contended on behalf of the defendants-appellants that the plaintiffs having failed to prove that they had agreed to late shipment or that they had granted an extension of time, they were still not entitled to claim any damages in this suit, even if the plea of cancellation of the goods put forward by the defendants was not established. Briefly put, the argument is that in a contract for the sale of goods the measure of damages upon a breach by the seller is the difference between the contract price and the market price on the date of the breach and not on any subsequent date. In the present case it is contended that the breach, if any, was in the months of June and July when, in accordance with the terms of the contract, the goods ought to have been supplied and were not delivered. Admittedly, the market price was lower than the contract price in these months and consequently plaintiffs had suffered no damages and were not entitled to claim any. In our opinion this is a perfectly valid contention. It is well settled that in a suit for breach of contract to deliver goods on a certain date the market price on that date is the standard for the computation of compensation and not on a later date on which the goods may have been demanded and refused. The position of a seller would be very precarious, indeed, if such were the case. He would be entirely at the mercy of his purchaser who could demand goods on any date he liked after the breach and then claim damages on the basis of the rates prevailing on that date if the goods remained undelivered. We are unable to hold that such could have been the intention of the Legislature in enacting section 73 of the Contract Act which is the only section under which compensation could be claimed and awarded in the present case and we, accordingly, find that the plaintiffs' suit was, in any case, bound to fail even if the plea of cancellation of the goods set up by the defendants was not established.

After a careful review of all the evidence and the circumstances of the case, we are of opinion that this appeal must be accepted and the order of the lower Appellate Court set aside.

We accordingly accept the appeal and, reversing the order of the District Judge, dismiss the plaintiffs' suit with costs throughout.

Mortgage—Foreclosure decree without impleading subsequent transferee—Suit to eject transferee, maintainability of—Proper remedy.

Where a purchaser from a mortgagee obtains a foreclosure decree without impleading a transferee from the mortgagor, for example a tenant whose rights were created subsequent to the mortgage, he cannot subsequently sue to eject him. His only remedy is to file a fresh suit for foreclosure against the transferee who would have an opportunity of redeeming him. [p. 504, col. 1.]

Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Amraoti, in Civil Appeal No. 175 of 1915, dated the 31st July 1918.

Mr R. N. Mudholkar, R. B., for the Appellants.

Dr. H. S. Gour, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The izara village of Takli was mortgaged to certain persons in 1899. The plaintiffs in 1910 purchased the rights of the mortgagors. Later, they also purchased the right of the mortgagees who had in the meantime obtained a preliminary decree for foreclosure. In 1911 the plaintiffs obtained a final foreclosure decree. In the present suit the plaintiffs sue for possession of nine fields alleging that the deceased husband of the defendant (Paramsukh) was a yearly tenant whose tenancy has terminated.

The defendant pleaded that he was a permanent tenant in virtue of a permanent lease granted previous to 1899. The learned District Judge has held that Paramsukh was a permanent tenant but that his tenancy was created in 1900 by a deed (Exhibit D-1). He holds that the creation of this tenancy was not an ordinary act of management.

The position then is, that the owners of the village executed a mortgage in 1899. Subsequently, they transferred certain rights in the village to the defendant. The plaintiffs foreclosed in a suit to which the defendant was not a party. They now sue to oust the defendant. The learned District Judge has held that this suit as laid will not lie. The plaintiff must file a fresh suit for foreclosure impleading the defendant. The defendant can then redeem the plaintiffs if he chose. The suit for possession has, therefore, been dismissed.

The first ground of appeal is not pressed. It is admitted that a question of law may be raised in first appeal.

It is next urged that as the Transfer of Property Act was not applicable to Berar in 1899 the mortgagees were not bound to implead subsequent transferees. It is sufficient to say that the Act was extended to Berar in 1907, and the suit for foreclosure was brought subsequent in 1907.

Ground No. 3 has no force.

It is next urged that the plaintiffs, in virtue of the foreclosure decree, obtained all the rights of the mortgagors at the date of the mortgage. They are, therefore, entitled to oust subsequent transferees and do not require to bring a fresh suit for foreclosure.

This question was considered in Hargu Lal Singh v. Gobind Rai (1). In that case the plaintiff had brought a suit for sale on a simple mortgage and had purchased the property at the sale held in execution. Their Lordships held that the decree for sale being in a suit to which the defendants, who had purchased part of the mortgaged property after the date of the mortgage, were not parties, had no effect as against them and the plaintiff's purchase at the sale held under the decree conferred on him no title as against these defendants. This decision was followed in Entholi Kizhakkikandy Kanaran v. Vallath Koylil Unnooli (2). The case of Radha Pershad Misser v. Monohur Das (3) deals with facts which bear a similarity to those in the case I am considering. A mortgaged certain property to B, agreeing not to grant a zarpeshgi lease of the mortgaged property. He subsequently granted a zarpeshgi lease to C. B, obtained a sale decree against A. on his mortgage and at the sale became the purchaser of the property. He brought a suit against C. to set aside the zarpeshgi lease and to obtain khas possession. His suit was dismissed. The learned Judge has remarked that the only course for the plaintiff would be to bring a suit against the zarpeshgir to have his right declared to sell the property to satisfy his mortgage-debt so as to give the zarpeshgir an opportunity of redeeming.

I see no reason to dissent from the decisions of three High Courts. The plaintiffs came into Court with the allegation that defendant was a yearly tenant; that is, they urged that the mortgagor could have ejected the defendant, and, therefore, they as his successors-in-title could do the same. Throughout the suit they have claimed a right to eject the defendant. Had the suit been for foreclosure other defences might have been raised. The defendant might have claimed the right to redeem and might have put forward various pleas regarding the amount due on the mortgage. If the defendant is a transferee the suit of the plaintiff must fail.

The only other point urged is, that Exhibit D-1, although a legal document, did not constitute a lease, but was merely an admission that the defendant had rights as lessee. This point has been considered by the learned District Judge. It seems quite clear that the parties intended to execute a legally binding document. There was no need for such a document if the executant merely intended to admit an existing state of things. This ground, therefore, fails. The appeal fails and is dismissed. The appellants must bear all costs in this Court. No argument was put forward in support of the cross-objection filed by the respondent. It is then sufficient to say that I do not see reason to interfere with the discretion of the lower Appellate Court with regard to costs. The objector must bear the costs of the cross-objection.

Appeal against a decree of the Additional District Judge, Noakhali, dated the 23rd January 1920, revereing that of the Munsif, First Court at Lakhipore, dated the 23rd July 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Jatindrakumar Sen Gupta, for the Appellant.—I beg to submit that my client cannot be evicted inasmuch as he is a settled raiyat having a right of occupancy. Section 49 of the Bengal Tenancy Act can have no operation against my client. It is a mistake on the part of the learned Judge to think that a homestead must, as a matter of course, be the only residential place of the raiyat. My point is that my client has his residence there. The Commissioner's report says that there is a hut on this homestead which is used for residential purposes. The learned Judge has erred in not following the authority of the case of Krishna Kanta Ghosh v. Jadu Kasya (1). A settled raiyat holding a homestead though as an under-raiyat acquires a raiyati right in that homestead.

Babu Komesh Chandra Sen, for the Respondent, reads section 182, Bengal Tenancy Act. 'Homestead' is not used as a generic term. It means a group of houses where a man has his habitation. The very word home imports the idea of permanent residence. 'Home' is defined in Oxford Dictionary as the fixed residence of a family. I submit that it is not his homestead as it is meant for his temporary use only.

Refers to Bhikariram Bhagat v. Maharaj Bahadur Singh (2).

As to admission of evidence I admit that there has been some impropriety.

Babu J. K. Sen Gupta, was not called upon to reply.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of an action of ejectment under section 49 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The Court of first instance dismissed the plaintiff's claim for ejectment on the ground that the defendants are settled raiyats in respect of the homestead from which the plaintiff wanted to eject them and that as such they could not be ejected under section 49 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. On appeal, the learned Additional District Judge held that the defendants had no occupancy right in the land in suit and were, therefore, liable to eviction under section 49.

The defendants have appealed and attacked the judgment of the Court of Appeal below on the ground that the finding arrived at by it with regard to the character of the homestead is not sufficient for the disposal of the issue. The learned Judge says in his judgment that "only a hut has been erected in this land for temporary use. It may exist from a long time as shown by Exhibit B. Still, it cannot be said to be the indispensable homestead of the defendants." The learned Judge seems to be under the impression that a homestead must necessarily be the only residential place of the raiyat of the village. He does not seem to be positive with regard to the character of the hut standing on this homestead.

It appears that in the Court of first instance a Commissioner was appointed to hold a local investigation and his report speaks of the existence of a hut on this homestead which is used for residential purposes by one of the defendants. The learned Judge does not refer to this piece of evidence. We are not sure if he has taken that into consideration in coming to a finding on this point.

The Court of Appeal below seems to have erred on another point. He states that an under-raiyat holding a homestead even if he happens to be a settled raiyat of the village can only acquire right of occupancy in the homestead by local custom or usage. As there is no evidence of such local custom or usage, the learned Judge has held that the defendants have failed to prove their raiyati right to the homestead. On this point there is sufficient authority of this Court for holding that a settled raiyat of the village holding a homestead, though as an under-raiyat or under a raiyat, acquires a raiyati right in that homestead, Krishna Kanta Ghosh v. Jadu Kasya (1).

The judgment of the Court of Appeal below not being satisfactory and the Court not having come to a distinct finding with regard to the character of the hut on the homestead in consideration of the whole evidence on the point, we are of opinion that this case ought to be remanded to that Court for a re-hearing of the appeal. We accordingly set aside the decree of the Court of Appeal below and send the case back for re-hearing on the merits.

There is one other point to which we like to draw the attention of the lower Appellate Court. On the 22nd January 1920 the learned Judge passed the following order: "Arguments heard. Copy of decree in T. Suit No. 210 of 1892 marked Exhibit 5 received in evidence subject to objection for the plaintiff appellant. Judgment will be delivered on 23rd January 1920." It is not clear from this order whether the evidence was admitted by the learned Judge before or after he had heard the arguments in the case. The order as it stands indicates that the additional evidence was received after the arguments. Apart from the impropriety of admitting evidence at that stage of the case, we may refer the learned Judge to the provisions of Order XLI, rule 27, Civil Procedure Code, and the observation of the Judicial Committee in the case of Kessowji Issur v., Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIII, r. 7 (3)—Suit in forma pauperis—Court-fee, payment of, during inquiry into pauperism, effect of—Withdrawal of application.

Where a person applies for leave to sue as a pauper, and along with his application presents a plaint, but during the course of the inquiry into his pauperism, he files the requisite Court-fee, the suit, for the purposes of limitation, must be treated as having been instituted on the day on which the original application for leave to sue as a pauper was made, and not on the day when the Court-fee was filed. The withdrawal of the application to sue as a pauper which is involved in the subsequent payment of the Court-fee is not equivalent to a refusal of permission such as is contemplated by rule 7 (3), Order XXXIII of the Civil Procedure Code. The withdrawal is an admission of nothing more than that at the time of payment the applicant is no longer a pauper. It is a submission to an order of dispauperisation under rule 9 (b), not to one of refusal of his original application. [p. 507, col. 1.]

Appeal against a decree passed by the Subordinate Judge, Balaghat, dated the 28th April 1919, in Civil Suit No. 48 of 1918.

Mr. K. V. Deoskar, for the Appellants.

Messrs. G. L. Subhedar and Abdul Rahim, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs sued as reversionary heirs of one Anupchand, a Maheśri Bania, who died about 1883. They alleged that his widow, Bakhtawar Bai, died on the 13th of August 1905; and on the 13th of August 1917, which was a Monday, they filed an application to be allowed to sue as paupers and a plaint with it. The other party denied their pauperism and an enquiry was opened. After the examination of some of the witnesses of both sides the plaintiffs, on the 9th of August 1918, put in the Court-fee stamps required for their plaint and the suit was registered. The claim was resisted on three points, the allegation that Bakhtawar Bai died on the 11th and not on the 13th of August 1905, the contention that as the application for leave to sue in forma pauperis was withdrawn the suit must be taken to have been instituted on the 9th of August 1918 and not on the 13th of August 1917, and the allegation that Sheodas, deceased, father of the defendant Gopikishan, had been adopted by Bakhtawar Bai as a son to her husband Anupchand in 1887.

It will be convenient to consider, first, the question of the date on which the suit is to be taken to have been instituted. In Skinner v. Orde (1) it was held by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, in circumstances which can in no way be distinguished from those of the present case, that the suit must be treated as if the plaint had been filed and registered on the day on which the original application for leave to sue as a pauper was made. This ruling was distinguished by the Allahabad High Court in Abbasi Begam v. Nanhi Begam (2) as having been given under the previous Civil Procedure Code, Act VIII of 1859, and not applying to the Code then in force, which was Act XIV of 1882. The latter Act was still in force when the Calcutta High Court, dissenting from the Allahabad view, held in Janakdhary Sukul v. Janki Koer (3) that, in this respect, there was no difference between the provisions of the two Acts. The correct decision of these two, whichever it may be, is still the correct decision under the present Code (Act V of 1908), which has made no change in the law in this particular matter. The learned Subordinate Judge preferred the Calcutta view, and I agree with him. But even if the decision in Skinner v. Orde (1) ought to be considered obsolete, there seem to me to be cogent reasons for thinking the same view is the correct view of the provisions of the present Procedure Code. The learned Judges of the Allahabad High Court seem to have regarded the withdrawal of the application, which is involved in subsequent payment of the Court-fees, as equivalent to a refusal of permission by the Court such as is contemplated by rule 7 (3) of Order XXXIII of the Code; that is to say, they regarded the payment as an admission that the applicant was not a pauper at the time he put in the original application. But the payment is an admission of nothing more than that the applicant is, at the time of payment, in possession of means to make it and is no longer a pauper, and the withdrawal is a submission to an order of dispauperisation under rule 9 (b), not to one of refusal of his original petition. Now, in the case of dispauperisation rule 9 and rule 11 clearly contemplate the continuance of the suit as a suit filed on the day on which the original application for leave to sue as a pauper was made. I hold, therefore, that the present suit was instituted on the 13th of August 1917.

Note.—The rest of this judgment is not material for the purposes of this report—[Ed.]

Mr. Pearey Lal Banerji, for the Appellants.

Dr. Kailash Nath Katju, Messrs. Haribans Sahai and Kanhya Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts out of which this appeal arises are as follows:—

One Ram Kirpal was an occupancy tenant of 31 bighas 9 biswas. He mortgaged 14 bighas 17 biswas in 1896 and in 1897; that is to say, there were two mortgages in favour of Sheonandan Singh. Ram Kirpal died before the present Tenancy Act came into force, that is, before 1902, and he was succeeded in the tenancy by his widow Musammat Suneta. It appears that the rent for the years 1309 and 1310 Faeli fell into arrears and the Zemindar brought a suit to eject Musammat Suneta and the mortgagees. This was decreed by the Trial Court and on the 16th of April 1904 the Zemindar got possession. Afterwards, however, on the 13th of September 1905, the ejectment proceedings were quashed by the Board of Revenue and the possession of Musammat Suneta, or rather, she having died, that of Baldeo Prasad as her representative, was restored on the 13th of October 1905. Thereafter, the mortgagees in 1908 brought a suit against Baldeo Prasad to recover possession. That suit was compromised and according to the compromise it was agreed that the mortgage money was ascertained to be Rs. 600 and the mortgagees were given possession of some of the original mortgaged plots. In 1916 Baldeo Prasad redeemed the mortgage and recovered possession of the whole. This suit was brought in 1917 by the plaintiffs who alleged that they were members of a joint undivided family with Ram Kirpal Singh at the time of his death 18 years ago and also, apparently, that on the death of Musammat Suneta Kunwar they were the next reversioners. They pleaded in paragraph 10 of the plaint that the cultivatory holding in dispute was jointly held by Ram Kirpal Singh and the plaintiffs and the said land was jointly cultivated and the defendants had nothing to do with it and were in wrongful possession. They, therefore, prayed for possession of the mortgaged property on payment of Rs. 600, the mortgage-money paid by the defendants. They also claimed mesne profits. The defendants denied that the plaintiffs were the next reversioners, or that they had been joint with Ram Kirpal Singh. They also denied that the plaintiffs were in joint cultivation of the land with Ram Kirpal Singh. They further pleaded that Ram Kirpal Singh had adopted defendant No. 1 as his son.

The Trial Court came to the conclusion that the plaintiffs and Ram Kirpal were not members of a joint Hindu family. It also found that the defendant No. 1 was not the adopted son of Ram Kirpal Singh. It was admitted in the Trial Court that the plaintiffs were the next reversioners to Ram Kirpal Singh. The Court then went on to hold that as Ram Kirpal Singh had died before the present Tenancy Act came into force the succession to the holding after the death of his widow would be governed by the provisions of the ordinary Hindu Law, purporting to rely on the case of Bisheshar Ahir v. Dukharan Ahir (1). In the result, the Munsif decreed possession to the plaintiffs on payment of Rs. 600 within three months from the date of his decree. Both parties went up in appeal. The learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court has confirmed the findings of the Trial Court on questions of fact involved in the case but has held that the case of Bisheshar Ahir v. Dukharan Ahir (1) did not lay down that the proviso to section 9 of the Rent Act (XII of 1881) did not apply and that the plaintiffs having failed to prove joint cultivation with Ram Kirpal Singh, deceased, were not entitled to succeed.

The plaintiffs come here in second appeal and the contention urged by their learned Vakil comes to this, that, having regard to a series of decisions of this Court, the ordinary Hindu Law had to be applied and not the old Rent Act (XII of 1881) and reference was made to the cases of Bisheshar Ahir v. Dukharan Ahir (1), cf. Bhup Singh v. Jai Ram (2) and Nathu v. Gokalia (3). In our opinion, none of these cases decides the point raised in this appeal. The question is, whether in the case of a tenant who had died before the present Tenancy Act came into force succession was to be governed under the new Tenancy Act. Having regard to the provisions of that Act it has been decided that the present Tenancy Act would have no retrospective effect so as to affect a succession to the holding of such a tenant. But the point whether the succession to such a tenancy would be governed by Hindu Law proper or by the Hindu Law as modified by the Rent Act (XII of 1881) has not, so far as we know, been the subject of decision in any case in this Court.

In the case of Bisheshar Ahir v. Dukharan Ahir (1) the dispute was between the sons of two daughters who had succeeded their mother to an occupancy holding which had been left by their father who had died before the Tenancy Act came into force. The Judges in that case held that, in cases where the Tenancy Act was silent, the succession would be governed by the ordinary Hindu Law.

In that case the daughters' sons only became entitled to the tenancy after the death of the last surviving daughter which happened long after the present Tenancy Act had come into force. Their rights did not come into existence on the death of the last full holder, the original tenant, their maternal grandfather. That case, therefore, does not help us in the case now before us.

In the case of Bhup Singh v. Jai Ram (2) it seems to have been assumed or taken for granted that, if the Tenancy Act (II of 1901) did not apply, succession would be governed by the Hindu Law. Section 9 of the Rent Act of 18 1 does not seem to have been brought to the notice of the learned Judges who decided that case and it certainly was not considered.

(1) 32 Ind. Ca. 771; 14 A. L. J. 127; 38 A. 197.

(2) 46 Ind. Cas. 387; 16 A. L. J. 459.
(3) 30 Ind. Cas. 215; 37 A. 658; 13 A. L. J. 947.

The case of Nathu v. Gokalia (3) is beside the point, inasmuch as in that case, whether the Hindu Law applied or section 9 of Act XII of 1881 applied, the result would have been the same. In that case, too, section 9 of Act XII of 1881 was not discussed.

In the present case it appears that the original tenant, Ram Kirpal, died before the Tenancy Act came into force. The succession to his estate was governed by Act XII of 1881 and a collateral could not inherit his property unless he was joint in cultivation with him. The plaintiffs founded their claim on the ground that they were members of a joint Hindu family with the deceased tenant and were as such interested in the cultivation. This issue has been found against them. It is true that there is no finding by the lower Appellate Court that they were not joint in cultivation with the deceased tenant. If the plaintiffs were not joint with Ram Kirpal the whole fabric of their suit collapses. We do not see how they can claim a title to the tenancy. As we have stated above, the succession opened out to the estate of Ram Kirpal when the Rent Act of 1881 was in force. The actual possession of the plaintiffs, if they were then in existence, was merely postponed during the lifetime of the widow [See Dulari v. Mulchand (4)]. If the widow had not been in existence they could not have succeeded unless they had a share in the cultivation. If they were not in existence at that time, they could not certainly come in as reversioners who had shared in the cultivation. Their rights arose then and as their joint cultivation was based on the family being joint which has been found against them we think the lower Appellate Court was right in dismissing their suit. We, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

Appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Second Court, Burdwan, dated the 16th of May 1919, reversing a decree of the Munsif, Fourth Court, at that place, dated the 28th of May 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Dr. Jadunath Kanjilal, for the Appellant.—The defendant No. 1 is the appellant. The appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of possession of the land in dispute after declaration of his title thereto. First Court decreed the suit. On appeal the suit was remanded. On remand the first Court held that there was a pathway and that I have got a right of easement over it. The lower Appellate Court has reversed that decision. My point is that it is not a case under section 26 of the Indian Limitation Act. I set up a customary right. The first Court referred to the documents produced by the plaintiff in upholding my plea. The Appellate Court has overlooked those documents as well as the oral evidence adduced in the case. It has also ignored the report of the Commissioner

It further says that the land being waste there could be no right of easement over it at all. I submit continual user is not necessary at all on the part of each and every villager where the right set up is customary. It would be necessary only in cases of right of private way. Refers to Shaikh Mahomed Ansur v. Shaikh Sefatoolla (1).

Babu Sarat Chandra Mookerjee, for the Respondents.—The learned Judge distinctly finds that the manner in which the path has been used by the villagers does not constitute and establish customary right. Where there is an easement right conferred by Statute, the customary right would not prevail. Whereas unreasonableness of right by custom has got to be looked into. Refers to Syed Ali v. Sarjan Ali (2).

Dr. Jadunath Kanjilal replied in brief.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff brought the suit, out of which this appeal arises, for recovery of possession of the land in dispute after declaration of his title thereto.

The defendants, representing the villagers, set up a right of passage for men and cattle over the land, they further set up a right of passage of rain water of the village through the disputed land to the Sana tank to its west from which water is taken for irrigation of neighbouring lands and also a right to bale out water from it for purposes of irrigation.

The Court of first instance held that the defendants had proved the rights set up. Accordingly, the plaintiff's title to the land was declared subject to the rights found in favour of the defendants.

On appeal, the learned Subordinate Judge reversed that decision, and gave the plaintiff a decree for possession. He has come to the conclusion that the defendants failed to prove the rights set up by them. That would, no doubt, be conclusive in second appeal. But it appears that the Court of first instance relied not only upon the evidence of the defendants but also upon certain evidence adduced on behalf of the plaintiff himself in coming to the conclusion that the defendants had proved their right.

(1) 22 W. R. 340.
(2) 19 Ind. Cas. 390; 18 C. W. N. 735.

The learned Munsif refers, in the first place, to a kabuliyat in which the disputed land is described as gopath nala patit jayga.

Secondly, he refers to the statement of the plaintiff's witness Serajuddi, viz., that the villagers and their cattle used to pass over the disputed land. And, thirdly, he refers to the Commissioner's report which describes the physical features of the land.

The learned Subordinate Judge on appeal refers to the evidence adduced on the defendant's side and then says: "I do not understand how that evidence can lead to the conclusion that defendants and villagers of Bhota have got a right of way over the disputed land and a right to take water from the same." Evidently, therefore, the learned Judge had not considered some of the materials upon which the Court of first instance relied in coming to the conclusion in favour of the defendants. Having regard to the fact that the judgment was one of reversal, we think that the evidence relied upon by the Court of first instance should have been taken into consideration by the learned Subordinate Judge.

Then the Subordinate Judge says: "It is an admitted fact that the disputed land was waste land—and it is well-known how such lands are used in the Mofussil. Such possession does not ordinarily create any right in the persons using the same."

The mere fact that the land is waste, however, does not necessarily show that no right can be acquired over such land. If that were so, the right of user over almost every pathway in the Mofussil would be lost, inasmuch as almost every pathway lies over waste land: see Shaikh Mahomed Ansur v. Shaikh Sefatoollah (1)].

In determining the question whether an user of way over waste land was as of right or not, the Court would have to consider the character of the land, the relation between the parties and the circumstances under which the user took place. We may, in this connection, refer to the case of Shaikh Khoda Buksh v. Shaikh Tajuddin (3). These questions do not seem to have been considered by the Subordinate Judge.

(3) 8 C. W. N. 359 at pp. 360, 361.

Lastly, the learned Subordinate Judge refers to the fact that there is no evidence as to from which house or lands, or to which place, men and cattle pass over the disputed land. Evidently, he treated the case as if it was one of prescriptive right under section 26 of the Limitation Act. There is no doubt that in an earlier passage in his judgment he referred to the fact that the right was claimed on behalf of the defendants and the villagers, but after discussing the evidence he seems to have forgotten it and come to the conclusion that the defendants had wholly failed to prove public or private right over the disputed land.

No right, however, on behalf of the public, meaning thereby the general public, was set up nor does it appear that any individual right was claimed. The right set up was a customary right on behalf of all the villagers.

It is contended by the learned Pleader for the respondent that such a right is more difficult to prove than a right of easement under section 26 of the Limitation Act. That may be so, but the question has to be gone into by the lower Appellate Court.

We think the learned Judge should consider the case as set up by the defendants and decide the case upon the whole evidence on the record.

The case will, therefore, go back to the lower Appellate Court in order that it may come to a decision in accordance with the observations made above and dispose of the appeal according to law.

Costs to abide the result.

The suit was dismissed. The property was sold and M. brought the present suit for a declaration that the debts were tainted with immorality and he was not liable. The first Court dismissed the suit holding that it was barred by res judicata, the lower Appellate Court held that it was not barred. On appeal of the defendant:

Held, that the suit was barred by res judicata as the present ground of attack that the debt was tainted with immorality ought to have been made a ground of attack in the previous suit if M. wanted to avoid the sale of family property. [p. 512, col. 1.]

A Court is bound to follow the ruling of the High Court to which it is subordinate in preference to the ruling of other High Courts where the two Courts differ. [p. 512, col. 1.]

Second appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Badaun, dated the 31st January 1920.

Mr. Harnandan Prashad, for the Appellant.

Mr. Benoy Kumar Mukerjee, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiffs-respondents for a declaration that the property in suit was not liable to sale in execution of two decrees. The facts appear to be as follows. One Badri Prasad had two simple money-decrees against Lal Singh, the father of the plaintiff, and two other persons. He put those decrees in execution, had the property in dispute sold at auction on the 22nd of April 1919 and purchased it himself. Before this sale, however, Mohar Singh, the present plaintiff, and one of the sons of he judgment-debtor had brought a suit for a declaration that the property in dispute was joint family property and as such was not liable to sale in execution of those decrees. In that suit the plaintiff's allegation was that the debts were not taken for family necessity but were taken by other persons for whom the plaintiff's father stood surety. In that suit the question of the non liability of the son to pay the amount of the decrees on the ground of the father's immorality, or that the debts were of a nature for which the son was not liable under the Hindu Law was not raised. That suit was dismissed. The decree was allowed to become final and afterwards the present suit was brought to avoid the sale on the ground that the debts were tainted with immorality. The first Court came to the conclusion that the present suit was barred by the rule of res judicata. It might be mentioned here that the plaintiff is a minor, and the present suit was brought through a next friend other than the one through whom the first suit had been filed. The learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court has come to the conclusion, following a ruling of the Madras High Court in preference to a ruling of this Court, that the present suit is not barred by the rule of res judicata and has decreed the claim for setting aside the sale. He has not come to any finding on the question whether the debts were tainted with immorality or not. We think it necessary to invite the lower Court's attention to the recognised principle that it is bound to follow the ruling of this Court in preference to the ruling of other High Courts where the two Courts differ. We think that the Judge of the Court below was distinctly in error in trying to follow a rule of law laid down by the Madras High Court saying that, where there are mixed questions of law and fact, the rule of res judicata would operate but it would not so operate if there is a wrong decision on a pure question of law. The cases cited by the Court below were mostly cases for enforcement of recurring liability such as either suits for rent, or suits for maintenance. To those classes of suits different considerations apply. The present suit is clearly barred by the rule of res judicata. The present ground of attack, namely, that the debts were tainted with immorality, ought to have been made a ground of attack in the previous suit if the plaintiff wanted to avoid the sale of family property. In our opinion, it is not open to the plaintiff now to avoid the sale on that ground. In our opinion, this appeal must be allowed. We accordingly allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the learned Subordinate Judge and restore that of the Court of first instance with costs in all Courts.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115—Error of judgment or law—Revision.

A High Court in revision, under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code, cannot interfere with any error of judgment or of law committed by a Subordinate Court where another remedy is available. [p 513, col. 1.]

Rule against an order of the Court of the Sub-Judge, Howrah, in Money Appeal No. 104 of 1919.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Gunoda Charan Sen, for the Petitioners.—The petitioner had granted a ticca lease to the opposite party who built a hut on the land but they were evicted by the Municipality and the hut was removed. The present Rule arises out of a suit by the opposite party for damages against the petitioners.

The question is, whether it is a case of eviction by title paramount. The lower Appellate Court ought to have considered the question of misrepresentation and fraud on which point the Trial Court found for the petitioners. Then again the claim for damages is not maintainable for want of necessary parties, [GHOSE, J.—Conceding that there has been a mistake of law, how do you come under section 115, Civil Procedure Code ?]

The Court acted illegally or with material irregularity in not going into the question of fraud and misrepresentation. If any one is responsible, it is the entire body of lessors and not some of them. Reads section 108 of the Transfer of Property Act. The condition that ought to have been satisfied is, that the lessor himself had a hand in the ouster or that the person claiming title paramount must have established his title in a Court of Justice. Refers to Muktar Ahmad v. Rani Sundar Koer (1).

Babu Dhirendra Lal Kastgir, for the Opposite Party, was not called upon to reply.

JUDGMENT.—We fail to see how we can interfere in this matter under section 115, Code of Civil Procedure.

Two points have been raised before us, first, that the learned Subordinate Judge ought to have considered the question of misrepresentation and fraud on which point the Court of first instance found for the defendant; and, secondly, that the District Board and the co-sharer landlord of the defendant ought to have been made parties to this suit.

Apparently, both these points have been satisfactorily dealt with by the learned Subordinate Judge. But if he had committed any error of judgment or of law this Court cannot interfere under section 115, Code of Civil Procedure.

The Rule is, therefore, discharged with costs. Hearing-fee one gold mohur.

Mr. Uma Shanker Bajpai, for the Appellante.

Dr. S. M. Sulaiman, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—On the 20th of January 1908 Muhammad Zahid granted a lease to one Bhola Ram and Sarda Prasad of a share in a certain market. That lease was not to take effect until the 22nd of June 1912, because at that time other lessees were in possession of the market. On the 21st of June 1912 Muhammad Zahid executed another lease of the same share in favour of Musammat Lalta Bibi. That led to litigation between Bhola Ram and Sarda Prasad and Muhammad Zahid. Muhammad Zahid was in the wrong because he had contracted to give possession to Bhola Ram and Sarda Prasad on June 22nd 1912. There were proceedings before the Magistrate, initiated by Bhola Ram. There were proceedings in revision in the High Court. There was also a remand by the High Court to the lower Court and a second hearing in the High Court, and there is no doubt whatever that Bhola Ram and Sarda Prasad who were in the right in the matter from the beginning were put to very considerable expense in the course of this litigation. Bhola Ram died somewhere about the year 1913 and on the 25th of February 1915 Mr. Kanhaiya Lal, a Vakil, evolved a plaint which he thought was good enough to be filed in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, and by that plaint he alleged a right in the plaintiffs to recover various heads of damages. The plaint is a document which has had a good deal of criticism passed upon it here during the argument in this case and, therefore, it ought to be looked at a little carefully, because it is the foundation of the plaintiffs' case, and if, on an examination of that document, no cause of action is disclosed, the proper course would have been for the Subordinate Judge to have struck the whole of the claim out, and that would have saved the Subordinate Judge and, to some extent, the District Judge from having a confused notion that this was some species of action which had some sort of relationship to an action for malicious prosecution. There is no doubt that, although we do not find the words "malicious prosecution" used in this case, all those Courts thought that this case had some affinity to a claim of that kind. We propose to show that it was not an action based on malicious prosecution and we propose to demonstrate that it was an action making claims for damages which were in law too remote. Once we appreciate the principles on which damages are said to be too remote, the whole action falls to the ground. Now, it is to be remembered that the original application to the Magistrate was by Bhola Ram and Sarda Prasad. They had a perfect right to make that application, but every body knows that when a complainant, or a plaintiff, commences an action in Court, the probability is that, even if he be successful, the amount of costs which may be awarded to him will not indemnify him against the actual necessary expenses of the suit or proceedings. It is clear law that an independent action cannot be maintained to recover the balance of costs over and above that awarded by the Court which tried the matter. It is equally clear that if, under any particular proceeding, the Court is not empowered to grant costs, no costs can be granted in an independent action by any other Court. If those two very simple propositions of law had been in the mind of the Subordinate Judge and the District Judge, the backbone of this case would have been broken at once.

There now comes a different point. It is said that the heirs of Bhola Ram can recover damages for the pain and suffering which Bhola Ram was put to in having to institute proceedings and it may be that in paragraph 9 of the plaint the descendants of Bhola Ram also claim to have damages as well. If such a claim is maintainable and is not in law too remote, then every plaintiff in a civil action, who commences a case against a defendant, and who, after successive stages of litigation, proves that he was right in commencing that action, can at its conclusion bring a claim for damages for the anxiety occasioned to him by having to institute a suit to enforce his rights. The proposition has only to be stated to show how nonsensical the whole thing is, and nonsensical is the right word to apply to this action, which is one that ought never to have been brought. It ought to have been disposed of without any ceremony at the outset.

The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs including fees on the higher scale.

Mr. Nizmat-Ullah, for the Appellant.

Messrs. A. P. Sen and Rameshri Prasad, for Respondents Nos. 2 to 4.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the Talukdar of Karkha, who is the appellant in this Court, against the defendants, Ram Sukh and three transferees from him, for a declaration that the defendants have no under-proprietary right in plot No. 13 (old No. 5) in the village of Paisar, but are mere grove-holders. The plaintiffs also asked for their ejectment on the ground that they had forfeited their rights by denying his title. The defendants based their title on a bakhshishnama (deed of gift) executed in 1264 Hijri (1846 A. D.) by the then Talukdar, Chaudhri Karamat Ali, in favour of Sukh Lal, the great grand father of the first defendant. This deed has been presumed genuine by the Court below. It is in Persian, the translation being as follows:—

The reason for writing the following lines is as follows:—

Whereas Sukh Lal Kalwar had planted a grove in one bigha ten biswas land in Mauza Rasulpur, I having received Rs. 15 current coins, have gifted the said land (to him). If, perchance, any one of the declarant and his relations lay a claim thereto it would be false and void.

Wherefore, these few words have been reduced to writing by way of a deed of gift and duly delivered (to the donee), so that the same may serve as an authority and be of use when required. Dated 21st Shawwal, 1264 A. H.

(Here follows the statement of the boundaries).

Other defences were also raised but have not been considered by the Court below, though on some of them, such as the important issue of adverse possession, findings were recorded by the Trial Court. Two questions only have been argued in this Court,—

(1) Whether the bakhshishnama conferred under-proprietary right.

(2) If so, whether this alone is sufficient to establish the defendants' title.

On the first question I agree with the Courts below that the language of the deed indicates an intention to confer under-proprietary rights. The words "I have conferred the land" and "if I or any of my relations make a claim to it, it will be null and void," are strongly in favour of this view. The land was not given for planting a grove as in the case of ordinary grove-holders, for the grove was already in existence when the bakhshishnama was executed. That a heritable right was conferred is not disputed by anybody. The land has already descended in the family of the grantee for three generations excluding the original donee.

The second issue arises in view of the fact that the first defendant was not recognised as an under-proprietor at the time of the first Regular Settlement. The entry of the Settlement khasra against this number shows the column for the name of the under-proprietor as blank. The defendant's grandfather, Munne, who was then alive, is not even shown as cultivator but an entry is made in the remarks column of the khasra to the effect that he is in possession of certain trees the detail of which is given. In the grove statement, forming part of the record of the same Settlement, a similar entry occurs to the effect that the plot contains eighteen trees plainted by Sukh Lal, and Munne with two other persons, Gaya Din and Chhedi, are entered as in possession. Munne was the son of the original grantee Sukh Lal.

The lower Appellate Court dismisses this objection with the remark that the confiscation of the taluka did not affect the rights of Sukh Lal. "The confiscation", says the learned Subordinate Judge, "did not involve the forfeiture of the subordinate rights." Since the decision of the Court below was pronounced, this question has been specially referred to a Bench of this Court which has held, in Oudh Bihari Singh v. Suraj Bali (1), that Lord Canning's Proclamation swept away under-proprietary equally with proprietary rights. This plea being no longer open to him, the respondents' Counsel falls back on the plea that the effect of the letters of the Government of India of 10th and 19th October 1859, which are appended as Schedule I to the Oudh Estates Act, was to restore all such rights as they existed before the annexation. According to this view, the effect of the letters was practically to wipe away the forfeiture altogether and a pre-mutiny title can still be relied on just as if no forfeiture had occurred. Now, in the first place, this is not what the letters themselves say. The first letter tells the Chief Commissioner that the right conferred on Talukdars will be subject to any measures which the Government may think proper to take for the purpose of protecting inferior holders from extortion and upholding their subordinate rights. This is not a Proclamation conferring or recognising rights. It is a warning to the Talukdars that, whatsoever measures Government may think fit to take, they will be binding on them. Again, the second letter in paragraph 5 indirectly warns the Talukdars that they have no reason to complain if the Government takes effectual steps to "re-establish and maintain" the rights of subordinate holders, and it proceeds to state exactly the nature of the protection which Government intends to extend to them, namely, "to define and record their rights." This question also was discussed by the Bench in Oudh Bihari Singh v. Suraj Bali (1). The learned Judges point out that the measures taken to protect the rights of subordinate holders are two. In the first place, the Talukdars themselves were required, as a condition of their sanads, to protect such rights. In the second place, as was foreshadowed in paragraph 5 of the letter of October 19th, 1859, the Government took steps to define those rights, which it did by means of the rules to which legal effect was given by the Oudh Sub-Settlement Act of 1866. The very argument put forward here was raised before them, namely, that, even admitting that under-proprietary rights were confiscated, there was no need of actual restoration. The case of Jehan Kadr v. Afsar Bahu Begum (2) was referred to as showing that the rights of the former holders were "let in" by Government withdrawing the confiscation. The learned Judges point out that this decision was limited to immoveable property in the City of Lucknow, and add that the title by withdrawal of Government cannot have accrued in the case of under-proprietary rights inasmuch as Government required under proprietors to claim their rights in the Settlement Court. It was clearly, therefore, the view of the learned Judges that a subsequent grant or a recognition by the Settlement Officer was necessary to restore the rights of the former owners. In summing up their findings they say that the rights of under-proprietors as they existed before the Proclamation were restored by the letters of 10th and 19th October 1859 and by the Settlement Court proceedings taken under the rules validated by Act XXVI of 1866. The learned Counsel for the respondents wants me to read this passage disjuncted as meaning that the letters and the Settlement Court proceedings were two separate ways by which rights were restored. It is clear from the whole of the preceding portion of the judgment that this is not what was meant. The Settlement Court's proceedings represent the manner in which Government gave effect to the intention of restoring the rights as they existed before 1855. If the letters alone were sufficient, the reference to the rules made under Act XXVI of 1866 becomes entirely superfluous. The conclusion is clear. Before a pre-mutiny root of title can be relied on, it is necessary to show that that title has been recognised by the British Government after the date of Lord Canning's Proclamation either by an entry in the Settlement Records or by a Settlement decree or in some other way. On the question of the validity of the bakhshishnama of 1846 as alone sufficient to support the respondents' title I accordingly find for the appellant.

Settlement of 1893. It is admitted on his behalf that if he had not a good title originally this entry would not give him one. He relies very strongly on this entry, which was based on an order of the Settlement Court, in support of his plea of adverse possession. This plea was found in his favour by the Trial Court but has not been considered by the Court below. I accordingly direct the lower Appellate Court to come to a finding on this issue and the issue of limitation, on any other of the defences raised in the Trial Court which may be urged before it in support of its decision, and on the issue of the plaintiff's right to possession. The question of title which has just been decided cannot be treated as a preliminary point within the meaning of Order XLI, rule 23, as it is one of the main issues in the case. The remand will, therefore, be under Order XLI, rule 25. The findings should be submitted within two months. Ten days from the date of the findings are allowed for objections.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 72—"Coercion," meaning of—Undue pressure.

The word 'coercion' referred to in section 72 of the Contract Act is used in its general and ordinary sense of undue pressure, and its meaning is not controlled by the definition of 'coercion' in section 15 of the Act. [p. 518, col. 1.]

Babu Basanta Kumar Bose (with him, Babu Sitaram Banerji), for the Appellant.—The defendant is the appellant. I obtained an ex parte rent-decree against the plaintiff. I attached his property. He paid down Rs. 50 and promised to pay the balance in a month. Subsequently, he brought the present suit for setting aside that decree as having been obtained fraudulently. The First Court dismissed the suit. On appeal it has been decreed on the ground that there was no service of summons. He has held further that the kabuliyat which was accepted by the First Court was not admissible in evidence because of insufficiency of stamps and non registration. In any event, I was entitled to Rs. 82 the admitted rate of rent. I claim rent at Rs. 110 p. a. the payment of Rs. 50 and the agreement to pay the balance of the decretal amount cannot be said to have been a payment under coercion. It does not come under sections 15, 16 of the Indian Contract Act.

[N. R. CHATTERJEA, J.—Look at section 72 of the Indian Contract Act and the illustration thereunder].

I submit the illustration is in direct conflict with the section of the law. The Court below was wrong in saying that there was undue influence. Then, as regards the kabuliyat, nowhere does the Court find that it was not executed.

Babu Nagendra Nath Ghose, for the Respondent.—They lost the case in the lower Appellate Court. They should have applied for a review of the original suit. The case is concluded by findings of fact. Refers to section 72 of the Indian Contract Act, Kanhaya Lal v. National Bank of India Limited (1). Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume XIII, page 169.

GOBINDA CHANDRA MULLIK v. CHAIRMAN OF THE HOOGHLY AND CHINSURA MUNICIPALITY.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the appellant brought a suit for rent at the rate of Rs. 110 odd against the respondent and obtained a decree. In execution of the decree, he attached certain goods of the plaintiff and the latter, in order to get back his goods, paid Rs 50 in cash and promised to pay the balance of the decree within a month. Within that time he brought the present suit for a declaration that the decree was fraudulent and not binding upon him.

The Court of Appeal below has come to the conclusion that the rent was not Rs. 110 odd, as was claimed by the appellant in the previous suit, but was Rs. 82 odd only. It is found that the promise to pay the decretal debt was clearly owing to "undue influence" (by which the learned Subordinate Judge probably means 'undue pressure') and that the present plaintiff did not make the promise as a free agent.

The case thus comes under section 72 of the Contract Act [see illustration (b) of that section]. As pointed out by the Judicial Committee, the word 'coercion' referred to in that section is used in its general and ordinary sense, its meaning not being controlled by the definition of 'coercion' in section 15 of the Act (See the case of Kanhaya Lal v. National Bank of India Limited (1).

Upon the findings arrived at by the lower Appellate Court we do not think we can interfere in this case. The appeal must accordingly be dismissed with costs.

It is to be observed, however, that the fact that the decree in the rent suit has been set aside by the Court below or the fact that the appeal to this Court is dismissed, does not mean the dismissal of the rent-suit.

THE CHAIRMAN OF THE HOOGHLY AND CHINSURA MUNICIPALITY —DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Bengal Municipal Act (III of 1884), s. 261, interpretation of—Place of business likely to be offensive or unwholesome, whether come within section.

Section 261 of the Bengal Municipal Act covers not only cases which are per se offensive or noxious but also a manufactory or place of business from which offensive or unwholesome smells may arise. [p. 520, col. 2.]

Withington Local Board v. Manchester Corporation, (1893) 2 Ch. 19 at p. 37; 62 L. J. Ch. 691; 2 R. 367; 68 L. T. 330; 41 W. R. 396; 57 J. P. 340 and Wanstead Local Board v. Hill, (1863) 13 C. Appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Second Court, Hooghly, dated the 24th of November 1919, reversing that of the Munsif, First Court, at that place, dated the 8th of June 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Dr. Dwarkanath Mitter (with him Babus Monindra Nath Banerjee and Debendra Nath Mondal), for the Appellants.—The plaintiffs are the appellants. The appeal arises out of a suit for declaration that the action of the Municipality in levying a license fee from them and realising the same by distress warrant was ultra vires, and for a permanent injunction restraining the Municipality from levying such fee in future. The plaintiffs have a Rice Mill within the Municipality. The water of the mill came out of the mill to the adjoining Municipal drain. Under section 261 of the Bengal Municipal Act the Municipality imposed a fee on the plaintiffs. The Court of first instance decreed the suit. On appeal, however, that decision has been reversed. My submission is that section 261 of the Bengal Municipal Act applies when the business is per se noxious and, therefore, it has no application at all to the present case. The discharge of the water of the mill, when made, does not give rise to any offensive smell. The mere fact of the passing of the water is no offence as it then does not give rise to any smell. The stench arises only when the water stagnates in the Municipal drain. It is the duty of the Municipality to see that the water from the drain is carried out to some other place of exit. The Municipality itself contributes to the creation of the nuisance. The words of the section must be strictly construed. The Legislature did not intend to extend the kinds of offensive business except those mentioned in the section itself. Refers to Withington Local Board v. Manchester Corporation (1), Wanstead Local Board v. Hill (2), Pembroke v. Warren (3).

Babu Amarendra Nath Bose, for Babu Monmothanath Mukherjee (with him, Babu Nanda Gopal Banerjee), for the Respondent.—The appeal is concluded by findings of fact. The learned Judge has given the best possible consideration to all the facts and circumstances of the case. He finds that there is some sort of smell when paddy is steeped in water. He further finds that, in the later stage, the smell is not so offensive as to become unbearable and, lastly, he finds that the accumulation of the water amounts to a positive nuisance. The language of the section is perfectly clear. If the contention of the other side is to prevail then some portion of the section would be quite superfluous and unnecessary. It is clear that a business which may become obnoxious would come under the purview of section 251 of the Bengal Municipal Act. I submit the case of Withington Local Board v. Manchester Corporation (1) does not apply to the present case as the English Law is different from that in the Bengal Municipal Act. The two other cases cited by the other side are similarly distinguishable.

Dr. Dwarka Nath Mitter replied in brief.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs, who are the appellants in this appeal, brought a suit against the Hooghly and Chinsura Municipality for a declaration that the action of the Municipality in levying a license-fee from them and realising the same by distress was ultra vires and for a permanent injunction restraining the Municipality from levying the fee in future.

The plaintiffs have a Rice Mill within the Municipality and the latter imposed a fee under section 261 of the Bengal Municipal Act (III of 1884).

The Court of first instance decreed the suit. That decree has been set aside by the Court of Appeal below.

Two contentions have been raised before us; the first is, that there is no clear finding as to whether it was a manufactory or place of business from which offensive or unwholesome smell arises, and, secondly, that in order to bring a case within the section, the manufactory or business must be per se offensive or unwholesome.

With regard to the first contention, we think the findings are sufficient. The result of the findings is that, when paddy is boiled, there is some smell emitted but that is found not to be offensive. When the water in which the paddy is steeped flows from the drain, it is offensive but not so offensive as when it comes into contact with the stagnant water of the Municipal drain. The learned Subordinate Judge further finds that the flow of such a large quantity of filthy water is the direct cause of the bad smell. We think these findings are sufficient to dispose of the first contention.

As regards the second contention, we have been referred to the case of Withington Local Board v. Manchester Corporation (1). There a local urban authority proposed to erect a temporary small-pox hospital on land of their own within the district of an adjoining local authority without their consent. The adjoining local authority brought an action and moved for an injunction restraining them from erecting the hospital. The Court of Appeal held that the small-pox hospital was not a noxious or offensive business within section 112 of the Public Health Act, 1875, (38 & 39 Viet. C. 55). That section lays down that, "any person who, after the passing of this Act, establishes within the district of an urban authority, without their consent in writing, any offensive trade, that is to say, the trade of blood-boiler, bone-boiler or fell monger or soap-boiler or tallow melter or tripe boiler or any other noxious or offensive trade, business, or manufacture, shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding £ 50 in respect of the establishment thereof."

(2) (1863) 13 C. B. N. S. 479; 32 L. J M. C. 135; 9 Jur. (N. S.) 972; 7 L T. 744; 11 W. R. 868; 143 E. R. 191; 134 R. R. 613.

Having regard to the terms of the section, the case is clearly distinguishable. Lindley, L. J., after referring to the words of the section, such as "blood-boiler, bone-boiler, fell monger," etc., and the words "any other noxious or offensive trade, business or manufacture," observed "when you bear in mind that those words have been construed already so as not to include businesses which may or may not be noxious, the conclusion at which I have arrived is clear and strong, that even assuming a hospital to be in some sense a noxious business, still it is not a noxious business to which section 112 has any application; but it is a thing to be dealt with under the other group of sections, which relate specifically to hospitals and infectious diseases."

In the case of Wanstead Local Board v. Hill (2), which also has been relied upon, the question was raised whether brick-making was "other noxious business, trade or manufacture" within the meaning of the section. The Court held that to bring the case within the general words, the business or trade must be of itself of a noxious or offensive nature.

Section 261 of the Bengal Municipal Act, on the other hand, covers a case of a manufactory or place of business from which offensive or unwholesome smells may arise. There is, thus, a clear distinction between the English and the Indian Statutes.

It is further contended that the clause "manufactory or place of business from which offensive or unwholesome smells may arise" should be construed eiusdem generis with the clauses preceding it. viz., "melting tallow, boiling offal or blood," and so on. But the previous clauses cover not only such cases but also "places used as kiln for making bricks, pottery, tiles or lime, or used as a shop for the sale of meat." It appears, therefore, that the genus comprises trades, business or manufactory which are not offensive per se and which would not come within the English Statute. We are of opinion that the section covers not only cases which are per se offensive or noxious but also a manufactory or place of business from which offensive or unwholesome smells may arise.

The appeal must accordingly fail and is dismissed with costs.

Punjab Tenancy Act (XVI of 1887), s. 77 (3), proviso—Jurisdiction of Civil and Revenue Courts—Suit by lessee of occupancy tenant to recover possession from landlord.

In a suit by the lessees of an occupancy tenant to recover possession of the land from the landlord on the ground that the latter had wrongfully dispossessed the plaintiffs, the landlord pleaded that the occupancy rights of the plaintiffs' lessor had come to an end:

Held, that, having regard to the proviso to section 77 3) of the Punjab Tenancy Act, the suit was not cognisable by a Civil Court, inasmuch as it was necessary to decide in the case whether the occupancy tenant had lost his right or not [p. 521, col 2.]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Hoshiarpur, dated the 16th January 1919, affirming that of the Munsif, First Class, Una, District Hoshiarpur, dated the 1st August 1918.

FACTS of the case appear from the following referring order:

RATTIGAN, C.J.—(October 20th, 1919).—"Defendants Nos. 1—16 are the proprietors of the land in suit, defendants Nos. 17-20 are occupancy tenants thereof, and plaintiffs allege that they were in possession of the land till 8th April 1916 under a lease granted by the occupancy tenants to themselves for a period of ten years. Plaintiffs further allege that they were wrongfully dispossessed of the land and ejected therefrom by the proprietors; and the present suit is to recover possession and the sum of Rs. 38, on account of damages alleged to have been caused to their cotton field. The First Court granted plaintiff a decree for possession of the land, and this decree was upheld by the District Judge on appeal.

The first ground of appeal urged before me is, that the Civil Courts had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit which was one falling under section 77 (3) (g) of the Punjab Tenancy Act and as such cognizable by the Revenue Courts only. The District Judge has held, on the authority of Kesar Singh v. Mangal Singh (1), that the plaintiffs are in no sense the tenants of the proprietors and that the suit is, therefore, one cognizable by the Civil Courts. The ruling referred to is that of a Division Bench and undoubtedly supports the District Judge's view. But it is urged before me that the learned Judges who decided it overlooked the provisions of section 58 (2) of the Punjab Tenancy Act, and reference is also made to the ruling of Sir Michael Fenton, Financial Commissioner, of which a report will be found in Wasawa Singh v. Mahana Singh (2). As at present advised, I am inclined to think, though with every deference, that the ruling of the Division Bench of this Court is open to question, and I accordingly refer the point to a Division Bench for consideration. There are two subsidiary questions involved in the case, (1) whether it is open to the Civil Courts, even if they have jurisdiction, to entertain the claim, to decide the question whether the occupancy rights originally enjoyed by defendants Nos. 17-20 had terminated, and (2) whether the lease granted by the occupancy tenants for a period of ten years is invalid under the provisions of section 38 of the Act. These questions might also be decided, if necessary, by the Division Bench."

Mr. Sundar Das, for the Appellants.

Mr. C. L. Gulati, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of the case, out of which the present second appeal arises, are given in the judgment in Chambers of Rattigan, C. J., of 20th October 1919, by which he referred the case to a Division Bench. The questions for our consideration are :—

(1) Whether the plaintiffs who claim to hold under a lease from the occupancy tenants of the land in question are tenants of the landlords defendants appellants; (2) whether it is open to the Civil Courts, even if they had jurisdiction to entertain the claim, to decide the question whether the occupancy rights originally enjoyed by defendants Nos. 17—20 had terminated, and (3) whether the Civil Court can decide the question whether the lease granted by the occupancy tenants for a period of ten years is invalid under the provisions of the Tenancy Act.

In Kesar Singh v. Mangal Singh (1) a Division Bench of the Chief Court held, that the lessees of land held by occupancy tenants are not themselves the tenants of the landlord; but a contrary view was held by Sir Michael Fenton, Financial Commissioner, in the case reported as Wasawa Singh v. Mahana Singh (2). We do do not find it necessary to decide at present which of these views is correct because, in our opinion, it was not open to the Civil Courts to decide whether defendants Nos. 17-20 had lost the occupancy rights which they originally had in the land, having regard to the proviso to section 77 (3) of the Punjab Tenancy Act, which lays down that, where, in a suit cognizable by or instituted in a Civil Court, it becomes necessary to decide any matter which can, under this sub-section, be heard and determined only by a Revenue Court, the Civil Court shall endorse upon the plaint the nature of the matter for decision and the particulars required by Order VI, rule 10, Civil Procedure Code, and return the plaint for presentation to the Collector. The proviso also lays down that, on the plaint being presented to the Collector, the suit should be heard either by him or by an Assistant Collector of the First grade according as the value exceeds Rs. 1,000 or not. Now, a suit by a tenant to establish a claim to a right of occupancy, or by a landlord to prove that a tenant has not such a right, is exclusively triable by a Revenue Court under section 77 (3) (a) of the Punjab Tenancy Act.

In the present case the landlords allege that the occupancy tenants have no longer a right of occupancy in the land in question, they having lost that right in accordance with the condition appearing in the wajib-ul-arz. It was, therefore, necessary to decide in the present case whether the occupancy tenants had lost their right or not. Issue No. 4 was accordingly framed by the Trial Court. The Trial Court and the District Judge concurrently held that the occupancy tenants had not lost their rights ; in other words that they had a subsisting right of occupancy. This, in our opinion, was a matter which they had no jurisdiction to decide having regard to the proviso to section 77.

We, therefore, accept the appeal and direct, in accordance with the provisions of section

(2) 134 Ind. Cas. 248; 31 P. W. R. 1916 Rev.

100 (3) of the Punjab Tenancy Act, that the decree of the Munsif First Class, dated 1st August 1913, be registered as that of an Assistant Collector of the First Grade in the District of Hoshiarpur. The records will, therefore, be returned to the District Judge, who will return the appeal filed in his Court to the appellants in order that they may institute it in the Court of the Collector. Costs in this Court will be costs in the case.

Evidence—Judgment vacated by subsequent order, whether can be used in evidence.

A judgment passed in a suit in which the plaintiff was found to have a certain share in a jama ordered the plaintiff to pay deficit Court-fee before the decree was drawn up, and directed that in default of plaintiff's payment the suit was to stand dismissed. The requisite Court-fee not having been put in, the Court made the following order : "Deficit Court-fee not paid as directed by the Court's order. The suit will accordingly stand dismissed. No decree need be drawn up" :

Held, that the judgment should not be used as evidence in a subsequent suit as the order dismissing the suit vacated the judgment in the case, which should be treated as non-existing. [p. 523, cols. 1 & 2.]

In a suit for rent in respect of a jama a judgment in a previous suit between the parties relating to a different jama, is admissible in evidence though it may or may not operate as res judicata. [p. 523, col. 2.]

Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Noakhali, dated the 17th of January 1920, affirming that of the Munsif, Additional Court, Feni, dated the 7th February 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Akshoy Kumar Banerjee (with him Babu Romesh Chandra Sen), for the Appellants.—The only question for your Lordships' determination in this appeal is, whether the plaintiff is entitled to 7 annas or to 8 annas share of the rent. There were two previous suits. In the first it was decided that the plaintiff's share was 7 annas and in the second it has been decided that the plaintiff has an 8 annas share. My submission is, that the judgment in the first suit was not admissible in evidence because it was vacated by the Court's order for non payment of deficit Court-fee. See Irawa Laxmana Mugali v. Satyappa Shiddappa Mugali (1). This judgment was Exhibit C. The other judgment is Exhibit 2. This ought to have been given effect to. It really operated as res judicata. See Sitanath Midda v. Bisudeb Midda (2). Exhibit 2 is subsequent to Exhibit C. The subsequent decision superseded the earlier one. See Moturi Seshayya v. Venkatadri Appa Row (3). See also Dambar Singh v. Munawar Ali Khan (4).

Maulvi Nurul Haq, for the Respondents.—Exhibit 2 cannot operate as res judicata for two reasons. The question as to what was the share of the plaintiff in the taluq was not in issue in that suit. The second reason why the decision should not operate as res judicata is, that in that suit we were only pro forma defendants. The order of the Court vacating the judgment, Exhibit C, is without jurisdiction. Except by way of review, it was not open to the Court to vacate its own judgment because it was not a case merely of a clerical or arithmetical error. The question, therefore, is which of the two judgments, Exhibit 2 or Exhibit C., should have precedence. On principle, it would appear that, in the face of the earlier judgment, the subsequent judgment which was inconsistent with the earlier one should not have been passed.

Babu Akshoy Kumar Banerjee was not called upon to reply.

(4) 30 Ind. Cas. 775; 18 A. L. J. 764; 37 A. 531.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit for rent brought by the plaintiff-appellant against his tenants on the allegation that he has 8 annas share in the jama. He impleaded in the suit defendants Nos. 4 and 5 his co-sharers who alleged that the plaintiff's share was only 7 annas in the jama. Both the Courts below have found against the plaintiff in respect of his share as well as in respect of the jama which he claimed to be Rs. 8 but which has been found to be Rs. 4.

The plaintiff appeals to this Court only with reference to the decision about his share in the property in suit. The Court of first instance relied chiefly on Exhibit (C) being the judgment in a suit between the parties in which the plaintiff's share was held to be 7 annas. The learned Munsif also referred to Exhibit 2 being the judgment in a suit between the parties relating to some other jama of the disputed tenure and held that that judgment was not admissible in evidence in this case inasmuch as the former suit related to a different jama. He, therefore, found that the Record of Rights which stood in favour of the defendants must be given effect to as the plaintiff had failed to adduce any evidence to rebut the presumption arising as to its correctness. On appeal, the learned District Judge has affirmed that decision. But we have not been able to follow the reasoning adopted by him. It appears that of the two judgments that were filed in this case one by the plaintiff and the other by the defendants the Courts below have attached great importance to Exhibit (C) which in their opinion concludes this case. This judgment was passed in a suit in which the plaintiff's share was found to be 7 annas by a Munsif who, towards the end of his judgment, ordered the plaintiff in that case to pay deficit Court-fee before the decree was drawn up and in default of plaintiff's payment the suit was to stand dismissed. This order was passed on the 7th of April 1914. The requisite Court fee not having been put in his successor-in-office passed the following order on the 26th May 1916: "Deficit Court-fee not paid as directed by the Court's order dated 7th April 1914. The suit will accordingly stand dismissed. No decree need be drawn up". This order virtually vacated the judgment in the case which should be treated as non-existing. Such a judgment, as has been held in the case of Irawa Laxmana Mugali v. Satyappashiddappa Mugali (1), should not be used as evidence in a subsequent suit.

With regard to Exhibit (2), the First Court observed that it referred to a different jama and, therefore, that Court refused to consider it. He was of opinion that the judgment in a suit relating to a different jama was not binding on the tenants-defendants. But we notice that the contending respondents-defendants Nos. 4 and 5 were parties to that suit, and we cannot hold that that judgment cannot be used as evidence in this case. There are, of course, circumstances to be determined to make it operate as res judicata between the contending parties. The lower Appellate Court has not come to any decision with regard to the admissibility of this piece of evidence. He has not accepted the reasoning of the learned Munsif in holding that judgment, Exhibit (2), is not binding upon the defendants. He does not consider the effect of that judgment as affecting the rights of the parties. It is difficult for us to say whether all the requirements have been proved in this case to make that judgment operate as res judicata in the present suit.

It is, therefore, necessary that the case should be remanded to the lower Appellate Court for the re-hearing of the appeal and for a decision whether judgment, Exhibit (2), operates as res judicata between the parties and, if so, whether there is sufficient evidence on the record to rebut the presumption which arises under section 103 B of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

We, therefore, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and send the case back to that Court for a re-hearing of the appeal in the light of the observations above made.

Costs to abide the result.

Decree set aside.
Case sent back for re-hearing.

Registration Act (XVI of 1908), s. 17 (1) (c), 2 (v)—Oral sale—Agreement to execute sale-deed—Registration—Consideration.

Defendant sold half of a house to plaintiff orally in 1908 and gave the latter possession of the portion sold. Subsequently, the defendant mortgaged the whole house. In 1913, the defendant executed an agreement in favour of the plaintiff in which he recited the oral sale and the subsequent mortgage and agreed to redeem the mortgage and execute a registered sale-deed in favour of the plaintiff in respect of the half house sold to him. Plaintiff brought a suit for specific performance of this agreement. It was objected by the defendant that the agreement was inadmissible in evidence for want of registration and that it was unenforceable for want of consideration :

Held, (1) that the agreement fell within clause (v) of sub-section (2) of section 17 of the Registration Act and, therefore, did not require registration ; [p. 525, col. 2.]

(2) that it was part of the oral sale of 1908 and was, therefore, supported by consideration ; [p. 525, col. 2.]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Amritsar, dated the 14th April 1917, reversing that of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Amritsar, dated the 29th June 1916.

Pandit Sheo Narain, R. B., for the Appellant.

Lala Moti Sagar, R. S. for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for the specific performance of an agreement. The allegations on which the suit was brought may be summarised as follows :—

That in February 1908 the defendant purchased a house bearing khana shumari No. 1794 and verbally sold a half of it to the plaintiff, a few days after its purchase for Rs. 814 ; that, subsequently, the house was divided into two portions and both the portions were newly built, and that the plaintiff obtained possession of his half.

On the 30th October 1913 the agreement, the basis of the suit, was executed. In this agreement the fact of the oral sale of 1908 is recited and it is further stated that the executant had mortgaged the whole house for Rs. 1,000 in favour of Ambadatt, and that if he were to attempt to get a transfer made in favour of B. Parshotam Singh the mortgagee would press for his mortgage-money, and that, therefore, the executant agreed that, within the period of two years, he would pay off the mortgage-money with interest and would redeem the property from the mortgagee and would execute a registered-deed in favour of B. Parshotam Singh, the purchaser. It is further stated by him in the deed that the burden of the entire mortgage-money would be borne by his half share of the house, and in case the demand exceeded the value of his half share it would be recoverable from his other properties.

The defendant failed to execute a sale-deed in pursuance of this agreement. Thereupon, this suit was instituted by the plaintiff. The defendant resisted the suit upon various grounds, one of which only is material for the purposes of this appeal, namely, that the agreement being without consideration was not binding on the defendant, and could not be enforced as a contract against him.

The Court of first instance overruled this plea and granted a decree to the plaintiff in the terms of the relief claimed. He held the agreement to be a part of the transaction of sale and decided that there was consideration for the agreement.

On an appeal by the defendant the learned Judge of the Court below took a different view and held that no independent consideration had been established for the agreement. His view was that the oral completed sale having taken place so far back as 1908 the execution of the agreement five years later was quite a separate transaction, and ought to have been supported by a separate consideration, and that nothing was given to the defendant at the time when the agreement was executed. The Court held that the agreement was a nudum pactum for want of consideration. The other questions raised in the case were left undecided by the lower Appellate Court in the face of its finding on this preliminary issue. The suit was accordingly dismissed in appeal.

This second appeal was, therefore, preferred by the plaintiff. At the hearing Mr. Moti Sagar for the respondent raised a preliminary objection to the effect that the agreement, the basis of the suit, being unregistered was inadmissible in evidence, and as the appeal could not proceed without looking at the agreement it must necessarily fail. He relied in support of his argument on clause (c) of sub-section (1), section 17 of the Indian Registration Act. According to that clause "Non testamentary instruments which acknowledge the receipt or payment of any consideration on account of the creation, declaration, assignment, limitation or extinction of any such right, title or interest" require registration.

He argued that, inasmuch as the document acknowledged the receipt or payment of consideration on account of the oral sale of the year 1908, it ought to have been registered. The learned Vakil, however, ignored the provisions of clause (v) of sub-clause (2) of section 17 of the Act. It runs this :—

"Nothing in clauses (b) and (c) of sub-section (1) applies to

(v) any document not itself creating, declaring, assigning, limiting or extinguishing any right, title, or interest of the value of one hundred rupees and upwards to or in immoveable property, but merely creating a right to obtain another document which will, when executed, create, declare, assign, limit or extinguish any such right, title or interest."

From the document it is clear that the executant agreed to execute another registered document which would have the effect of creating, declaring, assigning, limiting, or extinguishing a right, title or interest in the immoveable property. In the agreement it is stated that the executant had created a mortgage over the whole house, which he undertook to redeem, and thus give a clear title to the plaintiff by executing a registered document. In our opinion, the deed of agreement is clearly covered by this exception. We accordingly hold that the document sued upon was not compulsorily registrable.

On the question of consideration raised on behalf of the appellant, we concur in the view taken by the First Court and hold that the agreement formed part of the transaction of sale of the year 1908, and that it was supported by consideration. We are further of opinion that, by creating a mortgage over half the house already sold to the plaintiff, the defendant had infringed the right of the plaintiff who had a claim against him. The plaintiff in consideration of the promise to execute a registered sale-deed desisted from seeking a remedy against the defendant. This, therefore, was a sufficient consideration for the agreement executed by the defendant. The agreement was, therefore, binding on the defendant.

We accordingly set aside the decision of the lower Appellate Court on this preliminary point, and remand the case to that Court under Order XLI, rule 23, Civil Procedure Code, with the direction that it be placed on its original number in the register of pending appeals, and be disposed of according to law. Costs will abide the result.

Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Khulna, dated the 13th January 1919, reversing that of the Munsif, Second Court, at Satkhira, dated the 17th December 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Bankim Chandra Mukerjee, for the Appellants.—The defendant is the appellant. The appeal arises out of a suit for rent. The annual rent is Rs. 21-3-4 and cesses Re. 1-5-4 for 1320-23. Defence is that the landlord, having interfered with peaceful enjoyment of the holding, is not entitled to rent and cannot recover cesses more than at half-anna per rupee. The first Court dismissed the suit upholding the defence contention. The lower Appellate Court reversed it. He does not come to any finding as to in whose possession the land is. The learned Judge did not reverse the finding that the plaintiff dispossessed me through the tenant. The tenant fought out cases and stopped payment of rent. I submit that is substantial interference with peaceful enjoyment of my lands. Refers to Kristo Soondur Sandyal v. Koomar Chunder Nath Roy (1). The positive finding is, that I could not realise rents through plaintiff's acts. This has not been displaced. Refers to Kalanand Singh v. Jarao Kumari (2) and Mahammad Zeaullah Miah v. Sukliannessa Bibi (3). In such cases I submit the landlord is not entitled to damages. Refers to section 68 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The plaintiff is not entitled to more than half-anna in the rupee as cesses.

Babu Surendra Chandra Sen, for the Respondent.—I submit the appeal is concluded by findings of fact. Mere advise to under-tenants by the superior landlord, not to pay rents to the intermediate tenant would not constitute substantial interference. I submit the tenant is not entitled to any suspension on account of interference previous to the period in suit. The right to recover rent was with him. Refers to Srimati Moni v. Kalachand Gharami (4). Further, in cases of dispossession the question of apportionment would arise. The finding of dispossession is in my favour. The finding is, that there has been no substantial interference. Further the judgment in the previous rent suit by the defendant against his tenant is not admissible in evidence. The case in Mahammad Zeaullah Miah v. Sukliannessa Bibi (3) is clearly distinguishable.

Babu Bankim Chandra Mookerjee, replied briefly.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for rent. The defence was that the plaintiff dispossessed the defendant from a portion of the lands and substantially interfered with the collection of rent from his bhag tenants.

The Court of first instance held that there was dispossession in respect of 3 cottas of land and that the plaintiff had instigated the sub tenants under the defendant to withhold payment of rent and actively helped them in keeping the defendant out of the rent. In the result, the Munsif dismissed the suit.

On appeal the learned Subordinate Judge came to the conclusion that the evidence as to the dispossession of 3 cottas of land was of the weakest possible character and evidently the learned Subordinate Judge did not believe the case for the defendant that he was dispossessed from any portion of the land. So far as this part of the case is concerned, we cannot interfere with the finding in second appeal.

With regard to the other question, namely, whether there was interference by the plaintiff with the quiet enjoyment of the land by the defendant, the learned Subordinate Judge observes as follows: "There was no attempt to disown relationship, but only to reduce the jama. In one case the tenant succeeded and in the other he failed. Taking it for granted that plaintiff did give such assistance, this cannot in my view amount to a substantial interference with defendant's possession..... Big landholders may assist cultivators in litigation out of mere charity. Such action would not entitle the defendant, if he happened to be a tenant of the Zemindar, to claim suspension of rent. In the present case it is not the fact that plaintiff helped the tenants but the fact that they did so out of enmity, which has led to this decision. I think it is wrong in law.'

The learned Pleader for the appellant has referred to the cases of Mahammad Zeaullah v. Sukliannessa Bibi (3) and Kalanand Singh v. Jarao Kumari (2) and relied on certain findings arrived at by the Court of first instance which have not been set aside by the lower Appellate Court. The Court of first instance referred to the findings in the judgment in a suit brought by the defendant against his tenants, in which it was held that it was at the instigation of the plaintiff that the sub-lessees suspended delivery of bhag paddy in 1318, and that the plaintiff helped the sub-tenants in fighting out that case. So far as these findings are concerned, we do not think that they can be used against the plaintiff who was no party to that suit. The learned Munsif, however, found upon the evidence that the plaintiff did not allow the tenants to pay rent to the defendants and helped them with advice and money in the suit for rent. He referred to the case of Kristo Soondur Sandyal v. Koomar Chunder Nath Roy (1) in which the learned Judges observed that the right of the landlord to receive rent from a farmer depends upon his securing to the latter quiet possession and giving him proper and lawful means of realising rent from the tenants; and, applying the principle to the present case, said "I should hold that the plaintiffs by dissuading tenants from paying rent to the defendants and by helping them with advice and money in making false defences in suit brought by the defendant did not secure to the defendant quiet possession and give them proper and lawful means of realising rent and interfered substantially with the defendants' enjoyment of the property". He has also found that the defendant has not yet been able to realise the decretal money from the sub-tenant as the latter moves his cattle to the house of the plaintiffs. These facts have been found by the Court of first instance upon the evidence, apart from the judgment in the previous suit, but some of them have not been considered by the learned District Judge on appeal.

We think, therefore, that the case should go back to the lower Appellate Court in order that that Court may consider the whole evidence (except the findings arrived at in the rent suit brought by the defendant), and determine whether there was substantial interference by the plaintiff with the peaceful enjoyment of the land by the defendants. If the Court comes to the conclusion that there was interference with quiet enjoyment, it will consider whether the defendant is entitled to the suspension of rent as found by the Munsif, and, if so, whether it should be for the period up to Pous 1322 or an earlier period. It will also consider whether the defendant should be awarded damages and costs even if the rent be not suspended.

With regard to the cesses, it appears that the Court of first instance found that the plaintiff was entitled to cesses only at the rate of half anna per rupee but the suit was dismissed. There was no appeal on the question of cesses but the learned District Judge decreed the suit in full, and cesses were claimed in the plaint at one anna per rupee. It does not appear why the plaintiffs should get more than half-anna per rupee which, under the law, is payable by the raiyat to the landlord. The Court of Appeal below will consider this question also.

Costs will abide the result.

Landlord and tenant—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), ss. 50, 105, 105A—Presumption of correctness of entry in Record of Rights, whether question of law or of fact—Enhancement of rent—Mere payment of rent at uniform rate, does not raise any presumption of fixity of rent.

The question whether the presumption of the correctness of the Record of Rights has been rebutted by certain kabuliyats is more a question of fact than of law. [p. 529, col. 1.]

Every tenure, whether permanent or otherwise, is subject to the incident of enhancibility of rent. [p 529, col. 1.]

Upendralal Gupta v Jagesh Chandra Roy, 33 Ind. Cas. 56; 22 C. W. N. 275 and Jogesh Chandra Roy v. Makbul Ali, 54 Ind. Cas. 850; 30 C. L. J. 140; 23 C. W. N. 945, relied on.

Where in a suit for enhancement of rent of a tenure under section 7 of the Bengal Tenancy Act the plaintiff has proved that, at the inception of the tenancy, there was no condition excluding the tenure from the operation of the ordinary liability for enhancement of rent, the Court would be justified on this evidence to conclude, without any evidence to the contrary, that the same state of things existed on the date of the publication of the Record of Rights. [p. 529, col. 2.]

The mere fact of payment of rent at a uniform rate for any number of years, apart from the presumption that can be raised under section 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, does not raise any presumption of fixity of rent. [p. 529, col. 2.]

Buzlul Karim v. Satish Chandra Giri, 10 Ind. Cas. 325; 13 C. L. J. 418 at p. 421; 15 C. W. N. 752, relied on.

Appeal against a decree of the Special Judge, Noakhali, dated the 23rd January 1920, affirming that of the Assistant Settlement Officer, Camp Noakhali, dated the 3rd October 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Asitranjan Chatterjee (with him, Babus Nagendra Nath Bose and Satyendra Chandra Mitra), for the Appellant:—The appeal is on behalf of the tenant in a suit for enhancement of rent of a tenure. The tenure was created about 80 years ago and for this period rent was being paid at a uniform rate. In the finally published Record of Rights it is entered as a permanent tenure at a fixed rate. Its rent is, therefore, not liable to enhancement. The kabuliyats of 1839 and 1840 do not rebut the presumption arising under section 103 B of the Bengal Tenancy Act because in these kabuliyats there is nothing to show that the rent of the tenure is liable to enhancement. Refers to Luchmi Pershad v. Ekdeshwar Singh (1). There were originally two tenures and they were amalgamated into one. This amalgamation created a new tenancy. Refers to Upendra Nath Ghose v. Gopi Charan Saha (2), Upendra Nath Ghose v. Dwarka Nath Biswas (3) and Abhoy Sankar Mozumdar v. Rajani Mandal (4), Chandra Mohan Das v. Shaikh Habil (5) (Notes portion), Golab Misser v. Kumar Kalanand Singh (6) and Ram Dayal Giri v. Midnapur Zemindari Co. (7). Then, from the fact that rent has been paid at a uniform rate for a long period there is a presumption of fixity of rent. A new tenancy having been created by the amalgamation of the old ones, the old leases cannot be relied upon to rebut the presumption arising under section 103B of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Lastly, the kabuliyats were not produced from proper custody.

Babu Atul Chandra Gupta (with him Babus Jyotish Chandra Guha and Radhica Ranjan Guha), for the Respondent.—The question is, whether the tenure is one at fixed rates. My friend starts with the presumption under section 103B of the Bengal Tenancy Act but the record cannot create a right. The original leases have been produced and they show the true state of things. Refers to Upendralal Gupta v. Jogesh Chandra Roy (8). The facts of that case are on all fours with those of the present one. Evidence of acts and conduct is not admissible to vary the terms of the written contract. Also, mere payment of rent at an uniform rate for a long time does not raise any presumption of fixity of rent. See Buslul Karim v. Satish Chandra Giri (9). Then, again, mere amalgamation of the tenures did not create a new tenancy.

As regards the objection that the kabuliyats were not produced from proper custody, my submission is, that that objection was not taken in the Trial Court and the documents were, as a matter of fact, produced from proper custody.

Babu Nagendra Nath Bose replied.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff respondent brought a suit against the appellant, who is his tenant, under sections 105 and 105A of the Bengal Tenancy Act for enhancement of rent, under section 7 of that Act. Both the Courts below have allowed the enhancement prayed.

The facts are that, in 1839 and 1840, two kabuliyats were executed by the predecessor of the defendant in favour of the predecessor of the plaintiff in respect of two tenures which were subsequently amalgamated and became one tenure held at a jama of Rs. 276 and odd. These kabuliyats are silent as to the liability of the tenure for enhancement of rent. It appears that rent has been paid since the date of these kabuliyats up to the present time at the rate mentioned therein. Subsequently, in 1918, the Record of Rights in respect of these tenures were finally published in which the tenures were mentioned as permanent at fixed rate. The Courts below have held that the kabuliyats produced by the plaintiff sufficiently rebutted the presumption attached to the entry in the Record of Rights. This finding has been challenged in this appeal.

We are inclined to hold that the question whether the presumption of the correctness of the Record of Rights has been rebutted by these kabuliyats is more a question of fact than of law. But we have allowed the appellant to argue the case in order to show that the Courts below have misread the documents.

The learned Pleader for the appellant contends, in the first place, that as the kabuliyats do not mention that the tenures are liable to enhancement of rent they do not sufficiently rebut the presumption in favour of the correctness of the Record of Rights. It is argued, on the other hand, on the authorities of the cases of Upendralal Gupta v. Jogesh Chandra Roy (8) and Jogesh Chandra Roy v. Makbul Ali (10) that in this country every tenure, whether permanent or otherwise, is subject to the incident of enhanceibility of rent. We accept the respondent's contention and hold that the present tenures are not exempted from this ordinary incident of such tenures.

It is next contended that, at a subsequent time, these two tenureswere amalgamated into one and there might have been creation of a new tenancy on fresh terms, one of which might have been fixity of rent and as the entry in the Record of Rights must be presumed to be correct on the date of the publication, namely, the 8th February 1918, it is incumbent on the landlord to prove by evidence that nothing happened between the creation of the tenancy in 1840 and the date of the publication of the Record of Rights to vary the incident that the rent of the tenures was enhanceible. We do not think that this is the correct way of looking at the question. The plaintiff has proved that at the inception of the tenancy there was no condition excluding the tenure from the operation of the ordinary liability for enhancement of rent, and the Courts below were justified on this evidence to conclude, without any evidence to the contrary, that the same state of things existed on the date of the publication of the record. We further notice that this point was neither raised in the Courts below nor in the grounds of appeal taken in this Court.

It is also argued on behalf of the appellant that the rent having been paid for over 80 years at a unifrom rate it should have been held that the rent was fixed in perpetuity. We are not convinced that the mere fact of payment of rent at a uniform rate for any number of years, apart from the presumption that can be raised under section 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, raises any presumption of fixity of rent [Bulul Karim v. Sartish Chandra Giri (9).]

It further appears that these kabuliyats were not produced before the Settlement Officer at the time of the publication of the Record of Rights and there is no material on the record to show on what basis the entry in the khatian was made.

It is lastly argued that the kabuliyats should not have been admitted in evidence as they were not produced in Court from proper custody. We do not think that this contention ought to prevail. In the Court of first instance, when these documents were tendered by the plaintiff, they were received in evidence without any objection by the defendant. The lower Appellate Court held that they came from proper custody inasmuch as the first witness of the plaintiff got them from the plaintiffs' Record-keeper and produced them in Court. These documents were in the custody of the plaintiff as they ought to have been and they were produced from his record-room by one of his officers. In these circumstances they must be taken to have been produced from proper custody.

No objection has been taken in this appeal to the rent fixed by the lower Appellate Court which finding is, therefore, affirmed.

All the points taken in the appeal having failed, this appeal is dismissed with costs.

Second appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Cawnpore, dated the 28th May 1919

Dr. Kailash Nath Katju, for the Appellant.

Dr. M. L. Agarwala, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff, Kunj Behari Lal, purchased an 8 anna share of the Zemindari rights in Mauza Seontha on the 26th April 1915 from Chaudhri Bahadur Singh and brought this suit, under section 164 of the Agra Tenancy Act, to recover his share of the profits for Rabi 1322, 1323 and 1324 F. from the Lambardar, Ghansham Das, the defendant. The amount claimed was Rs. 1,457-5 4, principal and interest. The only defence with which we are concerned was that the plaintiff had no right to sue for Rabi 1322 and Kharif 1323 F. This defence was based on the following facts. After the sale by Chaudhri Bahadur Singh to the plaintiff, the defendant paid to the plaintiff a sum of money alleged to be equivalent to his share of the profits for these two seasons. This payment was made out of Court. Thereafter, Chaudhri Bahadur Singh sued Ghansham Das, defendant, for the profits of these two seasons and got a decree. Ghansham Das brought a suit in the Civil Court against Kunj Behari Lal to recover Rs. 808-12 6, the amount he had paid to Kunj Behari Lal as his share of the profits, Rs. 113-7-11, interest, and Rs. 151 12, costs incurred in defending Chaudhri Bahadur Singh's suit, and Rs. 100 "for damages and costs incurred", in all a sum of Rs. 1,177-0-5. In paragraph 6 of the plaint in that suit Ghansham Das stated that Kunj Behari Lal had not purchased the arrears of the profits and, therefore, was not entitled to the sum of Rs. 808-12 which was paid on the 7th February 1916. He stated his cause of action arose on that date and also on the 17th May 1917, the date on which Chaudhri Bahadur Singh's suit for profits was decreed. That suit was referred to arbitration and a decree was passed in accordance with the arbitrator's award for Rs. 950. In the present case the contention was, that "the suit is barred by section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure and the principle of estoppel."

The Trial Court held that, under the sale-deed of the 26th April 1915, Kunj Behari Lal was entitled to all rents and profits which became due after that date, and that as Kunj Behari Lal was recorded in the khewat as a co-sharer in June 1915 he was prima facie entitled to the profits for both Rabi 1322 and Kharif 1323 F. The plea of res judicata was disposed of in the following words:

"The suit, as appears from the file, was based on the allegations that Kunj Behari Lal and Ram Narain fraudulently persuaded Ghansham Das to pay about Rs. 805 on account of profits and that he was entitled to a refund. The question of profits was not in issue directly and could not have been so in a civil suit.

"The arbitration did not rightly enter into the question of plaintiff's right for profits of any part of any year. So that, on merits, that judgment does not operate as res judicata as the three notable ingredients are wanting. The Civil Court decree has only affected so much as to restore the status quo of the parties with regard to the profits of the village."

It eventually decreed the plaintiff's suit. The defendant appealed only against so much of the decree as referred to the two seasons above mentioned. The District Judge, after setting out the pleadings in the civil suit, said:—

"One thing, however, is clear that the civil suit decided between the parties the question of the profits of Rabi 1322 and Kharif 1323*F*. No doubt the plaintiff then argued that he was not effected by Bahadur Singh's decree against the Lambardar in respect of the profits of 1322 Rabi. Any way, the civil suit was decided on the above allegations and the plaintiff cannot sue again for the profits of Rabi 1322 or Kharif 1323 F. It is true, as the lower Court remarks, that the Civil Court could not have heard the present case, but any Civil Court decision which is not appealed from is binding on a Revenue Court apart from section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It is binding, in my opinion, even if the Civil Court had no jurisdiction the remedy from a decree so passed only being to appeal. In this case, however, the Civil Court clearly had jurisdiction, as a Revenue Court could not decree the return of profits improperly paid". He accordingly modified the First Court's decree by dismissing the claim so far as these two seasons were concerned. The plaintiff comes here in appeal and the only ground taken is, that the decree passed in terms of the award in the civil suit instituted by the defendant against the appellant does not bar the trial of the present claim for profits for Rabi 1322 and Kharif 1323 F. It is quite clear and, indeed, admitted that section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure does not bar this suit. It is prima facie a suit falling clearly under section 164 of the Agra Tenancy Act. The plaintiff was a recorded co-sharer and was entitled to sue the Lambardar for the profits for the years in suit and the only Court which had jurisdiction to try the suit is, admittedly, the Revenue Court. Dr. Agarwala, however, although he does not adopt the reasoning of the District Judge, argued that the suit is barred by the broad rule of res judicata quite apart from section 11. His argument is, that this suit is not in fact, though it is in form, a suit for profits under section 164 of the Tenancy Act but that it is in reality an attempt to get round a decree of a Civil Court, properly passed, that is, a decree of the Civil Court which had exclusive jurisdiction to pass a decree. Reliance has been placed on a number of rulings of this Court which lay down the proposition that where a Revenue Court has exclusive jurisdiction to pass a particular decree a subsequent suit in a Civil Court although framed in a way that, on the face of it, gives a Civil Court jurisdiction to try it, will not lie, if the real object of the suit is to render nugatory the decree passed by the Revenue Court. It is only necessary to refer to Kishore Singh v. Bahadur Singh (1) which was followed in Mollo v. Ramlal (2) decided by a Bench of three Judges. These cases are said by Dr. Agarwala to be the converse of the present. He, however, cannot cite any authority for the proposition that the converse is correct law. It seems, however, unnecessary to decide this point in this case because it is impossible to say that the matter now in dispute was decided in the former suit. As the details of the claim quoted above show, several matters not now involved were then in issue. The arbitrator, in accordance with whose award that case was decided, perhaps wisely gave no reasons whatsoever for his decision. He simply awarded "Rs. 950" to the plaintiff. This, no doubt, must have included some at least of the Rs. 808 12 6 but it is impossible to say how much or why.

(1) 48 Ind. Cas. 470; 16 A. L. J. 933; 41 A. 97.
(2) 58 Ind. Cas. 772; 15 A. L. J. 1030; 43 A. 191.

In our opinion, this was an ordinary suit for profits and as such was exclusively triable by the Revenue Court. It was open to the defendant to plead, and, if he could, to prove that he owed nothing or was only partially liable. But we do not think he was entitled to defeat the suit in limine by producing in evidence the decree of a Civil Court in which the defendant was held liable to pay a certain sum of money to the plaintiff. In our opinion the appeal must be allowed and the decree of the District Judge set aside and that of the Trial Court restored with costs throughout, including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

CIVIL REVISION No. 111-B OF 1921.

December 21, 1921.

Present :—Mr. Dhobley, A. J. C.

MUNICIPAL COMMITTEE, MALKAPUR —DEFENDANT—APPLICANT

AMRIT WAMAN DALAL—PLAINTIFF —NON-APPLICANT.

Berar Municipal Law of 1886, ss. 51, 53—Municipal tax—Suit for refund—Jurisdiction of Civil Court—Malkapur Municipality—Professional tax—Outside income, whether taxable—Plaint, allegations in—Jurisdiction.

A Civil Court has jurisdiction to entertain a suit for the refund of a Municipal tax if the assessment thereof is ultra vires and to enter into account and direct the refund of the amount realised in excess. It has no jurisdiction to go into the question of correctness or otherwise of a calculation of assessment if the assessment is not ultra vires. In such a case if there be any mistake in calculation, it can be set at right only on appeal, as provided by the Municipal Law. [p. 535, col. 1.]

G. I. P. Ry. Company v. Amraoti Municipality, 16 Ind. Cas. 449; 8 N. L. R. 107, Municipal Council of Cocanada v. Standard Life Assurance Company, 24 M. 205; 10 M. L. J. 401, Municipal Council of Mangalore v. Codial Bail Press, 27 M. 547 and Taluk Board, Bandar v. Mallikarjuna Prasada Naidu, 61 Ind. Cas. 497; 40 M. L. J. 91; 12 L. W. 585: (1920) M. W. N. 748; 28 M. L. T. 440; 44 M. 156, referred to.

Chairman of Giridih Municipality v. Srish Chandra Mozumdar, 35 C. 869; 12 C. W. N. 709; 7 C. L. J. 631, followed.

The Malkapur Municipality in Berar cannot, under Notification No. 642, dated 15th October 1906, of the Local Government, assess professional income derived by the assessee outside its Municipal limits, unless such income is brought in and mixed with the income made within the Municipality. [p. 534, col. 2.]

Chairman of the Commissioners of the Joynagar Municipality v. Sailabala Dutta, 61 Ind. Cas. 511; 48 C. 442; 25 C. W. N. 47, referred to.

The jurisdiction of a Court depends upon the allegations in the plaint and not upon those which may ultimately be found true. The allegations may, after the trial of the suit, be held to be unfounded, in that case the suit would be dismissed, not because the Court had no jurisdiction, but because the allegations on which it was based were found to be untrue. At the same time, a Court would not have jurisdiction merely upon a bare assertion in the plaint. The plaint must make distinct allegations of fact or of law which may bear out the assertion. [p. 534, col. 1.]

Application for revision of a decree of the Judge, Small Cause Court, Malkapur, dated the 18th April 1921, in Civil Suit No. 475 of 1918.

Mr. D. T. Mangalmurti, for the Applicant.

Mr. A. V. Khare, for the Non-Applicant.

ORDER.—The plaintiff-non-applicant is a resident of Malkapur and carries on money-lending and other business at that place. He has similar business also at Buldana. The Municipal Committee, Malkapur, levies a professional tax on the inhabitants of the town at the rate of one per cent. on the income. The plaintiff alleged that in his case the Committee took his total income from both his shops at Malkapur and at Buldana as the basis and thus wrongfully realised from him excessive amounts during the years 1914-15, 1915-16 and 1916 17. According to him, his income from his business at Malkapur alone should have been assessed and thus the levy of the tax on his income from both his shops was "unjust, illegal and unwarranted by law." His suit, therefore, was for the recovery of the excess sums realised from him.

2. The principal defence put forward in the lower Court and repeated here was, that, under section 53 of the Berar Municipal Law, 1886, the suit was not cognisable by a Civil Court. In order to decide this question it is necessary to refer to another section of the Berar Municipal Law and it is section 51. It reads as follows:—

"51 (1). An appeal against the assessment or levy of any tax under this law shall lie to the District Magistrate unless he is a member of the Committee, in which case the appeal shall lie to the Commissioner or other officer empowered by the Chief Commissioner in this behalf.

"(2). The order of the appellate authority shall be final.": Section 53 relied upon by the defendant reads thus: "53. No objection shall be taken to any valuation or assessment nor shall the liability of any person to be assessed or taxed be questioned in any other manner or by any other authority than in this law is provided."

It is thus contended for the Committee that the plaintiff's remedy lay by an appeal to the District Magistrate and that the present suit was expressly barred under the provision of section 53. A number of cases were quoted during the argument and we have a very similar case of this Court, G. I. P. Ry. Company v. Amraoti Municipality (1), which lays down that the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts is not ousted when the question is, whether a particular tax purporting to have been imposed under this law has any legal existence. When the levy or assessment of any tax by the Committee, purporting to be done under the authority of the Berar Municipal Law, is alleged to be ultra vires, the Civil Courts have jurisdiction to entertain the suit. The cases of Municipal Council of Cocanada v. Standard Life Assurance Company (2) and Municipal Council of Mangalore v. Codial Bail Press (3) are under the Madras District Municipalities Act, section 262 (2) of which is similar to section 53 of the Berar Municipal Law: It is to the effect that no suit can be brought in any Court to recover any sum of money collected under the authority of the Act, provided that its provisions have been in substance and effect complied with. In the first case it was held that the exaction of a tax illegally imposed and also the exaction of a tax from a person who is not legally taxable amounted to a substantial disregard of the Act and that the Civil Courts had jurisdiction to remedy the wrong in either case. In the 27th Madras case [Municipal Council of Mangalore v. Codial Bail Press (3)], the tax had been levied on the gross income, while it should have been levied on the net income, and it was held that the above mentioned section did not oust the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts to refund the tax illegally recovered. These cases mainly proceeded upon the express condition mentioned in section 262 of the Act, and, as that condition is not to be found in our law, the above decisions are not of much use to us in the present case. There are certain useful observations made in the case of Taluk Board, Bandar v. Mallikarjuna Prasada Naidu (4). Where a local authority is invested with discretionary powers, it is not for the Civil Courts to enquire into the sufficiency or otherwise of the materials on the strength of which that authority comes to a certain conclusion and decides to use its discretion in a particular way. The Courts should not interfere merely on the ground that they would have, on the same materials, come to a different conclusion and used their discretion in some other way. But if it be shown that the discretionary powers were exercised in capricious, wanton, arbitrary or unreasonable manner, the Courts have power to interfere. The same question as is involved in the present case arose in Chairman of Giridih Municipality v. Srish Chandra Mozumdar (5). That was a case under the Bengal Municipal Act, III of 1884, section 116 of which has almost an identical wording

(1) 16 Ind. Cas. 449; 8 N. L. R. 107.
(2) 24 M. 205; 10 M. L. J. 401.
(3) 27 M. 547.
(4) 61 Ind. Cas. 497; 40 M. L. J. 91; 12 L. W. 585; (1920) M. W. N. 743; 28 M. L. T. 440; 44 M. 156.
(5) 35 C. 859; 12 C. W. N. 709; 7 C. L. J. 631.

as section 53 of the Berar Municipal Law. That section provides that no objection shall be taken to any assessment or rate in any other manner than in this Act is provided. The expression "by any other authority" is not to be found in the Bengal Act but that would not, in my opinion, make any difference. The following observations made by Mookerjee, J., in the last case at pages 866-867, sum up the whole law on the subject:—

"It has been repeatedly ruled that errors in assessment, which constitute irregularities merely and do not go to the ground work of the tax and render the assessment void, can be corrected only in the manner provided by the Statute, which creates the authority and the remedy so provided must be treated as exclusive. On the other hand, where the defects in assessment are jurisdictional, rendering them void, the persons aggrieved thereby are entitled to invoke the ordinary judicial remedies, and all clear violations of law give rise to jurisdictional questions. In other words, while mere erroneous exercise of judgment is not reviewable by the Civil Court, any excess of jurisdiction makes the act liable to challenge in such Court."

3. In the present case the allegations of the plaintiff are, that the rules did not authorise the Municipal Committee to assess the professional tax on his income from the Buldana shop and that it acted without jurisdiction in taking that income into consideration while assessing the tax. These allegations, if true, would make the assessment illegal and ultra vires and the Civil Court had, therefore, jurisdiction to entertain the suit. The jurisdiction of Courts depends upon the allegations made in the plaint and not upon those which may ultimately be found true. The allegations may, after the trial of the suit, be held to be unfounded and in that case the suit would be dismissed, not because the Court had no jurisdiction, but because the allegations on which it was based were found to be untrue. At the same time, the Court would have no jurisdiction merely because there was an assertion in the plaint that the act objected to was ultra vires. The plaint must make distinct allegations of fact or of law how the act was ultra vires.

4. The next question is, whether the Committee could legally include the plaintiff's income from his business at Buldana in his Malkapur income for the assessment of the professional tax on him. For its decision we have to refer to the notification under which the tax was sanctioned by the Local Government. It is No. 642 of 15th October 1906, published in the Central Provinces Gazette of 20th October 1906, and the principal portion of its first clause is as follows;

"The tax shall subject to the following provisos, be assessable on every person who practises any profession or art or carries on any trade in the Malkapur Municipality, the whole or any part of whose income, derived from any source other than agriculture is not less than Rs. 100 per annum, at the rate of one per cent. on the taxable income derived from any such source".

It is contended for the Committee that the whole of the tax-payer's income derived from all sources except agriculture, whether derived within the Municipality or at any other place and whether brought into and spent within its limits or not was taxable. The case of Chairman of the Commissioners of the Joynagar Municipality v. Sailabala Dutta (6) is cited in support of the above contention. It was a case under the Bengal Municipal Act and it ruled that income brought to be spent and enjoyed within the Municipality in which the rate-payer resides becomes part of the means or circumstances within that Municipality and liable to assessment under section 85. The wording of that section is materially different and it is "persons occupying holdings within the Municipality according to their circumstances and property within the Municipality." The argument of the Committee's learned Pleader is, that as the last words, "within the Municipality," are not to be found in the rule in question, it must be presumed that the outside income whether brought into the Municipal limits or not was taxable. I must own my inability to follow the argument; moreover, in view of the express wording of the clause in our rule, there is, in my opinion, no scope for any argument. The words are "income derived from any such source." Taking these words along with the preceding clause, "who practises any profession or art or carries on any trade in the Malkapur Municipality", the meaning appears to me to be clear. The income is the income derived from the profession or art practised or trade carried on within the Municipal limits If the outside income is brought in and mixed with the income made within the Municipality and spent there, the whole income will, no doubt, be taxable, but if the outside income is not at all brought in, but is kept at the place where it is earned, it cannot be taken into consideration while assessing the professional tax. It is true that such instances would be rare and, generally, all the income wherever made would be brought by the person to the place of his residence. But unless this be done the outside income would not be taxable.

5. Though the Committee stated in the lower Court that the assessment was actually made on the plaintiff's Malkapur income, the documentary evidence clearly shows that his whole income was taken into account and that his Buldana income was not excepted. The total figure on which the income-tax was levied on him by the Government was taken as the basis for the assessment of the professional tax. Thus, the Committee acted ultra vires and the Civil Court had jurisdiction to entertain the suit and to direct the refund of the amount realised in excess. If it had been found that the Committee had taken only the Malkapur income and kept the Buldana income out of account, the Civil Court would not have any jurisdiction to go minutely into the accounts to see what the actual income was, unless some principle in making accounts was involved. If, according to the calculation of the plaintiff, the proper tax on the Malkapur income was, say, Rs. 100, and if the Committee had on going through the accounts assessed Rs. 110, the Civil Court would have no jurisdiction to go into the question as to which calculation was correct. If there was any mistake in making accounts, it could be set right only on appeal as provided by the Municipal Law. I, therefore, agree with the lower Court that it had jurisdiction to entertain the suit and to order the refund of the amount realised as professional tax on the Buldana income. It has not been shown that that income was brought into Malkapur and mixed with the Malkapur income. On the other hand, the plaintiff's deposition would show that the Buldana income remained at Buldana.

6. We next come to the merits of the case. The plaintiff claimed refund of the excess amounts realized during the three years 1914-15, 1915-16 and 1916-17. The lower Court has held that tax actually paid for the years 1914-15 and 1916-17 was much less than what should have been paid by the plaintiff on his Malkapur income. It accordingly dismissed his claim for those years. As regards 1915-16, it held that the proper tax was Rs. 70, while the Committee had actually realised Rs. 210. It, therefore, gave the plaintiff a decree for Rs. 140 and costs in proportion. The plaintiff's claim for interest was disallowed. The Committee in this revision does not dispute the correctness of the lower Court's figure of the plaintiff's income for 1915-16 or of the tax payable by the plaintiff in that year. The Committee simply contends that the plaintiff should not have been granted a decree for a larger amount than what had been claimed by himself. The correctness of the lower Court's order for the payment of the costs of the suit is also questioned. The plaintiff has also, on the other hand, preferred a Revision No. 148 of 1921 against the dismissal of his claim for the years 1914-15 and 1916-17 and for interest. It will be convenient to dispose of the plaintiff's revision by this order.

7. For the year 1915-16, the plaintiff had claimed a refund of Rs. 133-4-0 only and thus the decree of the lower Court for Rs. 140 was wrong. This was not a suit on accounts, but the plaintiff claimed a specific sum of money. He could not, therefore, be given a decree for a larger amount.

8. A commission was issued in the lower Court for the examination of the plaintiff's books of account, and the persons to whom it was issued submitted their report and were examined as witnesses in the case. The learned Judge of the lower Court accepted their figures of the plaintiff's income from the Malkapur shop during the years in question and based his decision on them. A complaint is made that the whole evidence was not properly considered and that the report should not have been accepted as wholly correct. I have myself gone through the evidence and the report and cannot say that the lower Court acted wrongly in accepting the report as correct. The Commissioners carefully and thoroughly examined the plaintiff's books of account and submitted their report. They were also examined at great length. There are no grounds for any interference with the decree dismissing the plaintiff's claim for these two years.

9. As regards the dismissal of the plaintiff's claim for interest, the lower Court acted properly in disallowing it. In two of the three years in question the amount paid by him as professional tax was much less than what was legally recoverable on his income. Instead of being thankful for his having to pay less, he brought a suit against the Committee alleging that he has been excessively taxed.

10. As regards the costs, the plaintiff is entitled to his costs in proportion to the claim decreed, while the defendant is entitled to its costs on the claim dismissed. The claim was for Rs. 260-7-0 and the claim now decreed is Rs. 133-4-0. The total costs of the plaintiff in the lower Court amounted to Rs. 102-8-0. According to the above proportion, the defendant shall have to pay Rs. 52 the balance Rs. 50-8-0 being borne by the plaintiff. The defendant's costs amounted to Rs. 90-8-0. The plaintiff shall have to pay Rs. 44-8-0 to the defendant, who shall bear the balance. The defendant shall have thus to pay Rs. 7-8-0 to the plaintiff as costs.

The net result is, that the plaintiff's revision fails and the defendant's revision is partially allowed and the decree of the lower Court is modified by substituting Rs. 133-4-0 for Rs. 140 decreed against the defendant. The defendant shall pay Rs. 7-8-0 to the plaintiff out of his costs in the lower Court, the remaining costs being borne as incurred. I make no order for the costs of this revision.

Defendant's application partially allowed.

LETTERS PATENT APPEALS NOS. 50 AND 51 OF 1921.

January 18, 1922.

Present :—Sir Dawson Miller, KT., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Jwala Prasad.

LOCHAN RAI AND OTHERS—APPELLANTS

Lala SANT PRASAD—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 100, 103—Appeal, second—Finding of fact—High Court, power of, to go into evidence—Remand.

It is not for a High Court, sitting in second appeal, even if it thinks that certain evidence has been improperly rejected by the lower Court, to weigh that evidence as against the evidence on the other side and arrive at a conclusion of fact upon the matter when that determination of question of fact does not come under section 103 of the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 537, col. 1.]

In such a case the matter should be remanded to the lower Appellate Court for determining the issues of fact upon the evidence. [p. 537, col. 2.]

Per Jwala Prasad, J.—A finding of fact of a lower Appellate Court is conclusive in second appeal but there is nothing to prevent a High Court from going into the evidence on the record and deciding any issue whether actually raised or not in the Court below if the finding of fact is set aside on the grounds mentioned in section 100 of the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 539, col. 1.]

Section 103 of the Civil Procedure Code has widened the power of the Appellate Court to go into evidence and determine any issue not determined by the Court below. [p. 538, col. 2.]

Letters Patent Appeal against a judgment of Mr. Justice Ross.

Mr. Kailaspati, for the Appellants.

Messrs. L. N. Singh and D. P. Singh, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

MILLER, C. J.—I very much regret that, in my opinion, these appeals will have to be remanded for decision by the lower Appellate Court. The only points in dispute were as to the rate of Nagdi rent and the landlord's share of the produce in the Bhowli rent. The landlord was claiming

Rs. 2 8-6 as Nagdi rent whilst the tenants were asserting that the rent was Rs. 2-1-9. The landlord was claiming Bhowli rent in certain proportions whilst the tenants were asserting different proportions.

The learned Munsif allowed the plaintiff's claim in the manner asserted by him except that, in making a calculation of the average produce of paddy, he arrived at it as 10 maunds per bigha, whereas in fact it ought to have been 14 maunds per bigha.

The tenants appealed to the Subordinate Judge. The Subordinate Judge allowed the appeal and also allowed the cross objection of the landlord who contended that a miscalculation had been made by the Munsif in arriving at the average produce of the paddy, so that both appeals were allowed.

The landlord appealed to this Court from the decision of the Subordinate Judge in so far as it allowed the tenants' appeal. The appeal came before Mr. Justice Ross. The points taken in appeal by the tenants were that the learned Subordinate Judge had, for improper reasons, rejected the evidence of the village papers as well as the report of the Assistant Settlement Officer, and had improperly relied upon the non-production of certain village papers relating to the land in question at an earlier period when it was under Musammat Jaipati Kuer.

The learned Judge of this Court found, and we agree with him, that the Subordinate Judge was wrong in rejecting the village papers and in rejecting the Assistant Settlement Officer's report, and to that extent we entirely agree with his decision. We also think that the learned Judge of this Court was right in pointing out that the Subordinate Judge was in error in drawing any inference from the fact that earlier village papers had not been produced when the defendants held under Musammat Jaipati Kuer because at that time their holdings were not the same and the rent was entirely different. The learned Judge, however, having arrived at the conclusion that certain evidence had been improperly rejected seems to have considered that if that evidence were admitted it disposed of the whole case. In my opinion it was clearly not for this Court, sitting in second appeal, even if it thought that certain evidence had been improperly rejected by the lower Court, to weigh that evidence as against the evidence on the other side and arrive at a conclusion of fact upon the matter. There may be certain cases in which the matter is so clear that the Appellate Court is driven to the conclusion that no Court acting reasonably could come to any conclusion but one, and in such cases it may be that the Appellate Court in second appeal would be entitled to decide the case without putting the parties to the trouble and expenses of having the question determined by the lower Appellate Court; but in the present case there undoubtedly was evidence on both sides as to the rate of rent both Nagdi and Bhowli. There was, on the one hand, the Record of Rights and there was some evidence given by the only witness called for the defendants which supported the Record of Rights. There was, on the other hand, the evidence which has been rejected by the Subordinate Judge, and it seems to me that the only possible course in this case is to remand the case to the lower Appellate Court to come to a conclusion of fact after considering not only the evidence which it has accepted (excluding the earlier village papers) but the evidence which Mr. Justice Ross found it had improperly rejected. Had we to determine this case for ourselves it might be an easy matter for us to arrive at a conclusion, but, as I have already said, the determination of questions of fact in second appeal not coming under section 103 of the Civil Procedure Code which is applicable in this case are not for the second Appellate Court. I, therefore, consider that the judgment of Mr. Justice Ross appealed from should be set aside and the case should be remanded to the lower Appellate Court for determining the issues of fact upon the evidence, including that which we have held was properly admissible in the case.

The decision of the Subordinate Judge, in so far as it found that the average produce of the paddy was 14 maund per bigha and 10 maunds per bigha, will remain. There is no appeal upon that question, but so far as the rest of his decision is concerned that will be set aside. The result, therefore, is that the judgment and decree of the learned Subordinate Judge are modified, as stated, and the case is remanded for decision on the facts in so far as the decree of the Subordinate Judge has been set aside. I think, in the circumstances, the costs of this appeal will abide the result of the final determination of the case.

JWALA PRASAD, J.—I agree with the order proposed. I am not sure, however, whether in this case we could not determine the appeal without remanding the case. The question is, how are we to deal with this appeal. Are we debarred from dealing with the case on merits and disposing of it instead of remanding it?

Order XLII, rule 1, of the Code of Civil Procedure says that the rules of Order XLI shall apply, so far as may be, to appeals from appellate decrees. Order XLI, rules 23 and 25, lay down the circumstances under which a remand can be made. Under rule 23 a remand is allowed when a suit is disposed of by the lower Court upon a preliminary point and the decree is reversed in appeal. Under that rule the Court to which the case is remanded is directed to determine certain issues left undetermined on account of the disposal of the case upon a preliminary point. Under rule 25 the remand is made when the Court trying the suit omits to frame or try any issue or to determine any question of fact which appears to the Appellate Court essential to the right decision of the suit upon the merits. In the present case none of these contingencies has arisen for a remand either under rule 23 or under rule 25. Rule 24 empowers the Appellate Court to pronounce judgment where the evidence upon the record is sufficient and finally determine the suit notwithstanding that the judgment of the Court from whose decree the appeal is preferred has proceeded wholly upon some ground other than that on which the Appellate Court proceeds. Generally speaking, the present case will come under rule 24, that is to say, this Court will have power to dispose of this appeal finally upon the evidence on the record. I do not find anywhere in the Code any indication that in second appeal the Appellate Court's power under rule 24 has been curtailed On the other hand, Order XLII makes this rule applicable to second appeals. No doubt, under section 100, read with section 101, no appeal shall lie to the High Court from a decree passed in appeal from any Court subordinate to it except upon the ground mentioned therein, viz.,

(a) the decision being contrary to law or to some usage having the force of law;

(b) the decision having failed to determine some material issue of law or usage having the force of law;

(c) a substantial error or defect in the procedure provided by the Code or by any other law for the time being in force, which may possibly have produced error or defect in the decision of the case upon the merits.

A second appeal to this Court did lie in this case and, as a matter of fact, we have decided that the judgment of the lower Appellate Court was illegal inasmuch as it exercised its jurisdiction irregularly in not having considered certain evidence upon the record. We are going to set aside the judgment and, therefore, the appeal to this Court was properly "laid." When once an appeal has been properly laid, then the ordinary rules under Orders XLI and XLII will apply for the disposal of that appeal. We can remand the case under rule 23 or 25 or we can determine the case finally upon the evidence under rule 24. True, no second appeal can lie upon facts, but when once an appeal is properly preferred and is entertained by this Court and the finding of fact of the lower Appellate Court is set aside and the evidence on the record is sufficient, then there is nothing to prevent the Court from going into the evidence and determining the case finally under rule 24. It has been recognised that the Appellate Court has power to remand also irrespective of rules 23 and 25 of Order XLI. I do not dispute that, and perhaps the present order of remand, though not coming under rules 23 and 25, may come under the general powers of this Court to remand the case, but I do not admit that this Court has no power to determine the case finally upon the merits and on consideration of the evidence under rule 24 of Order XLI.

I may add that section 103, which has now been added to the Code of 1908, has widened the power of the Appellate Court to go into evidence and determine any issue not determined by the Court below. This was in order to settle a conflict of decisions prior to 1907 as to whether the High Court could at all go into questions of fact and determine an appeal on evidence: Vide Girdhari Lal v. Orawford (1), Deokishen v. Bansi (2) and Bal Kishen v. Jasoda Kuar (3). In the case of Seturatnam Aiyar v. Venkatachala Gounden (4) their Lordships of the Privy Council held that the High Court in second appeal had jurisdiction to deal with the case and to decide the issues upon the materials before the Court when the District Judge returned his finding without dealing with those materials in a satisfactory manner. In the case of Damusa v. Abdul Samad (5) their Lordships of the Privy Council held that the Judicial Commissioner had in second appeal on terms of section 100 of the Code (1908) power to decide what was the real question in the case notwithstanding that an issue had not been framed on it.

While I agree that a finding of fact of a lower Appellate Court is conclusive in second appeal, there is nothing to prevent the High Court from going into the evidence on the record and deciding any issue whether actually raised or not in the Court below, if the finding of fact is set aside on the grounds mentioned in section 100 of the Code. In the present case the evidence on the record is sufficient and almost all of them appear to have been dealt with by the Munsif. The remand is only for the purpose of the lower Appellate Court to record its finding upon the evidence on the record. This could be done by us here without much loss of time. The remand could, therefore, have been obviated.

However, as my Lord the Chief Justice is of opinion that the case should be remanded, I subscribe to it.

Case remanded.

Musammat NAFISUNNISA AND OTHERS —DEFENDANTS—APPELLANTS

Mirza MUMTAZ HUSAIN—PLAINTIFF —RESPONDENT.

Muhammadan Law—Marriage—Shia—Requisites of valid marriage—Marriage performed secretly—Restitution of conjugal rights.

Plaintiff, a Shia Muhammadan, and defendant No. 1, a Shia girl, who was above 20 years of age, contracted a secret marriage of their own choice and of their own free will and at the time the ceremony took place the plaintiff had an intention of having a public ceremony performed later with the consent of his wife's family and did not intend to consummate the marriage until that ceremony was performed. His wife's relatives opposed his access to his wife and endeavoured to marry her to another man. Thereupon, he sued for restitution of conjugal rights. It was alleged on behalf of the defendants that no marriage ceremony had taken place:

Held, that as, under the Shia Law, the presence of witnesses was not necessary in any matter regarding marriage and as a marriage contracted by the spouses themselves or their guardian in private was valid, the parties were legally married, and that a marriage which was a valid marriage could not be invalidated by the desire of the parties to have a more elaborate ceremony performed later. [p. 541, col. 2.]

Held, further, that the ceremony being complete the plaintiff was entitled to claim restitution of conjugal rights although he had agreed that he would not consummate the marriage till public ceremony was performed. [p. 541, col. 1.]

Moonshee Buzloor Ruheem v. Shumsoonnissa Begum, 11 M. I. A. 551; 8 W. R. P. C 3; 2 Suth. P. C. J. 59; 3 Sar. P. C. J. 259; 20 E. R 208, referred to.

Where in a Shia marriage the essentials are present (the declaration and the acceptance expressed in such a manner as to demonstrate intention without any sort of ambiguity) the presence or the absence of religious ceremonials is immaterial and in no way affects the validity of the union. [p. 541, col. 2.]

Under the Shia Law, as in the Hanafi Law, if a woman is adult and sane, she is competent to enter into a matrimonial engagement without advice or consent from any body. [p. 542, col. 1.]

Second appeal from a decision of the Additional District Judge, Gorakhpur, dated the 31st March 1920.

Mr. Iqbal Ahmad, for the Appellants.

Mr. Agha Haider and Dr. S. M. Sulaiman, for the Respondent.

NAFISUNNISA v. MUMTAZ HUSAIN.

JUDGMENT.—The suit, out of which this appeal arises, is described by the Trial Judge as the most miserable case he has ever had to try. It is certainly not a pleasant one. The plaintiff, Mirza Mumtaz Husain, is the first cousin of the first defendant Nafisunnisa. Nafisunnisa is the daughter of Nawab Mirza, deceased. Her mother, Kaniz Banu Khanam, and her brother Mirza Khadim Husain and her uncle Mirza Kalab Hasan are the three remaining defendants. The plaintiff's case was, that he had known the first defendant all her life; that a strong affection had grown up between them and that he had endeavoured to marry her after obtaining her relatives' consent; that, failing to secure this he married her secretly on the 26th of January 1917 but has never been allowed access to her owing to the opposition of her relatives; that her relatives have since endeavoured to marry her to another man. He, therefore, instituted this suit for restoration of conjugal rights. The young lady joined her relatives in signing a written statement in which the plaintiff was described as a man of bad character who had been dismissed from the Railway service. The written statement admitted that they were cousins and the fact that the plaintiff was intimately acquainted with defendant No. 1. It asserted that no marriage ceremony had ever taken place but that the plaintiff had by duress caused defendant No. 1 to sign a document in which she had admitted the performance of the ceremony although, as a matter of fact, no ceremony had taken place. The suit was contested with bitterness. The facts, as found by the learned Munsif and the Additional District Judge, are as follows:—On the date alleged the plaintiff and defendant No. 1 undoubtedly recited to each other formulæ requisite for a valid marriage. The parties being Shias the formulæ are Shia formulæ. The acknowledgment made by defendant No. 1 of the fact of marriage was a genuine acknowledgment and was not obtained from her by duress. Defendant No. 1, as is shown by her letters, was tenderly attached to the plaintiff before the ceremony took place. Her affection for the plaintiff has continued, but owing to pressure put upon her by her mother and brother, she has in the Courts been compelled to profess an aversion which she does not feel. The finding is that these two young people married one another of their own choice and of their own free will and that the bride's relatives have restrained her against her will from going to her husband. The relatives have come here in second appeal. I will take the grounds of appeal in order. The first ground is that, on the plaintiff's own showing, the alleged nikah was to remain in operation till it was followed by another and regular nikah, and no subsequent nikah having taken place, the suit was not maintainable. It is true that the plaintiff under cross-examination admitted that, at the time when the ceremony took place between him and the defendant, he had in his mind an intention of having a public ceremony performed later with the consent of his wife's family and that he had not intended to consummate the marriage until that ceremony was performed. This circumstance, however, can in no way invalidate the ceremony. It is found that both the parties were adults and in full possession of their faculties. The bride at the time of the marriage was over 20 years of age. "Under the Shia Law 'the presence of witnesses is not necessary in any matter regarding marriage; and if a marriage were contracted by the spouses themselves or their guardians in private, it would be valid; even if there were an injunction to secrecy, that would not invalidate it.'" (Ameer Ali on Muhammadan Law, Volume II, 4th Edition, page 333). There can be no doubt that the marriage was in the correct form. There is nothing in the Muhammadan Law which countenances the doctrine that a marriage which is a valid marriage can be invalidated by the desire of the parties to have a more elaborate ceremony performed later. Either the ceremony was a good ceremony, in which case the marriage is a good marriage, or the ceremony is not a good ceremony, in which case there is no marriage. There is no provision in Shia Law for a ceremony which would create a marriage if afterwards ratified by a subsequent ceremony. Here all the conditions necessary for a valid marriage between Shias were complied with. So the parties are legally married.

The second ground is:—"Because the exercise of conjugal rights being dependant upon the performance of a second nikah, the suit should have been dismissed." "If there had been a stipulation after the marriage had taken place to the effect that it would not be consummated until the lapse of a specified period, such a stipulation is valid." (Ameer Ali on Muhammadan Law, Volume II, 4th Edition, page 365). But there was no condition in the ceremony. No condition was made. The bride did not accept the marriage conditionally. Much has been made of the remark under cross-examination made by the plaintiff, but this remark is no more than an indication of his general view as to what he then hoped. He had hoped, according to him, when the ceremony was completed, that his wife's relations would eventually approve their union, and he proposed not to live with his wife until he had obtained that approval. But it is, of course, open to him, having failed to obtain that approval, to secure his wife's presence. On the findings of the Courts below, in spite of her contest in the Trial Court, she wishes to go to him.

The 3rd ground is: 'Because the plaintiff and the defendant No. 1 not having consented, in unequivocal terms, to a permanent and absolute union, to commence from the time of the contract, for the purpose of intercourse, no valid marriage was constituted between them." I have already dealt with this point.

The 4th ground is:—"Because the essential religious ceremonies not having taken place at the time of the alleged marriage, their marriage was absolutely void." This ground cannot be supported. "The law appoints no specific ceremony for the contractual performance of a marriage; and no religious rites are necessary for contracting a valid marriage." (Ameer Ali on Muhammadan Law, Volume II, 4th Edition, page 333). It is true, as stated at page 334, that "Local forms of religious ceremonies have become associated with the performance of the matrimonial contracts." At page 334 it is stated:—"The validity or invalidity of a marriage, however, does not depend in any way on the performance or non performance of the forms and ceremonies that have been engrafted on Moslem manners and customs by contract with outside races." In India it has become more or less the custom to introduce certain prayers into the ceremony. At page 336 the learned author continues: "As stated before, in practice there is little or no difference between the ceremonials observed by the Shias and the Sunnis on these occasions. Theoretically, however, there is a difference which ought not to be lost sight of in dealing with the question of form. Whilst the Sunnis simply recommend the use of the Khutba before the contract is finally executed, and of the Surat ul-Fatiha (the opening chapter of the Koran) at the conclusion of the marriage, the Shias consider the use of these to be, to some extent, obligatory. Among them, the ceremony commences as well as concludes with a prayer, and after the sigeh has been pronounced, the person who officiates as minister or priest, reads the Khutba and the Surat ul Fatiha to sanctify and bless the union." It is clear from what has been stated above that where the essentials are present (the declaration and the acceptance expressed in such a manner as to demonstrate intention without any sort of ambiguity) the presence or the absence of religious ceremonials is immaterial and in no way affects the validity of the union.

The 5th ground is:—"Because the burden of proving that defendant No. 1 after free and independent advice and fully realising the effect on her interests entered into the contract of marriage was upon the plaintiff-respondent and he has failed to discharge the burden." It was here argued that the Court should approach this question as if it were a question of the execution of a sale or contract by a purda nashin lady; that it should be established by sufficient evidence that she had had independent advice; that the matter had been clearly explained to her and that she was entering the matrimonial state forewarned and forearmed. The argument appears to me to have no bearing upon a case such as this. We are dealing here with the question of Muhammadan marriage among Shias, the laws and rules of which are to be found in their own religion. The habit of keeping women secluded has been known to Shias for a very considerable period. There is nothing in the Shia Law to justify the imposition in the matter of marriage of conditions which have been imposed upon persons dealing with purda nashin women in business matters. The Shia Law, (in this respect it is no different from the Hanafi Law), lays down that if a woman is adult and sane, she is competent to enter into a matrimonial engagement without advice or consent from anybody.

The last ground is a general ground to the effect that the Court should, in its discretion, have refused to grant relief. A Court has not very great discretion in the matter as was laid down many years ago, in the case of Moonshee Buzloor Ruheem v. Shumsoonnissa Begum (1) but in this particular case on the facts there is every reason why the relief should be granted for it has been found that the young lady is eager and desirous to go to her husband and is being restrained by her relatives. For these reasons, I dismiss this appeal with costs which will include fees on the higher scale.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXII, r. 3—"Legal representatives", meaning of—Application by some—Abatement, whether of entire suit.

The words "legal representiatives" in Order XXII, rule 3, of the Civil Procedure Code of 1908 cannot be construed to mean all the legal representatives. They must include any legal representative to whom the right to sue survives. The question to be decided in each case is, whether the omission of one of the representatives is fatal to the suit or appeal. [p. 543, col. 1.]

Where, therefore, some only of all the legal representatives to whom the right to sue survives apply to have their names substituted for that of a deceased appellant, the appeal does not abate as a whole but abates to the extent of the claim of such of the legal representatives as have not jointly or severally applied for their substitution of their names. Application for revision of an order of the Additional District Judge, West Berar, Akola, dated the 17th July 1919, in Civil Suit No. 281 of 1917.

ORDER.—The plaintiff obtained a decree in the First Court against one Nagoji. Nagoji appealed; but during the pendency of the appeal he died and left five sons. Narayan, the third son, applied for substitution of his name in place of that of his deceased father. He did not disclose the existence of his four brothers. His application was granted. The respondent, however, urged that the appeal had abated as Narayan was not the legal representative of the deceased. Narayan urged that he was the manager of the family. The lower Appellate Court has found that he was not the manager and, though this finding is attacked in revision, I see no reason whatever to interfere with it.

Another ground is, however, urged before me. The lower Appellate Court has held that Narayan desired to carry on the appeal for his sole benefit. It is urged that he is entitled to do so. The lower Appellate Court relies on Ghamandi Lal v. Amir Begam (1) and Haidar Husain v. Abdul Ahad (2). In Ghamandi Lal v. Amir Begam (1) it was held that the words "the legal representative" in section 265 of Act XIV of 1882 (corresponding to Order XXII, rule 3, of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908) must be read in the plural: the application to the Court, therefore, must ask that all the legal representatives of the deceased appellant should be made parties to the suit. This ruling was followed in Haidar Husain v. Abdul Ahad (2).

The ruling in Ghamandi Lal v. Amir Begam (1) is distinguished in Musala Reddi v. Ramayya (3). It was there held that where some of the legal representatives made an application and owing to a bona fide belief that it was unnecessary for them to have the other legal representatives brought on the record as respondents failed to do so the appeal did not abate. I agree with the Judges who decided the Madras case that the strict literal construction of sections 365 and 366 in accordance with the view of the Allahabad High Court would have unfortunate results. If A imagined that he was the sole legal representative of an appellant it would be unfortunate if he was precluded from obtaining relief in so far as he was affected merely because another person B was also a legal representative.

But if the words "legal representative" are held to mean all legal representatives I cannot see how the Civil Procedure Code provides for a distinction on the ground of the bona fide belief of some of the legal representatives. It appears to me, therefore, that the words "legal representative" cannot be construed to mean all legal representatives. They must include any legal representative to whom the right to sue survives.

This interpretation appears to me to be the natural interpretation. The words in Order XXII, rule 4, are similar to the words in Order XXII, rule 3. I do not think it has ever been disputed that a plaintiff can get relief against a legal representative of a deceased defendant even if another legal representative whom he has failed to implead exists. The result of failure to implead the second legal representative is at most that he cannot get relief against him.

The question to be decided in each case is, whether the omission of one of the representatives is fatal to the suit or appeal. In the present case it is admitted that Narayan was a co sharer of the field in dispute. He, therefore, had a right to prosecute the appeal so far as his own share is concerned. The appeal, therefore, must be heard on the merits. The first Appellate Court must consider whether it should exercise its discretion given to it by Order XLI, rule 4, of the Civil Procedure Code. If the exercise of this discretion is refused, the decree of the First Court must stand so far as the shares of Narayan's brothers are concerned. I reverse the decree of the lower Appellate Court and remand the case for trial with advertence to the above remarks. Costs in this case will be costs in the first appeal.

Pre-emption—Liability of pre-emptor to pay for incumbrance created by vendee as part of sale consideration - Consideration—Compromise of suit—Person no party to compromise not bound.

One K sold a house to J. for Rs. 1,800 on 4th October 1914. The vendee paid Rs. 900 in cash and for the balance executed a mortgage of the same property in favour of K. on 5th October. B. and others sued to pre-empt the property making both the vendor and the vendee parties to the suit but compromised the suit with the vendee alone for possession of the property on payment of Rs. 1,575 to the vendee, stipulating that they did not admit the validity of the mortgage but if it was enforced they would pay. K. sued to enforce the mortgage:

Held, that the mortgage was a part of the sale consideration, and that as the pre-emptor knew of the existence of the mortgage he was liable for the amount.

Second appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Benares, dated the 19th of September 1919.

Dr. S. M. Sulaiman, Messrs. Peary Lal Banerjee and Harnandan Prasad, for the Appellants.

Dr. Surendra Nath Sen, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts out of which this appeal arises are as follows. On the 4th of October 1914 the plaintiff sold a house to Musammat Jillo, defendant No. 1, for Rs. 1,800. It was stated in the sale-deed that out of the consideration money Rs. 900 was paid in cash and that a mortgage of the house had been given for the balance. It was quite clear that the consideration for the sale was the mortgage plus the balance in cash. On the 5th of October 1914 Musammat Jillo executed the mortgage. Defendants Nos. 2 and 3, Bechan Singh and Bishnath Singh, appellants here, brought a suit to pre-empt the sale and they made both the plaintiff and Musammat Jillo parties to it. That suit was compromised between Musammat Jillo and the appellants. The mortgagee plaintiff was exempted from the suit. According to that compromise it was agreed that Musammat Jillo should receive in cash Rs. 1,375 and it was stated that, although the appellants did not admit the validity of the mortgage which had been executed by Musammat Jillo in favour of the plaintiff, nevertheless if Musammat Jillo was held liable on that mortgage they undertook to pay whatever her liabilities might be. This suit was brought by the plaintiff on his mortgage and he made Musammat Jillo the first defendant and Bechan Singh and Bishnath Singh defendants Nos. 2 and 3. The main defence was, that the mortgage was not genuine and that, in any case, it was not binding upon the property. The first Court decreed the claim in part against Musammat Jillo by giving a simple money decree against her and dismissed it as against the present appellants. The judgment of the Trial Court proceeded chiefly on the case of Kamta Prasad v. Sohan Bhagat (1). On appeal by the plaintiff the learned Judge held that the case of Kamta Prasad v. Sohan Bhagat (1) was not applicable to the facts here and in that opinion we agree. In that case the mortgage was executed for a different debt altogether although both the sale and the mortgage were of the same date. Here we hold that although the mortgage was actually executed a day after the sale, nevertheless the mortgage was a part of the consideration for the sale and must be regarded as part of the same transaction. In this view the case of Kamta Prasad v. Sohan Bhagat (1) has no application. It must be remembered that the pre-emptors in this case knew of the existence of the mortgage because it was mentioned in the sale-deed under which they pre-empted. It was open to them as prudent men to see that the mortgage was paid off before the money which they paid into Court reached the hands of Musammat Jillo. We cannot see how the plaintiff, who was no party to the compromise, can be adversely affected by anything they chose to do behind his back. In our opinion the view taken by the Court below is right. We, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

HARCHARAN DAS—RESPONDENT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 195, 197, 439—Order under s. 197—Executive order—Revision—High Court, power of.

The granting of sanction under section 197 of the Criminal Procedure Code is an executive act, and does not become a judicial one because the sanction is granted by a Court, or because the sanctioning Court treats it as such. A High Court has no power to interfere with such an order in revision.

Nando Lal Basak v. Mitter, 26 C. 852; 3 C. W. N. 539; 13 Ind Dec. N. S. 1146, referred to Grey v. North Western Railway Administration, 13 P. R. 1891 Cr., cited.

Revision from an order of the District Judge, Hissar, dated the 16th April 1921.

Messrs. Garden Noad, Khadim Ali Shah and Iftikhar Ali, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Jagan Nath, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The respondent, who is a Vakil practising at Hissar, applied to the District Judge of Hissar for sanction, under section 197, Criminal Procedure Code, to prosecute the petitioner, Sardar Ali Hussain Khan, Senior Subordinate Judge, for offences under sections 500, 504 and 506, Indian Penal Code, in connection with an incident which occurred while the petitioner was hearing a case in his Court on the 4th November 1920. The District Judge ordered a notice to issue to the petitioner to show cause why sanction should not be granted, and the present application has been made for the revision of that order under sections 435 and 439, Criminal Procedure Code.

One of the objections urged on behalf of the respondent is, that the order is an executive and not a judicial order, and that, therefore, the present application is not maintainable. In my opinion, this objection is correct. The granting of sanction under section 197 is clearly not a judicial but an executive act, where the authority granting the sanction is the Government, and it is difficult to see how it can assume a different character if the sanction is granted by a Court. Courts exercise executive as well as judicial functions, for instance, in imposing fines upon ministerial officers under section 36 of the Courts Act.

There is a wide distinction between the provisions of section 197 and those of section 195 in regard to the granting of sanction. Section 195 not only prohibits a Court from taking cognizance of certain offences, except with the previous sanction or on the complaint of certain authorities, but lays down the nature of the sanction required specifying what it must contain and what it need not contain. In section 197, on the other hand, no particular form of sanction is prescribed, and the section merely provides that no Court shall take cognizance of a certain class of offences unless the sanction of one of certain specified authorities has been obtained. Further, there is no provision in section 197, as there is in section 195, by which a sanction given or refused may be revoked or granted by a superior authority, and it is also noticeable that, whereas it is provided in section 439 that the High Court may exercise any of the powers conferred on a Court of Appeal by section 195, it contains no reference to section 197. It was, in fact, held in Nando Lal Basak v. Mitter (1) that, under the revisional powers conferred by the Criminal Procedure Code, the High Court has no authority to interfere with an order made by a subordinate Court granting or refusing sanction under section 197.

It is contended on behalf of the petitioner that, as the matter has been treated by the District Judge as a judicial one, it can be treated here also in the same way, and Grey v. North Western Railway Administration (2) has been cited in this connection; but I cannot agree with this contention. An executive proceeding does not become a judicial proceeding merely because the Court regards it as such.

I hold, therefore, that this application cannot be entertained and I dismiss it.

Criminal revision against an order of the Deputy Magistrate, Daltanganj, dated the 28th November 1921.

Mr. Devaki Prasad Sinha, for the Petitioner.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This Rule issued by a Division Bench of this Court is directed against an order of the Deputy Magistrate of Daltonganj, dated the 28th November 1921, in a case convicting the accused of an offence under section 457, Indian Penal Code and imposing upon him a sentence of three months' rigorous imprisonment.

The learned Vakil appearing on behalf of the accused impugns the aforesaid conviction and the sentence upon the ground that the trial held by the Magistrate was vitiated by certain illegalities and irregularity: the first ground urged is, that the Magistrate omitted to examine the accused under section 342, Criminal Procedure Code, after the close of the prosecution evidence and before the accused was called upon to enter into his defence.

The learned Vakil has referred to the certified copy of the record of the case prepared in the form "kept under section 263 of the Code of Criminal Procedure," and contends that from the copy it does not appear that there was any plea of the accused recorded, far less that he was examined under section 342 of the Code.

The original record does show that the accused's plea was recorded in the column headed "The plea of the accused and his examination (if any)." The heading and the entry made by the Magistrate in this column appear to have been omitted on the certified copy granted to the accused filed along with the application to this Court. The certified copy contains the columns both before and after the aforesaid column relating to the plea of the accused and his examination. The copy was applied for on the 14th December and was granted on the 21st December. It is not possible to find out the reason how this omission of this important column in the copy granted to the accused occurred. This, however, is a matter for the Magistrate to enquire and investigate. I must take the record as it is and hold that the plea of the accused and his examination was recorded in the appropriate column. The entry in that column runs as follows:

"The accused says I have not committed any offence and the case is false. I cannot say why the complainant has brought this false case. I would file the written statement".....Later, a written statement was filed for the accused.

There is nothing enclosed with this record to indicate when the accused was examined, namely, whether before or after the close of the prosecution case. This entry is not dated. After the close of the prosecution evidence the Magistrate's signature appears at the end of the last witness for the prosecution and is dated the 16th November 1921. Thereafter, the entry of the Magistrate on that date is "Evidence for the prosecution closed. The accused is not ready with his evidence and wants his witnesses to be summoned ...Summon the above-named witnesses for the 28th November 1921. The accused on bail as before. All prosecution witnesses discharged."

It appears that a written statement on behalf of the accused was filed on that very day, as is mentioned in the column referred to above relating to the plea of the accused and his examination.

It has been settled by authorities that a written statement filed by an accused person cannot take the place of his examination under section 342, vide the case of Raghu Bhumij v. Emperor (1) and the decisions referred to therein, therefore, the written statement filed by the accused in the present case could not absolve the responsibility of the Magistrate to examine the accused under section 342 of the Code. The note made in the column referred to above only shows that, first, the accused was examined and his plea was recorded, and, afterwards, the written statement was filed by him. It does not appear that he was examined after the close of the prosecution case. The learned Deputy Commissioner, in his letter No. 179, dated the 12th January, addressed to the Assistant Registrar of this Court, refers, in paragraph 2, to the explanation given by the Trying Magistrate to the effect that there is a column in the summary trial form, headed "The plea of the accused and his examination (if any)" in which the full statement of the accused, after examining the principal prosecution witnesses, was recorded, adopting the procedure of the warrant case. Thus, the Trying Magistrate contends that this ground does not seem to prevail.

But the statement of the accused in the aforesaid column was recorded after examining the principal prosecution witnesses; the Magistrate does not say after all the prosecution witnesses. The law requires that the examination of the accused should take place after the close of the prosecution evidence and before the accused is called upon to enter into his defense, vide Raghu Bhumij v. Emperor (1), Suraj Pandey v. Emperor (2). The offence for which the accused was being tried was that triable in a warrant case and, therefore, the procedure for warrant cases would apply to the trial of the case though a summary one under section 262, Criminal Procedure Code. It was pointed out in case of Mahomed Hossein v. Emperor (3) that the examination of the accused under section 342 is mandatory. Therefore, in the absence of anything on the record to show that the requirements of section 342 were complied with, and in view of the explanation of the Trying Magistrate referred to above, I hold that the trial is vitiated on account of the illegality referred to above. The record prepared in the case is further defective, inasmuch as the memorandum of the substance of the evidence of each witness has not been signed by the Magistrate as is required by section 264 of the Criminal Procedure Code. That section prescribes the mode in which the record of the evidence of witnesses should be prepared in summary trials in cases of the offences mentioned in sub-section (1) of section 260, clauses (b) to (m) when tried by a Magistrate of First and Second Class. The offence in the present case was one under section 457, Indian Penal Code, which is one of the sections mentioned in section 261 (1) of the Criminal Procedure Code. Clause (1) of section 355 says that the Magistrate shall make a memorandum of the substance of the evidence of each witness as the examination of the witness proceeds. This, the Magistrate has done in the present case. He has prepared a memorandum of the evidence of each witness but he has not signed the said memorandum as is required by clause (2), of the section, which says: "Such memorandum shall be written and signed by the Magistrate with his own hand, and shall form part of the record."

It has been held that non compliance of the requirements of section 355 constitutes an illegality which must vitiate the trial. But for the aforesaid illegalities arising out of the non compliance of sections 352 and 355 the record prepared by the Magistrate appears to be very careful and complete. He has recorded in sufficient detail the evidence of all the prosecution and defence witnesses and it is, therefore, to be regretted that the aforesaid errors should have been committed so as to vitiate the careful trial held by him.

The learned Vakil on behalf of the accused then submits that the conviction of the accused under section 457, Indian Penal Code is bad, inasmuch as the Magistrate has found that the prosecution failed to establish the intention with which the house trespass was committed by the accused, namely, for the purpose of committing theft, and, consequently, it was not open to the Magistrate to convict the accused of an altogether different intent, namely, to commit adultery.

The case of the complainant was, that the accused had entered the house with a view to commit theft, and he sought to prove it by showing that the granary was broken and some grains were lying near him. He further sought to support his case by the prosecution witnesses. In the cross-examination on behalf of the accused, it was suggested that the complainant was displeased with the accused for a suspicion of having illicit connection with the wife of the former, and that he had threatened the accused to implicate him in a false case. The prosecution denied the suggestion. In the circumstances of the case, the Magistrate came to the conclusion that the intention of theft with which the accused was charged was concealed by the prosecution and that the real intention of the accused was to carry on an intrigue with the wife of the complainant. The reasons given by the Magistrate for coming to the conclusion appear to be sound; but the question is, whether the accused could be convicted of a different intention than the one of which he was charged. Section 238, Criminal Procedure Code, empowers the Magistrate to convict the accused of a different charge from what he was originally accused of, provided the accused was not in any way prejudiced by the conviction on the new charge. In the case of Karali Prasad Guru v. Emperor (4) it was held that the accused was not prejudiced, inasmuch as the accused himself definitely set up the plea of having entered the house on account of previous intrigue and upon the invitation of the widow who was occupying the house in question. Mookerjee, J., fully recognised the proposition laid down in the case of Behari Mahton v. Queen-Empress (5) that "an accused person is entitled to know with certainty and accuracy the exact nature of the charge brought against him, and, unless he has this knowledge, he must be seriously prejudiced in his defence," and, following the dictum of Couch, C. J., in Reg. v. Govindas Haridas (6), that the nature of the case made at the trial against the prisoner, the evidence that was given and the line of defence set up by him, are all matters to be taken into consideration His Lordship held in that case that in the circumstances of the case and considering more particularly the defence set up by the accused and the evidence produced by him, the accused was not at all prejudiced.

In the present case the prosecution concealed the intention and when opportunity was given to it by suggestions made in the cross examination it still refused to accept the suggestions. The accused did not admit that he had entered the house. He pleaded alibi and he denied the occurrence altogether. He simply suggested that the case was falsely lodged against him on account of the suspicion by the complainant that the accused was carrying on an intrigue with his wife. Therefore, upon the case of the prosecution, and on the line adopted by the defence, the accused could not be said to have any knowledge of the charge of which he has now been convicted, namely, of having entered the house with the intent of committing adultery. This was the view taken in an exactly similar case in Mahomed Hossein v. Emperor (3). The observations made in that case are so appropriate that I am tempted to quote in extenso: "Then, again, the charge was with intent to commit theft, as alleged by the prosecution in their evidence, and in their evidence they did not aver that there was any other reason for the house-breaking. It was the defence which tried to elicit from the prosecution witnesses that there was some familiarity between the accused and a woman in the complainant's house. It is, therefore, on the defence that the conviction rests and not on the prosecution. There can be no doubt that, when the learned Magistrate found that the charge of theft or the charge of house-breaking with a view to commit theft, broke down, and it appeared that there was another object, it was his bounden duty to have given the accused notice of that by drawing up a charge clearly stating what it was that he was accused of doing. The trial appears to us to have been vitiated by these errors, and the conviction and sentence are, therefore, set aside."

The question then arises as to whether a re-trial should be ordered. Herein also I would adopt the views of their Lordships in the case referred to above: "We do not order a re-trial because the accused has already been 21 days in jail, and we consider that is sufficient to meet the ends of justice in this case." In the present case the accused has been in jail for two months and he was sentenced only for three months.

The petitioner will be released and set at liberty.

Petition, under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise an order of the Stationary Second Class Magistrate, Negapatam, in Calendar Case No. 387 of 1919.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. S. K. Jayarama Iyer, for the Petitioner.—The Magistrate erred in closing the case without pronouncing a judgment of conviction or acquittal. Section 89 of the Probate and Administration Act does not apply to criminal proceedings. The death of the complainant will not cause the proceedings to abate. Criminal proceedings, generally, can be started by any person generally cognizant of the facts. There is no question of the offence being compoundable or otherwise. See Ganesh Narayan Sathe, In re (1), Emperor v. Sultan Singh (2) and Gangamma Dorayya, In re (3). The decisions relied on by the lower Court, Rama Nand v. Emperor (4) and Labhu v. Emperor (5), are not sound law.

Mr. V. Narasimha Aiyangar, for the Respondent, first accused, relied on the rulings of the Punjab Chief Court reported as Rama Nand v. Emperor (4) and Labhu v. Emperor (5).

The Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

AYLING, J.—In this case the Police preferred a charge-sheet against two persons, Shaik Dawood and Muhammad Abu Baker, for offences under section 304A or 323 of the Indian Penal Code by beating one Sultan Marakayar and causing his death. The Magistrate, after hearing the prosecution evidence, held that death was not the result of the beating and framed a charge under section 323 of the Indian Penal Code only. Accused entered on their defence and adduced evidence. After the close of the defence evidence the defence Pleader drew the Magistrate's attention to a ruling of the Punjab Chief Court reported as Labhu v. Emperor (5), and argued that, owing to the death of the person injured, the charge against the accused must be held to have abated. The Magistrate accepted this contention and closed the case without recording any judgment of conviction or acquittal.

The present revision petition is filed by one Muhammad Ibrahim Sahib, son in-law of the deceased Sultan Marakayar. He was examined as fourth prosecution witness in the case; and it was he who reported the occurrence to the Village Munsif and to the Police (vide Exhibits C and D) on 18th February 1919, the day after the occurrence. Sultan Marakayar died on 20th February 1919. The Police charged the case on 21st March 1919.

It was found impossible to serve the second accused, Muhammad Abu Baker, and with the consent of the petitioner, the petition in so far as affected him was dismissed on 29th October 1920. It remains to consider what orders should be passed as regards the case against the first accused, Shaik Dawood.

With all respect to the learned Judges of the Punjab Chief Court who have held otherwise in Rama Nand v. Emperor (4) and Labhu v. Emperor (5), I must dissent from the view that a criminal prosecution under section 323 of the Indian Penal Code abates by reason of the death of the person hurt. It appears to be based on what seems to me a mistaken reading of section 89 of the Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881) which runs thus:—"All demands whatsoever, and all rights to prosecute or defend any suit or other proceeding, existing in favour of or against a person at the time of his decease, survive to and against his executors or administrators except causes of action for defamation, assault as defined in the Indian Penal Code, or other personal injuries not causing the death of the party, and except also cases where, after the death of the party, the relief sought could not be enjoyed, or granting it would be nugatory."

The provision has no reference to criminal prosecutions but to civil actions only. The right to institute criminal proceedings, subject to certain limitations contained in sections 195 to 199 of the Criminal Procedure Code, with which we are not concerned in this case, is common to any person cognizant of the commission of the offence, and does not exist merely in favour of the person injuriously affected by the offence. The word "prosecute" which occurs in the section implies no connection with criminal proceedings, but is used in the same sense as in sections 1 & and 16 of the Limitation Act. The use of the term "cause of action"—a phrase unknown to the Criminal Law,—is clearly indicative of the scope of the section. Section 89 of the Probate and Administration Act being inapplicable, it makes not the slightest difference whether the offence is compoundable or not.

This is in accordance with the views expressed in Ganesh Narayan Sathe, In re (1), Emperor v. Sultan Singh (2), and by this Court in Gangamma Dorayya, In re (3).

I have already referred to the provisions of sections 195 to 199 of the Criminal Procedure Code as provisions with which we are not now concerned, but I would not be understood as suggesting that the death of the complainant after the institution of the proceedings caused any abatement even in such cases. It was held by this Court in Gowdar Kotra, In re [High Court Proceedings, 13th July 1869] (6), that in a case of criminal prosecution for adultery the death of the husband after he had instituted the prosecution did not cause the prosecution to abate.

I would, therefore, direct the Magistrate to restore the case to his file and to dispose of it according to law, as against first accused Shaik Dawood.

COUTTS TROTTER, J.—I entirely agree, and I only add a few words of my own because there are two reported decisions of the Punjab Chief Court which countenance the view that section 89 of the Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881) applies to criminal as well as to civil proceedings. My Lord has pointed out several considerations that appear to me completely to dispose of such a contention; but there is a further one which reduces it to a positive absurdity. By the section all rights to prosecute or defend any suit or other proceeding, * * * * survive to and against his executors or administrators" —with certain defined exceptions. So that, if the Punjab view is correct, an executor or administrator can be put in the dock to answer for the criminal acts of his testators

This, of course, cannot have been pointed out to learned Judges, but it ought to have occurred to the reporters who put those decisions in the volumes of reports, and who had ample leisure to consider what was involved in them. With six High Courts, overburdened with work, putting forth a heavy outturn of judgments which they have no time to consider at length except in cases of special importance, some responsibility of discrimination ought to rest on the reporters as to what they select for publication*. The present indiscriminate system of reporting everything throws an unnecessary burden on both Bench and Bar and these cases seem to me to afford a signal instance of the mischief.

Petition allowed.

*NOTE.—We would fain have discussed, rather elaborately, the broad issue as to the responsibilities of Reporters raised by Mr. Justice Coutts Trotter, but, as the pages of "Indian Cases" do not appear to be a proper place for such a discussion we consider it sufficient to reproduce here a few sentences from a local Newspaper, "the Civil & Military Gazette," dated the 28th August 1921, inspired, as it would appear, by the very same remarks of the Honourable Judge :—"It is well-known that a judgment of a High Court, whether in a case of special importance or otherwise, and whether published or not, serves as a precedent which the lower Courts are bound to follow, and this predicates that all judgments give expression to the deliberate opinions of the Judges.....Mr. Justice Coutts-Trotter himself says that the Punjab Judges probably went wrong because Counsel did not point out to them a certain argument. Yet he expects the reporter to arrive at this without any such aid. Is it not asking a little too much of a reporter to sit in judgment upon the judgments of the learned Judges and to have to consider whether the case has been correctly decided or not.?..... ...The Reporter's selection of cases for publication must surely be confined to consideration of whether the judgment is of interest or lays down something new or such like."—[Ed.]

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 169, 110—Substantive offence not proved—Discharge—Proceedings under s. 110—Evidence of commission of substantive offence, admissibility of.

A High Court always looks with suspicion on cases where proceedings under section 110, Criminal Procedure Code, are started against a person after the Police have failed to procure evidence against him on a charge of a substantive offence Section 110, Criminal Procedure Code, is not intended for furnishing the Police with means of detaining persons against whom a definite charge has been made but broken down. [p. 552, col. 2.]

Accused was arrested on suspicion of being concerned in a dacoity, but discharged under section 169, Criminal Procedure Code, for want of sufficient evidence. He was re-arrested under section 55 of that Code, and proceedings were started against him under section 110 of the same Code wherein the Police put in evidence of his participation in the decoity :

Held, that the evidence was inadmissible, and that the conviction based on it must be set aside inasmuch as if the evidence was sufficient to prove the participation of the accused in the dacoity, he should have been brought to trial for that offence, and if it was not, the Court had no right to allow it to be brought in to prejudice its mind against the accused in his trial for bad livelihood. [p. 552, col. 2.]

Application against an order of the District Magistrate, Partabgarh, dated the 23rd July 1921, confirming an order of the Magistrate of the First Class, Partabgarh, dated the 12th July 1921.

The Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—In this case five persons, Bhagwat Prasad, Sitladin, Bhagwandin, Bhagotidin and Maharajdin, apply for revision of an order binding them over under section 110, Criminal Prosedure Code. They were bound over by a Deputy Magistrate, whose order has been upheld by the District Magistrate, on appeal. They were tried jointly with one Onkar whose associates they are said to be. This Onkar is undoubtedly a bad character and he did not appeal rom his conviction. The present applicants were arrested on suspicion of being concerned in a dacoity committed against one Chokh Lal in March last. They were discharged by the Police under section 169, Criminal Procedure Code, as there was no evidence sufficient to prove their participation in the dacoity. They were immediately re arrested under section 55, Criminal Procedure Code, and the present proceedings started against them. This Court, and, indeed, every High Court, always looks with grave suspicion on cases in which proceedings are started against an accused because the Police have failed to procure evidence against them on a charge of substantive offence. The bad-mashi sections were not intended for furnishing the Police with the means of detaining persons against whom a definite charge has been made but has broken down. In this case the evidence of the Sub-Inspector (P. W. No. 1) establishes that these people were not known to the Police as bad characters up to the time of the dacoity on Chokh Lal. They had never been under surveillance nor had history sheets been opened in respect of them. Indeed, one of them, Bhagwandin, was employed as Chowkidar, and was only dismissed in consequence of his being implicated in the dacoity. These facts should have made the Courts below very cautious in accepting evidence that the accused bore the general reputation of thieves and bad characters prior to their arrest. In this case the Courts have actually accepted evidence of their alleged participation in the dacoity as forming an important element in the case against them under section 110. Nine of the prosecution witnesses, P. W. Nos. 2 to 9 and P. W. No. 24, were called for no other purpose than to prove that the accused were concerned in the dacoity. It is needless to say that this evidence should have been wholly excluded. If it was sufficient to prove that the accused took part in the dacoity they should have been brought to trial for that offence. If it was insufficient, as it evidently was, the Courts had no right to allow it to be brought in to prejudice their minds on a trial for bad livelihood. This evidence has certainly influenced the minds of both the Deputy Magistrate, and the District Magistrate and its admission would in itself be a sufficient ground for setting aside the conviction of the accused. * * * * * I accordingly allow the application and set aside the orders of the Courts below. The accused, if in jail, will be released and the bonds and sureties, if executed, will be cancelled.

In a case triable summarily, the deposition of the witnesses need not be read over to them. [p. 553, col. 1.]

Criminal revision against an order of the Sessions Judge, Bhagalpore.

Mr. S. P. Bose, for the Petitioners.

Mr. Manohar Lal, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The four petitioners have been convicted under section 323, Indian Penal Code, and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 40 each. The learned Vakil on behalf of the petitioners urges that the conviction is bad, firstly, because the accused should not have been tried summarily; secondly, because the depositions of the witnesses were not read over to them, and, thirdly, because the evidence of the alibi on behalf of the petitioner No. 3 Sadullah was not considered.

The petition of complaint clearly discloses an offence under section 323, Indian Penal Code, although sections 147 and 447, were mentioned. The Magistrate, therefore, summoned the petitioners under section 323, Indian Penal Code, only.

The offence came under section 323 only which is triable summarily, vide section 260, sub-clause 1 (c) of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

On the 22nd of August, the date fixed for the examination of the witnesses, a petition was filed on behalf of the accused admitting that the case was triable summarily and praying that, in view of the fact that the dispute related to the land, the accused should be tried in a regular way. The Magistrate refused this petition on the ground that the case was purely of merit. Though there was a dispute concerning land, yet the occurrence took place when a Panchayat was called in order to settle the dispute and at the time nothing was pending in connection with the land. There was nothing in the character of the dispute between the parties which rendered it desirable that the case should not have been tried summarily and, therefore, subsection (2) of section 260 did not apply. The trial was, therefore, not illegal or irregular.

As to the second ground, a reference be made to section 355 of the Code of Criminal Procedure which does not require that the evidence of witnesses should be read over to them in a case triable summarily. Section 260, which requires the evidence to be read over to the witnesses, applies only to sections 356 and 357 and does not apply to section 355. This contention also is, therefore, unsubstantial.

As to the third ground, true, the petitioner No. 3 examined two witnesses for defence. The first witness expressly stated that he had no personal knowledge as to where the accused Sadullah was on the date of occurrence (7th of July 1921). Similarly, witness No. 2 stated that he could not give the date of service of Court process on Musaddi Mandal. This evidence was not at all an evidence of alibi. It does not appear from the judgment of the Sessions Judge that any reference to the alibi evidence was made before that Court in argument. This contention is also overruled.

The result is, that the application is dismissed.

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), s. 19, cl. xvii—Application for bail by Advocate—Fiscal Statutes—Interpretation.

An application for bail signed only by the Advocate of a prisoner is an application made by the prisoner himself and, under section 19, clause xvii Court Fees Act, does not require to be stamped.

Kali Prasad Banerji v. Gisborne and Co., 10 C. 6; 13 C. L. R. 156; 5 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 42, relied upon.

The Court Fees Act deals purely with fiscal matters and like all other Statutes imposing pecuniary burdens or encroaching upon or qualifying the rights of the subject, must be interpreted in favour of the subject.

Mr. L. K. Miller, for the Applicant.

Mr. R. G. Aiyangar, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The applicant in this case was arrested by the Police upon a charge of theft and while in custody he applied by his Advocate to the Magistrate for bail. The petition for bail was signed by the applicant's Advocate and was unstamped. The Magistrate then recorded the following order:—

"This application must be stamped as it is not covered by section 19, clause xvii, of the Stamp Act as it is presented by the Advocate on behalf of the person in duress."

The reference should, of course, have been to the Court Fees Act of 1870. The applicant by his Advocate comes to this Court in revision on the ground that the Magistrate was not justified in rejecting his application as requiring a stamp. It is urged that an application made by the Advocate of a prisoner in durees or under restraint is an application made by the prisoner himself. I am of opinion that this view is correct. It is suggested that if it had been the intention of the framers of the Court Fees Act to exempt applications made by the Advocate for a prisoner, this would have appeared in the Act by the addition of the words "by or on behalf of the prisoner" in clause xvii, section 19, or by some similar addition of words. But the Court Fees Act is an Act dealing with purely fiscal matters, and the rule of construction adopted by the Courts in England that Statutes imposing pecuniary burdens or encroaching upon or qualifying the rights of the subject must, in cases of doubt, be interpreted in favour of the subject, is one which may, I think, be properly applied in this country. There is no doubt, moreover, that in this Court it has been the practice to accept applications by Advocates on behalf of persons in custody within the meaning of section 19 clause xvii, without a Court-fee and I think it should be accepted as the established practise. A similar question arose in the case of Kali Prosad Banerji v. Gisborne and Co (1) where a judgment debtor in custody appealed against the order of the District Judge without affixing a Court-fee stamp to his memorandum of appeal. The memorandum was rejected by the Deputy Registrar, among other reasons, because he held that clause xvii of section 19 of the Court Fees Act applied only to petitions by a prisoner personally and not to petitions presented on his behalf by his Vakils. This view was, however, overruled by the Chief Justice. I am of opinion that the applications in this case should have been accepted as an application by the prisoner, although it was only signed by his Advocate and that it did not require to be stamped under the provisions of the Court Fees Act.

Jurisdiction—Magistrate—Order against bad character to leave any place—Executive order.

Muhammad Bakar Ali v. Hanwant Singh, A. W. N. (1897) 59, referred to.

Criminal Revision from an order of the District Magistrate, Muzaffarnagar, dated the 2nd September 1921.

Mr. S. C. Mukerjee, for the Applicant.

Mr. R. Malcomson, Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application by one Ram Prasad against whom an order has been made by the District Magistrate of Muzaffarnagar on the 2nd of September 1921. A certified copy of this order is before me and, so far as it relates to Ram Prasad, runs as follows :—"Read report of S. O. Khatoli: Ram Prasad is shown to be an undesirable man. He will leave Khatoli at once or be prosecuted as a bad character."

According to the instructions supplied to the learned Government Pleader the District Magistrate seems to take up the attitude that Ram Prasad cannot question this order and that, in any case, his application is premature inasmuch as no proceedings have been taken yet against him as being a bad character.

The order of the Magistrate directing Ram Prasad to leave the town of Khatoli under threats of being prosecuted as a bad character is wholly indefensible, and one which he had no jurisdiction to make. If he believes that Ram Prasad is a person who is liable to be dealt with as a bad character he can take against him such proceedings as are warranted by the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code. He has, so far as I am aware, no authority to order a man to leave any place under threats of being prosecuted as a bad character. The attention of the learned District Magistrate may profitably be drawn to the case which is reported in the Allahabad, Weekly Notes, 1897, at p. 59 [Muhammad Bakar Ali v. Hanwant Singh (1)]. In the judgment which was delivered by a Bench of this Court the learned Magistrate will find some observations which are pertinent to the matter in hand and which deal with the claim of Magistrates to issue executive orders for which they can produce no statutory authority.

I set aside the order of the learned District Magistrate accordingly as being illegal and ultra vires.

Criminal revision against an order of the District Magistrate, Darbhanga, refusing to quash the proceedings against the petitioner under section 107 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

Mr. L. K. Jha, for the Petitioner.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application in criminal revisional jurisdiction and it arises in a connection with an order made by a Magistrate of the First Class at Darbhanga, purporting to act under section 107 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The circumstances under which the law was thus put into operation are very simple and arose out of a quarrel between the complainant and the present applicant as to who had the right to collect rents from the tenants of a certain mouza. There is no question but that the right to collect rent may be regarded as a matter which might fall within the purview of section 145, Criminal Procedure Code. It is argued here for the complainant that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction, in the circumstances of this case, to deal with the matter under section 107 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and that, therefore, his order should be set aside. It is contended that section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, was the section which the Magistrate was bound to utilise. Now, I am far from saying that section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, would not have been useful for application to this particular case and I am inclined to think, looking at all the circumstances, that it would have been probably more appropriate to have applied the provisions of section 145, Criminal Procedure Code rather than to have dealt with the matter under section 107. There does seem to have been some definite sort of dispute between parties as to who had the right to collect the rents, and I do not know that I can definitely say that the applicant here had no sort of right or pretension to his claim. It is important to observe that the Magistrate did undoubtedly come to a conclusion as to who had this right, for he bases the view that the complainant was in the right upon the evidence which was adduced by him to that effect. At the same time, he comes to the conclusion that the applicant should be bound over personally to keep the peace for a period of one year and enter into a bond of Rs 200, on the ground that there was likelihood of a breach of the peace owing to the probability that the applicant would commit acts of force and had, indeed, attempted forcibly to collect rents from the villagers. The question, therefore, whether the Magistrate had jurisdiction to deal with this question under section 107, Criminal Procedure Code, does not strictly, therefore, depend upon any mere determination of who had the lawful claim to the right to collect the rents, but hinges on the fact found by the Magistrate that the actions of the applicant were such as were likely to disturb the public peace. It has been very ably argued for the applicant that, where there is a dispute about land, section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, binds down the Magistrate to deal with such a matter under its provisions. I have already, however, pointed out that in this case it does not seem to me that materiality of the question of possession of the right to collect the rents is very evident or that the Magistrate's decision need depend entirely upon such a foundation. The position of the law is not, I think, in my opinion, altogether very satisfactory. So far, at any rate, as it has been placed before me, it would seem from the case of Emperor v. Abbas (1) that the

(1) 12 Ind. Cas. 833; 39 C. 150; 14 C. L. J. 429; 16 C. W. N. 83; 12 Cr. L. J. 569.

Full Bench of that Court has quite clearly laid down that the fact that there is a dispute concerning land likely to cause a breach of peace does not deprive a Magistrate of jurisdiction under section 107, Criminal Procedure Code, where the Magistrate is informed that any person is likely to commit a breach of the peace or disturb public tranquillity or to do any wrongful act that might probably occasion a breach of the peace or disturb the public tranquillity. What I understand, this is very clear language to me, is that when a Magistrate has reason to think that an individual is likely to commit a breach of the peace he has jurisdiction, even though the case for the apprehended breach of the peace may relate to a dispute about land, to put into operation the provisions of section 107, Criminal Procedure Code. Now, it is quite true that in this Court Mr. Justice Jwala Prasad in the case of Himmat Mian v. Emperor (2) has held that when there is a clear dispute regarding the possession of land, the proper section to proceed under is section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, which not only is more effective in order to prevent the breach of the peace, but also is one which causes the least prejudice to the contending parties. I have no reason to quarrel with that expression of opinion. I think that, where there is a dispute about land and where there is some bona fide claim on the part of both parties, the appropirate and proper section to be operated is section 145, Criminal Procedure Code. But I do not feel justified in stating that a Magistrate who has reason to believe that there is a likelihood, owing to the action of an individual, of the occurrence of the breach of the peace, has no jurisdiction even when the cause of the likelihood of the breach of the peace has its origin in a dispute about land, to put into operations the provision of section 107, Criminal Procedure Code. That is what the Magistrate has, I think, here done and I cannot see any good authority for saying that what he has done has been done without jurisdiction even though it may be that it would have been preferable that the provisions of section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, should have been brought into play.

For these reasons, I see no ground for interference in this matter.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 439—Summonses and warrants, execution of—Court, duty of—Conviction without hearing defence witnesses, illegality of—Revision.

It is the business of a Court to see that its summonses and warrants are duly executed, and if an accused insists on a Court issuing process for the attendance of his witnesses he has done all that the law requires of him. It is not his duty to take suitable steps to have his witnesses brought into Court but it is for the Court to do it.

Where, therefore, an accused is convicted without hearing his witnesses, as they fail to appear, as summonses and warrants are not executed on them, the conviction is illegal and cannot be sustained.

Criminal revision from an order of the Sessions Judge, Cawnpore, dated the 30th May 1921.

Messrs. S. P. Sinha and Beni Bahadur, for the Applicant.

Mr. R. Malcomson, Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This application for revision must be accepted. It has been admitted on the ground put forward in the petition that the Magistrate who tried the case had wrongfully disposed of it without hearing the defence evidence of the applicant.

A perusal of the order sheet shows that the witnesses cited by the accused failed to appear in Court. Summonses and warrants were issued with the object of bringing these witnesses into Court, but neither were executed. The Magistrate seems to have got tired at last and proceeded to give judgment, remarking that it was the business of the accused to take suitable steps to have his witnesses brought into Court.

It was the business of the Court to see that its summonses and warrants were duly executed, and if the accused insisted on the Court issuing process for the attendance of these witnesses he had done all that the law required of him. It was for the Court to do the rest. I, therefore, allow this application, set aside the conviction and sentence and send the case back to the Magistrate for disposal in accordance with law after hearing such witnesses as the accused may desire to call in his defence.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 145, 360, applicability of—Evidence of witnesses not read over, effectof—Irregularity—Trial, if vitiated—Accused, meaning of—Defect of parties, effect of—De facto possession, meaning of.

Section 360 of the Criminal Procedure Code applies to trials under Chapter XII and the word "accused" in that section does include persons against whom an order under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, has been drawn. [p. 557, col. 2.]

Therefore, in the case of proceedings under Chapter XII the evidence must be read over to the witnesses. [p. 557, col. 2.]

The non-reading over of depositions to the witnesses in a proceeding under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, does not, however, invalidate the trial itself [p. 557, col. 1.]

A tenant who is in possession of a portion of the land in dispute is not a necessary party to a proceeding under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code. [p. 558, col. 1.]

Krishna Kamini v. Abdul Jubbar, 30 C. 155; 6 C. W. N. 737 (F B.), followed.

Messrs. Manuk, K. N. Chowdhuri, S. K. Banerji and S. S. Bose, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioners are the second party to a proceeding under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, in which possession has been declared to be in the 1st party. The first ground which is urged for revision of the order is, that none of the depositions of the witnesses were read over to them as required by section 360, Criminal Procedure Code, and, therefore, the presumption of correctness does not attach to the record under section 80 of the Evidence Act because the evidence was not taken according to law, and, therefore, whether admissible or not, it is of no value and there is nothing to support the finding.

In reply, it is contended that section 360 does not apply to trials under Chapter XII because there is no accused in such a proceeding. I cannot agree to this argument. If the word "accused" in that section does not include persons against whom an order under section 145 (1) has been drawn then there is a plain inconsistency in the section itself and the Court must construe it as best as it can. If so interpreted, the section must, at least, mean that in the case of proceedings under Chapter XII the evidence must be read over to the witnesses.

It is further argued that, even if there is a defect in the manner of recording the evidence, that does not invalidate the trial itself. The decisions are not consistent; but the weight of opinion is that, where there is this defect in the record of the deposition, the witness cannot be convicted of perjury in a subsequent trial. But it is altogether a different proposition, and one for which there is no authority, that because the depositions were not read over to the witnesses there was, therefore, no evidence before the Magistrate on which he could come to a finding on the question of possession in the trial in which these depositions were made. I can see no ground in principle for such a contention and this objection must be overruled,

The second ground is, that one Fadulli Mandar was also a tenant of a portion of the land in dispute and as he was no party to these proceedings, the proceedings are bad for defect of parties. This question is concluded by the decision in Krishna Kamini v Abdul Jubbar (1) and the contention must fail.

The third ground is, that the order under section 145 (1) was drawn up on the 5th January 1921, the Police reported that the petitioners had taken possession of the land on the 9th October 1920 and, therefore, the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to declare the opposite party in possession but could only declare the petitioners in possession. If, in fact, the petitioners dispossessed the opposite party more than two months before the 5th January 1921 then, clearly, the Court had no jurisdiction to declare the possession of the opposite party. But the Magistrate finds that there was no actual possession by the petitioners. He refers to the Police report and to the evidence on this point in detail and comes to the conclusion that such a stealthy act of ploughing and sowing when the opposite party was absent in Court in the most haphazard manner, cannot be held to be an act of possession. De facto possession, with which alone these proceedings are concerned, means effective occupation or control. The Magistrate evidently thought that the exclusive power of control by the petitioners could not be said to be manifest in these acts. On the facts I cannot say that the Magistrate was not entitled to find that there had been no change of actual possession, therefore, there is no question of jurisdiction.

The application is dismissed.

Discussion of a criminal case at a Club by a Civil Surgeon or any of the other officers who are likely to be concerned in the disposal of it before a Sessions Judge who is to try the case, is a sufficient ground for transfer of the case from the Court of that Sessions Judge.

Criminal miscellaneous application under section 526 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

Mr. S. C. Mukerji, for the Applicant.

Mr. Lalit Mahon Banerji, Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application made on behalf of one Muhammad Daraz whose case has been committed to the Court of Session at Farrukhabad. I have perused the affidavit and the reply which has been received from the learned Sessions Judge. One of the grounds on which the transfer has been sought is that the Civil Surgeon of Fatehgarh has been discussing this case at the local Club with the officers of the station including the learned Sessions Judge. The learned Sessions Judge in his explanation admits that he had heard one or two discussions of the case at the Club. That fact by itself is, in my opinion, sufficient to justify an order for transfer. Discussion of a case like this at the Club by the Civil Surgeon or any of the other officers who are likely to be concerned in the disposal of it is an extremely improper proceeding. The learned Sessions Judge suggests that it would be inconvenient on the score of cost to transfer the case to some other district. The answer to this is that this cannot be helped. He suggests that a special officer should be deputed to hear the case. This is beyond my power. I have no authority to depute a Special Judge to hear this case. The case will, therefore, be transferred for disposal to the file of the Sessions Judge of Cawnpore.

Section 122, Central Provinces Municipal Act, cannot be interpreted as making punishable an omission to remove an existing encroachment not made by the accused person

The word "obstructs" in section 122 of the Act applies to the person who built or caused to be built the encroachment and not to the accused who originally had nothing to do with the erection of the encroachment.

Sub-section (2) of section 67 read with section 139 of the Central Provinces Municipal Act provides a remedy for an encroachment not made by the present owner or occupant of the erection which is an encroachment.

Application for revision of an order of the District Magistrate, Wardha, dated the 17th September 1920, dismissing Appeal No. 32 of 1920 arising out of Criminal Case No. 32 of 1920, decided on 9th August 1920 by the Tahsildar and Magistrate, Second Class, Arvi.

Mr. W. H. Dhabe, for the Applicant.

Mr. G. P. Dick, for the Crown.

ORDER.—The applicant owns a shop within the Municipal limits of Arvi town. In front of his shop there is a chabutra, or raised platform, which the Municipal Committee says is an encroachment on Municipal land. The applicant was served with a notice to remove this chabutra. He failed to do so and he has been prosecuted under section 122 of the Central Provinces Municipal Act and convicted under that section by the Second Class Magistrate, Arvi. An appeal to the District Magistrate has been summarily rejected. It was contended for the applicant that, as he did not make the encroachment himself but inherited the chabutra together with his house from his father, he is not liable under the section above quoted. Other defences were also raised but it is unnecessary to consider these at present. The evidence on record makes it fairly clear that the encroachment, if it is one, has existed for a long number of years and I am prepared to accept the statement of the applicant, corroborated as it is by his evidence, that he did not himself build or have any hand in the building of this chabutra but that it was inherited by him from his father. It seems to me that the word "encroaches" in section 122 prima facie means commits an act of encroachment and that no one can be held liable for an act or admission unless such act or admission is declared to be an offence. The offence made criminally punishable under section 122 is the act of making an encroachment, and I do not think that the section can be interpreted as making punishable an omission to remove an existing encroachment not made by the accused person. I see no force in the learned District Magistrate's contention that the accused is liable to be punished under section 122 if he has allowed the chabutra to stand on Municipal ground. The word "obstructs" would apply to the person who built or caused to be built the encroachment and not to the accused who originally had nothing to do with the erection of the chabutra. It is not as if the Municipality had no remedy in a case of this nature. Sub-section (2) of section 67 read with section 139 provides a remedy. I am of opinion that the accused cannot be convicted of an offence under section 122 in respect of this chabutra, because the said encroachment is not proved to have been made by him. The conviction is illegal and I set aside conviction and sentence. The fine, if paid, must be refunded.

The Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—Tasadduq Ahmad Khan Sherwani has appeared before us to-day to show cause why he, being an Advocate of this Court, should not be suspended or struck off the Rolls. On the 1st of July 1921, he made a speech at Chara. That matter was investigated by the Magistrate, who, on the 18th of July 1921, convicted Mr. Sherwani under section 153A of the Indian Penal Code and sentenced him to imprisonment. The evidence, as presented to the Magistrate, satisfied him that an offence had been committed. Mr. Sherwani, who has been called to the Bar in England and is an Advocate of this Court, did not, when before the Magistrate, make any defence. He put in a written statement, but he did not criticise the witnesses or analyse the speech on which the prosecution was mainly based. He commenced to-day to do both. We pointed out to him that the case in the Magistrate's Court could not be re-opened in these proceedings, and we referred to the decision of the Privy Council Rajendra Nath Mukerji In the matter of (1). In that case there had been an inclination in this very Court to permit the Vakil's Counsel to go behind the conviction in order that it might be shown that he had committed no offence in law. When this matter was argued in the Privy Council they said definitely that there could be no argument to show that the conviction was, in the circumstances, improper. Mr. Sherwani, therefore, comes before us to-day as a man convicted of an offence in which he promoted or attempted to promote feelings of enmity or hatred between different classes of His Majesty's subjects. He has told us that in his view an offence under that section involves no element of moral turpitude. We disagree very strongly with this view. We think that moral turpitude is always involved in the commission of an act which comes within that section, and may indeed involve an offence of the deepest moral turpitude.

We have to consider now, what is the proper order which should be passed. During the argument it was indicated to Mr. Sherwani that there might come a day when he would regret not being a member of the profession. We feel that we ought to be cautious not to pass such an order as would for all time deprive Mr. Sherwani of his right to practise as an Advocate. But that is a very different thing from saying that he ought, at this moment, to remain an Advocate of the Court. In our view, he ought not to be allowed to continue on the Rolls. In view of the conviction which has been passed against him, we order that the name of Tasadduq Ahmad Khan Sherwani be struck off the Rolls of this Court. If, however, it should happen that, hereafter, Mr. Sherwani should desire to re-join the profession and should make an application to the Court, we hope the Bench who will have to decide that matter will give it favourable consideration if they are of opinion that the circumstances then put forward by Mr. Sherwani and his demeanour and attitude in the matter make it just and reasonable for them to do so.

J. P. Order accordingly.

versus

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 30—Confession of co-accused, admissibility of—Conviction, whether can be based on it alone.

A confession of an accused not being declared relevant by the Evidence Act as against a co-accused cannot be treated as substantive evidence and a judgment cannot be based upon it so far as the co-accused is concerned. A Court may under section 30 of the Evidence Act take it into consideration with or supplementarily to relevant facts which may form the basis of a judgment. [p. 569, cols. 1 & 2]

Emperor v. Noni Gopal Gupta [Lalit Mohan Chakravarti], 10 Ind. Cas 582; 38 C. 559; 15 C. W. N. 593; 12 Cr. L. J. 256 (S. B.), relied on.

A confession of a co-accused must be regarded with suspicion. [p. 570, col. 1.]

Bala v. Emperor, Criminal Appeal No. 215 of 1915, (unreported), relied on.

FACTS :—Two accused Shrawan and Sapku Patil filed separate Appeals Nos. 246 of 1920 and 247 of 1920, respectively, against their conviction for murder by the Sessions Judge. Both the Judges (Messrs. Hallifax and Prideaux, A. J. Cs.) who heard these appeals agreed in dismissing the appeal of Shrawan but held different opinions about the guilt of Sapku, but they recorded only one judgment each in Criminal Appeal No. 245 of 1920, Shrawan v. Emperor saying that the judgment would also deal with the appeal of Sapku Patil, Criminal Appeal No. 247 of 1920. Owing to this difference of opinion about the guilt of Sapku Patil, Criminal Appeal No. 247 of 1920 was referred to Mr. Kotval, A. J. C., for opinion. Full facts appear from the following dissentient judgments of Hallifax and Prideaux A. J. Cs. dated the 10th of February 1921 :—

HALLIFAX, A. J. C.—This judgment will deal also with the appeal of the co-accused Sapku Patil (Criminal Appeal No. 247 of 1920). Against Shrawan the case is perfectly clear. It cannot be, nor has it been suggested, that the evidence of the unfortunate child's mother, Musammat Raju (P.W. No. 12), cannot be accepted as entirely true. That with the other evidence proves the following facts beyond all doubt. It was a most unusual thing for Shrawan to return to the house at all on that day. Nevertheless, he did return in the afternoon for no apparent reason and tried to detach the boy from his mother. He again returned towards the evening and made a false statement of the reason. He then hung about the house doing nothing and followed the boy when he left his mother to go round to the front of the house. He was seen there with the child in his arms within, at the most, half an hour of the time when he was drowned in the pit in the next 'bari,' and he was the last person to be seen with him. But in place of any explanation as to where or when he parted from him he can only offer a false denial of having been even in the village during that afternoon. The child was too young to go as far as the pit by himself and must have been taken there. The direct way through an opening in the fence did not exist till after his death, as his father, Raghu (P. W. No. 13), explains, and even this was obstructed by thorns about a foot in height, which a child of four could not get over. Even if he had gone there by himself, it is very improbable that he could have got drowned without his cries being heard. Indeed, it is quite probable that the Mukaddam, Sona Patil, did hear, and perhaps even see, the drowning, but with characteristic cowardice or more probably because he was mixed up in the plot himself, as the false report he sent to the Police indicates, he refuses to say anything about it. Sapku Patil, who had a very strong motive for desiring the boy's death, had for some time been trying, directly or indirectly, to induce Shrawan to drown him and Shrawan had shown signs of yielding. All this by itself would perhaps give rise to no more than a very strong suspicion, not quite amounting to proof, that Shrawan had murdered the child.

2. But we have, in addition, his own detailed confession, and, so far as it concerns himself, there is every reason to believe that it is perfectly true. Shrawan was arrested on the 15th of September at noon. The Sub-Inspector, who was making the investigation, started with him for Bhandara the same evening for the purpose of getting the confession which he had already made recorded by a Magistrate, arriving there about midday on the 16th. Shrawan was taken that evening to the Magistrate's residence, as the Courts were shut on that day, but the Magistrate very properly refused to record any confession in those circumstances. On the following day he was produced in Court. The Magistrate then told the accused he would have two hours for reflection after which anything he desired to say would be taken down, and took care to ensure that no policeman was within his sight or hearing. At the end of two hours the Magistrate questioned him fully and carefully and he declared that, neither the Police nor anybody else had ill-treated him or held out any threat or promise to him to induce him to make a confession or had told him what he was to say. Even then he was given another hour for reflection, after which he was told to say anything he wished to say and then related the whole story almost without any further questions. He certainly takes the greater share of the blame on himself, admitting that the child was decoyed away and killed by him, though he says that it was at the instigation of Sapku Patel, and that Sapku was present at the murder, and not Mangria, as he had said before. The commitment enquiry began on 29th September 1920 and at the end of it the accused was examined by the Magistrate. It was then, for the first time, that he said his confession was untrue. He declared the Sub-Inspector had tutored him and had threatened him with further torture if he failed to make a confession before the Magistrate and to say in it just what he had been told to say, and this he repeated in the Sessions Court. The emptiness of the allegation is apparent from the fact that though Shrawan was defended in both Courts by an able Pleader, no suggestion of anything of the kind was made in the cross-examination of the Sub-Inspector or in any other way, except in the statements of the accused. How little the Magistrate knew, when he began to examine him, that Shrawan had any intention of resiling from his confession is apparent from the first question he put, which proceeds on the assumption that he still stuck to it. And even after that no questions were put to the Sub-Inspector or to any other witness in the Sessions Court in regard to any threat or inducement held out to Shrawan or any torture inflicted on him or anything done or said to him in reference to the making of his confession. It seems beyond doubt that the confession is perfectly true so far as Shrawan himself is concerned, and we are bound to act upon it and to find him guilty. The attachment of the unfortunate child to Shrawan made the murder easier as well as more diabolical and for such a cold blooded and despicable crime, committed, doubtless, solely for a promised pecuniary reward, the only possible sentence is that of death

3. As regards Sapku Patil, I may say at once that the finding that he was present at the commission of the murder cannot, possibly, be upheld. It rests solely on the statement of the co-accused Shrawan and, though I am of opinion that a conviction on such a basis is not illegal, as I shall explain later, still I do not believe this statement of Shrawan's. That he first told the Police that Mangria was there and not Sapku, is on record, in spite of the strenuous and partially successful efforts of Sapku's learned Pleader to exclude evidence so entirely favourable to his client. Even if Sapku was entirely responsible for the abominable crime, he would probably arrange to be elsewhere during its commission, though it is significant that if he was really in some other village he could very easily have established the fact by convincing evidence but has failed to produce a single witness. An untrue statement of Sapku's presence is also one that Shrawan would very naturally tack on to an otherwise perfectly true account of the matter. If Sapku was really the prime mover in the matter, it would appear to Shrawan that he was likely to escape all punishment unless he could be shown to have been present at the commission of the offence. I do not go so far as to say that I disbelieve Shrawan's statement that Sapku was present when the boy was murdered. It may be true, but I am not prepared to accept it as true by itself. It still remains to be seen, however, whether Sapku is proved to have abetted the murder by instigation or conspiracy and so to be liable under section 109 of the Indian Penal Code to the punishment prescribed by section 302 of that Code.

4. The statement made by Shrawan that he murdered the child at the instigation of Sapku Patil and in conspiracy with him is supported by convincing proof that Sapku had a very strong motive for desiring the boy's death and that nobody else in the world had, and by the evidence of conspiracy given by Ishria Mahar (P. W. No. 5) and the boy's natural parents Musammat Raju (P. W. No. 12) and Raghu Kunbi (P. W. No. 13). The boy's age precludes the possibility of anybody desiring his death but a person who wanted his property. It has been suggested that the widows of his adoptive father had this motive, but the contest was not between them and the murdered boy, Kashiram, but between the boy and Sapku's son whom he was setting up in opposition to Kashiram. Whichever boy succeeded, the position of the widows would be the same. We have, indeed, in this case not only proof of the existence of a strong motive in Sapku exclusively, a fact which is relevant under section 8 of the Evidence Act, but we have further proof, relevant under section 11 of the Act, of circumstances which render the instigation of the murder by Sapku highly probable. That a person of his class and position in life would, in these circumstances, probably procure a murder which would be so advantageous to him as that of the boy Kashiram is abundantly clear from the facts that mention of its probability was made and the boy's parents were warned beforehand, as they state themselves, and also that he was accused of it immediately the boy's body was discovered, even before it was at all really certain that the death was not accidental. In the deposition of Ishria Mahar (P. W. No. 5) there is certainly much falsehood as to detail. It is clear from an examination of the whole case that Ishria was himself one of the principal persons in the conspiracy and one of the two persons who were mainly instrumental in seducing Shrawan but to save his own skin, as soon as Shrawan was arrested, he went at once to the Police and made a sort of confession, minimising his own share and declaring that he had warned the boy's parents of the plot. This is the story he repeated in Court. Now, after careful examination I believe Ishria's statement that Sapku Patil asked him in the presence of certain others to kill the boy Kashiram to be true. The fact that he lies in saying that he refused and that he warned the boy's parents tends to lessen that belief but does not destroy it. I refuse entirely to recognise the artificial distinction so often raised between what a prudent man would believe "out of Court," and what a Judge or Magistrate is allowed to believe in a judicial proceeding. There is no such distinction. As to the oft quoted maxim "falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus" if that were not itself entirely false the result would be that the whole of the depositions of the vast majority of witnesses would have to be left entirely out of consideration.

5. It is obvious, however, that there is not sufficient basis for the conviction of Sapku Patil for instigation and conspiracy in proof of the existence in him alone of a strong motive and of circumstances making such a course highly probable, the evidence of Ishria that he asked him to commit the murder and the evidence of the boy's parents that they saw him in consultation with the persons mentioned by Ishria and the accused Shrawan as the conspirators. These matters are, to my mind, sufficient corroboration of the statement made by Shrawan of the complicity of Sapku Patil, that is to say, they led me to believe that statement to be true. But without that statement they amount practically to nothing in the way of direct implication of Sapku. Therefore, unless we can start with the statement of Shrawan as a basis, treating it as substantive evidence to be corroborated by the other matters mentioned, it must be held that there is no evidence against Sapku. In Empress v. Karim Bax (1) Stevens, J. C., held that this could not be done. The principles laid down in that case are these. The testimony of an accomplice is substantive evidence, and a conviction may legally proceed on it without corroboration. The statement of a co-accused is on a different footing. "It is not in itself substantive evidence and we may not start with it as a basis, proceeding to enquire how far it is corroborated. It can only be used in a subsidiary manner in connection with the substantive evidence adduced in the case." The opposite view was taken, though this ruling was not mentioned, by a Bench of this Court in 1911 in the unreported case of Emperor v. Malhari (Criminal Appeal No. 38 B of 1911) where Batten, A. J. C., and Stanyon, A. J. C., quoting with approval the Allahabad case of Emperor v. Kehri (2), held that a statement made by a co-accused and admitted under section 30 of the Evidence Act, "is a piece of evidence as relevant as any other kind of evidence," and that "a conviction based on the uncorroborated statement of a co accused would not be illegal."

6. It seems necessary to examine the views expressed by the High Courts on this point. In support of the proposition that, as against an accused person, the confession of a co-accused is not evidence but something different which can only be taken into consideration, so that a conviction based on such a statement alone, with or without corroboration, is illegal, it seems usual to quote the judgment of the Calcutta Full Bench in Empress v. Ashootosh Chuckerbutty (3) though the support it receives from that ruling is not great. It is certainly supported by the ruling of Benson and Sankaran Nair, JJ., in Giddigadu v. Emperor (4) and by a judgment of Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C. J., Brett and Chatterjee, JJ., concurring, in Emperor v. Noni Gopal Gupta [Lalit Mohan Chakravarti] (5). In the first case mentioned all the learned Judges were agreed that the confession of a co-accused was evidence and Sir Richard Garth, C. J., added that it ought to be dealt with by the Court just like any other evidence and if sufficiently corroborated could form the basis of a conviction. Mr. Justice Jackson, after finding that such a statement is "evidence" as much as the deposition of a witness, goes on to say: "There remains the question of the effect to be given to such confessions, and this point also appears to me not doubtful. The confession clearly cannot stand higher as to probative force than the testimony of an accomplice, who is declared to be a competent witness against an accused person (section 133) and the law does not say of the confession as it says of such testimony, that 'a conviction is not illegal merely because it proceeds upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice'. That being so, I consider that we are free to lay down the rule, which would undoubtedly prevail in England if it were possible that such matter could be admitted, and to hold that a conviction based upon such confession alone would be illegal, and not only so, but that such confession will not legally suffice, when corroborated by other facts of which evidence is offered, unless those facts are such that, if believed to exist, they would of themselves suffice to support a conviction". In this quotation I have ventured to correct a somewhat obvious misprint in the report, in which the first two letters of the word "illegal" are omitted and prefixed to the word "legally" which comes immediately below it in the concluding passage of the extract. Markby, J., concurred in this view with hesitation and McDonell, J., without remark. Ainslie, J., apparently agreed with the learned Chief Justice in thinking that a conviction on the uncorroborated statement of a co accused admitted under section 30 of the Evidence Act would not be illegal but was in practice impossible.

7. With all respect, I feel bound to say that I am unable to follow the argument in the passage quoted from the judgment of Mr. Justice Ainslie, and I concur entirely in the following passage from the judgment of Heaton, J., in Gangapa Kardepa v. Emperor (6). Referring to Empress v. Ashootosh Chuckerbutty (3) the learned Judge said:—

(2) 29 A. 434; 4 A. L. J. 310; A. W. N. (1907) 140; 5 Cr. L. J. 360.

"In this case the Judges did regard the confession of a co-accused as evidence for reasons which to me are convincing. Therefore, it is that I feel bound to decline to follow the ruling in Queen-Empress v. Khandia (7) and feel that I must treat the confessions of the co-accused as evidence for the purpose of all the accused. The second point is that, even so, regarding the confessions they are evidence of so peculiar a character that to found a conviction on that class of evidence alone is illegal, and for this proposition there is the authority of the Calcutta case already referred to. But to this proposition also I must respectfully demur. There is, I believe, no law whatever prescribing the credibility of evidence. Matters relating to the admission of evidence are matters of law, but the credibility of evidence is a matter left to the knowledge, experience and logic of the Court that has to decide on the evidence. I think that much of the confusion which has arisen more particularly in the case of accomplice evidence, has arisen out of the fact, that questions of credence and questions of law have not been rigorously kept apart but have been confused together. Moreover, I think that if a Court lays down a rule touching the credibility of evidence it does that which it has no authority to do and which it ought to be against the conscience of the Court to do. How can a Court, however eminent, lawfully say that a Jury in some future case shall not be convinced by some particular class of evidence?" In regard to the dictum of Ainslie, J., that even the corroboration must be of evidence of facts "such that if believed to exist they would of themselves suffice to support a conviction." I would quote the judgment of this Court in Emperor v. Malhari (Criminal Appeal No. 38 B of 1911) the case above-mentioned. Stanyon, A. J. C., said: "A good deal has been written and said about the scope of sectin 30 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872; and some of the earlier published decisions on the point would make the confession of one accused something less than evidence against his accomplice jointly tried with him for the same offence, so that no conviction of the latter could be sustained thereon if the other evidence would be insufficient to prove his guilt. We are unable to take this view. We do not think it was the intention of the Legislature that section 30 should provide a mere superfluity, to be used only in cases already established by other evidence."

8. The judgment in Giddigadu v. Emperor (4) is very short. The learned Judges, Benson and Sankaran Nair, JJ., first lay down no more than that a conviction would be most unsafe in practice if there was no evidence other than the confession, and add at the end of their judgment that, "conviction on such a confession alone has long been held to be a case of no evidence and bad in law", citing two Madras cases of 1873 and 1876, to which I am unable to refer, and the Calcutta Full Bench case already discussed. In 1911, in Emperor v. Noni Gopal Gupta [Lalit Mohan Chakravarti] (5), Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C. J., Brett and Chatterjee, JJ., concurring, said: "While admissions, a word which embraces confessions, are by section 21 relevant, and may be proved as against the person making them, all that section 30 provides is, that the Court may take them into consideration, as against other persons. This distinction of language is significant, and it appears to me that its true effect is, that the Court can only treat a confession as lending assurance to other evidence against a co-accused. Thus, to illustrate my meaning, in the view I take, a conviction on the confession of a co-accused alone would be bad in law. This reading of the section appears to me to gain confirmation from the language of section 5." The principle enunciated is based on the conclusion that such a confession is not evidence, which is directly opposed to the unanimous decision of the Full Bench of the same Court in the case already discussed, which was not mentioned by the learned Chief Justice.

9. In a later case in the same Court, Emperor v. Babar Ali (8), Fletcher, J., proceeded entirely on the assumption that a conviction could rest on the confession of a co-accused if it were sufficiently corroborated. After considering the effect of the confessions in that case as against those who made them, the learned Judge said: "As against the remaining four accused, the confessions can be taken into consideration, but the Court requires corroboration before it will act upon the confessions of co-accused. The corroboration in the evidence in this case, although it raises a case of suspicion, falls far short of what is required to support a conviction. It consists principally of statements of witnesses as to seeing the accused, or some of them, together on the night of the occurrence, and as against one of the accused as to the identification of certain ornaments found with one of the accused which had sometime or other been pledged with the deceased woman. These statements, though giving rise to suspicion, are consistent with the innocence of these four accused". Finally, we have the dissentient judgment of Mr. Justice Shah in Gangapa Kardepa v. Emperor (6). The learned Judge was of opinion that a conviction based only upon matter which can be taken into consideration under section 30 of the Evidence Act and is not corroborated by other evidence is bad in law, but apparently accepted the view that such matter could be treated as substantative evidence, and a conviction could rest upon it if there were sufficient other evidence to justify a belief in its truth.

10. Against the proposition that the confession of a co-accused can be used as a piece of substantive evidence and that we may start with it as a basis, proceeding to enquire how far it is corroborated, we have, therefore, the dictum of Stevens, J. C., in Emperor v. Karim Bax (1), that of Ainslie, J., in the Empress v. Ashootosh Chuckerbutty (3), which on examination works out very nearly to laying down a "rule touching the credibility of evidence" of which Heaton, J., speaks in the passage quoted above, the judgment of the Madras High Court in Giddigadu v. Emperor (4) which rests entirely on authority to which I cannot refer, and the dictum of Jenkins, C. J., in Emperor v. Noni Gopal Gupta [Lalit Mohan Chakravarti] (5) which apparently was not followed by Fletcher, J., in Emperor v. Babar Ali (8).

11. On the other hand, we have reasoned and to my mind convincing judgments by Knox, J., and Richards, J., in Emperor v. Kehri (2), by a Bench of this Court in Emperor v. Malhari (Criminal Appeal No. 38-B of 1911) and by Heaton, J., Macleod, C.J., concurring, and, on this point, Shah, J., not dissenting, in Gangapa Kardepa v. Emperor (6). To these I might add the reasoning in the judgment of the learned Sessions Judge (Mr. F. K. Boyd) which is published as an annexure to Gangapa Kardepa v. Emperor (6). There is also the judgment of Garth, C. J., in the Empress v. Ashootosh Chuckerbutty (3), and indeed the unanimous decision of the Full Bench in that case that such a statement is substantive evidence. I have not mentioned the Allahabad case of Queen-Empress v. Nirmal Das (9) nor the Bombay case of Queen-Empress v. Khandia (7) as they may both be taken as overruled by the later decisions quoted. In any case, the reasons stated in the later rulings appear to me much more convincing. I concur entirely in the views expressed by the Allahabad High Court in Emperor v. Kehri (2) and by Mr. Justice Heaton in Gangapa Kardepa v. Emperor (6), and hold that in this case the confession made by Shrawan can be treated as substantive evidence against Sapku Patil, and if it is found to be credible, because it is sufficiently corroborated by other evidence or matters proper for consideration, Sapku Patil can be convicted on it. I have already stated that I believe his statement that Sapku Patel instigated him and conspired with him to murder the boy, because that statement is sufficiently corroborated by the evidence of Ishria (P. W. No. 5), Musammat Raju (P. W. No. 12) and Raghu (P. W. No. 13) and that of the witnesses who relate the circumstances of the disputes and litigation over the adoption and the property. Convincing proof of that somebody instigated Shrawan to commit this murder, that it is highly probable that Sapku Patil did so, and that it is practically impossible that anybody else did so, seems to me sufficient proof that Sapku Patil did so. Under section 109 of the Indian Penal Code, Sapku is liable to the punishment provided by section 302 for murder, and to my mind there appears to be no question about the sentence that ought to be passed upon him. His crime is more despicable and diabolical than that of his hired assassin Shrawan. For all these reasons, I consider that in the case of Sapku the conviction ought to be altered to one of abetment of murder punishable under sections 109 and 202 of the Indian Penal Code read together and that the sentence should be maintained.

PRIDEAUX, A. J. C.—I have had the advantage of reading the judgment which my learned brother proposes to deliver. I agree that the finding that Sapku Patil was present at the murder cannot be upheld for I do not believe Shrawan's statement that Sapku was then present. I further agree that a strong motive existed for Sapku desiring the death of the boy Kashiram. However, I am of opinion that the statement of Shrawan cannot be treated as substantive evidence as against Sapku. Section 30 of the Evidence Act says that a confession by a co-accused may be taken into consideration against another being jointly tried. But such confession does not fall within the definition of evidence given in section 3 of the same Act. As pointed out by Jackson, J., in Queen v. Chunder Bhuattacharjee (10), "the section does not provide, as has been repeatedly pointed out by this Court, that such confession is evidence, still less does it say that it shall be the foundation of a case against the person implicated. The Legislature very guardedly says that it may be 'taken into consideration' and I think the obvious intention of the Legislature in so saying was that, when, as against any such person, there is evidence tending to his conviction, the truth or completeness of this evidence being the matter in question, the circumstance of such person being implicated by the confession of one of those who are being jointly tried with him should be taken into consideration as bearing on the truth or sufficiency of such evidence."

The same Judge held to this opinion in Empress v. Ashootosh Chuckerbutty (3). The authorities on this point have been mentioned by my learned brother. I incline to the view expressed by Jenkins, C. J., in Emperor v. Noni Gopal Gupta [Lalit Mohan Chakravarti] (5), namely, that the confession of an accused person is not evidence against a co-accused in the sense that a conviction on that alone could be supported. It can only be taken into consideration under section 30, that is to say, it can lend assurance to other evidence. Other cases which support this view are Queen-Empress v. Nirmal Das (9), Queen-Empress v. Khandia (7). Even if treated as evidence, the case-law is in favour of the proposition that such evidence is of too weak a character to form the basis of a conviction. Such a confession may be evidence in the sense that it may be taken into consideration in determining the guilt or innocence of a co-accused, but the section has to be strictly construed, and a confession of this nature is merely to be an element in the consideration of the case and does not do away with the necessity for other evidence. I do not think that such a confession alone will sustain a conviction.

Confessions may be divided into two classes, those that spring from genuine remorse, and those, whether true or false, which are made under some inducement, given not necessarily by the Police but by others who have interested themselves in the investigation of the case. It is obvious that those coming within the first kind are the most valuable. In the present case it seems to me that, as regards the co-accused, Shrawan's statement is entitled to little weight. He began by saying to the Police that Mangria and Ishria had been trying to induce him to get the boy killed, and that Mangria actually killed Kashiram in the presence of himself and Sapku Kunbi. On this statement Mangria was arrested. Next day, Shrawan was arrested, and then, for the first time, implicated Sapku, accused. Later on, he made the confession in which he stated that he pressed the boy's throat and then drowned him in the pit in the presence of and under the instigation of Sapku, accused. This statement he now retracts.

He has thus told two stories and a part of the last, namely, that Sapku, accused, was present at the drowning of the boy I disbelieve. Under these circumstances, I am unable to accept the retracted confession as sufficient against Sapku unless there is other evidence on the record showing his guilt. I turn now to see what evidence there is.

Ishria's statement I do not believe. On the 14th September Shrawan made a statement to the Police saying that Ishria had tried to induce him to kill the boy. The next day Ishria appeared before the investigating officer of his own accord and made a statement saying that Sapku Patil had been trying to induce him to kill Kashiram. In his statement as a witness he speaks to being sent for by Sapku, where, in the presence of Sapku, Chutia and Mangria, Sapku, accused, asked him to drown Kashiram. The witness refused and told Janglia, the father of the accused, Shrawan, to warn Raju, the mother of the boy, that Sapku was planning his murder, and he further warned Janglia to tell his son Shrawan not to join in the plot. Janglia denies that Ishria warned him, though the boy's mother says that Janglia had warned her. He may have done so but that the warning originally came from Ishria, there is nothing to show except his own statement. Before the Police reached the village the suspicion that Sapku had instigated the murder had got about and shortly after this witness had been himself implicated we find him coming forward as a witness against Sapku, obviously in an attempt to clear himself. Evidence of this nature is not convincing. The incident spoken to by Ghurshya (P. W. No. 6) does not directly implicate Sapku. The mother of the boy stated that after the boy's death she accused Sapku Patil, Mangria and Chutia and Ishria Mahar of having combined to kill her son. She did so because they seemed intimate and used to sit together and she had overheard the saying that Kashiram would not enjoy the fruits of his victory long. It is very improbable that if these men were conspiring the boy's death, they would allow themselves to be overheard by the mother. I disbelieve this part of the woman's statement.

Raghu, the father of the boy, examined as P. W. No. 14, speaks to his wife telling him of Janglia's warning and to his own suspicion that Shrawan committed the murder at the instigation of Sapku, Ishria and Mangria. He saw Sapku in the village that morning. That by itself is not suspicious for the man lives in a neighbouring village.

This is all the evidence. There is strong suspicion against Sapku, and it is not likely that Shrawan would have killed the boy unless instigated to do so by promise of a reward. But suspicion is not proof and I am clearly of opinion that the evidence on record together with Shrawan's retracted confession is insufficient to warrant the conviction of Sapku, and that it would be unsafe to convict him on the evidence on record. I would, therefore, allow the appeal of this appellant, set aside his conviction and sentence and acquit him.

Shrawan's conviction is, I think, correct. There is evidence to show that the boy used not to go to Hagria's badi where the pit he was found in is situated, though it has been found there is a foot-path and an opening in the dividing fence between the badis of Raghu and Hagria. The Sub-Inspector's statement shows that the opening is guarded by thorns about a foot high, which would have to be stepped over, and a boy of four is unlikely to have crossed there. The pit could, of course, be reached by going round but, again, the boy is not likely to have gone that distance. The boy's body bore no external marks of violence and the medical evidence shows that death was probably due to drowning. As the boy was 2 feet 6 inches in height it is unlikely that he would have been drowned by falling into the hole, where the utmost depth of water is said by P. Ws. Nos. 2 and 14 to be $1\frac{3}{4}$ feet. An accidental fall into the pit would probably have led to the boy's screams being heard. P. W. No. 7, Bakshi, speaks to meeting Shrawan that evening near Ladku Patil's badi which is beyond the pit at about sunset and Musammat Raju, the mother, says that Shrawan who had been given leave on account of the marbod festival returned to the house that afternoon and was there when the boy got up and went out. He then took the boy into his lap. The boy was missed after this, and it seems from the mother's statement that Shrawan was the person last seen with the boy. Shrawan was servant to Raghu, the boy's father, and had been given leave for the day. Yet he appears twice at the house that afternoon, a suspicious circumstance going to show his visits were made with some ulterior motive. Shrawan has adduced no evidence to show how he was forced to make a false confession. The Sub Inspector admits that he told the man to speak the truth but this fact would not invalidate the confession. As regards the person making it a retracted confession may even without any corroborative evidence form the basis of a conviction, Emperor v. Kehri (2) and in the present case there is evidence to show that this appellant was last seen with the boy, and the circumstances connected with the boy's death point to his having been murdered.

I would confirm conviction and sentence in Shrawan's case and dismiss his appeal.

The case was then referred to a Third Judge by the following ORDER.

HALLIFAX AND PRIDEAUX, A. J. Cs.—(February 10, 1921.)—As we are divided in opinion in respect of this appeal the case will be laid before such third Judge as the Judicial Commissioner may appoint in this behalf for his opinion under section 429 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Our opinions are stated in the separate judgments recorded in the appeal of the co-accused Shrawan Mahar (Criminal Appeal No. 246 of 1920) dismissed to-day.

On the case being laid before the Judicial Commissioner the following order was passed:

DRAKE-BROCKMAN, J. C.—(February 14, 1921.)—Let the case of Sapku be laid before Mr. Kotval, A. J. C., for opinion.

OPINION.

KOTVAL, A. J. C.—The materials on record appearing against Sapku are: the confession of Shrawan, the co accused, and the depositions of P. W. No 5, P. W. No. 12 and P. W. No. 13. Hallifax, A. J. C., holds that Shrawan's confession can be treated as substantive evidence and that we may start with it as a basis. Prideaux, A. J. C., is of the contrary opinion.

The first proviso to section 165, Evidence Act, lays down that the judgment must be based upon facts declared by the Act to be relevant and duly proved. Chapter II, part, I of the Act deals with the subject of the relevancy of facts. Section 30 finds place in this Chapter. It is to be noted that in all cases under this Chapter when a fact is declared relevant the Act uses the expression "is relevant" to declare the relevancy. In section 30 the Act does not say that the confession referred to therein is relevant but only says that the Court may take it into consideration. The confession, therefore, not being declared relevant by the Act as against the co-accused judgment cannot be based upon it so far as he is concerned. When, therefore, section 30 declares only that the Court may take it into consideration, I think it is a fair inference that what it means is that the Court may take it into consideration with or supplementarily to relevant facts which may form the basis of a judgment. If this view is correct, then the interpretation of section 30 by Jenkins, C. J., in Emperor v. Noni Gapal Gupta [Lalit Mohan Chakravarti] (5) is the right one.

Both Hallifax and Prideaux, A. J. Cs., have disbelieved the statement of Shrawan that Sapku was present when the boy was murdered, and I agree with them. Hallifax, A. J. C., in paragraph 3 of his judgment writes:—

"It still remains to be seen, however, whether Sapku is proved to have abetted the murder by instigation or conspiracy and so to be liable under section 109 of the Indian Penal Code to the punishment prescribed by section 302 of that Code;"

and in paragraph 5:—

"It is obvious, however, that there is not sufficient basis for the conviction of Sapku Patil, for instigation and conspiracy, in proof of the existence in him alone of a strong motive and of circumstances making such a course highly probable, the evidence of Ishria that he asked him to commit the murder and the evidence of the boy's parents that they saw him in consultation with the persons mentioned by Ishria and the accused Shrawan as the conspirators. These matters are to my mind sufficient corroboration of the statement made by Shrawan of the complicity of Sapku Patil, that is to say, they lead me to believe that statement to be true. But without that statement they amount practically to nothing in the way of direct implication of Sapku. Therefore, unless we can start with the statement of Shrawan as a basis, treating it as substantive evidence to be corroborated by the other matters mentioned, it must be held that there is no evidence against Sapku."

It is obvious, therefore, that he would have acquitted Sapku but for his opinion that it is permissible to start with the statement of Shrawan as a basis treating it as substantive evidence to be corroborated by the other matters mentioned.

Assuming that the view taken by me is not correct and treating the statement of Shrawan as substantive evidence, I am not inclined to put any reliance on it so far as it implicates Sapku or on the evidence of P. W. No. 5, P. W. No. 12 and P. W. No. 13 for the reasons given by Prideaux, A. J. C. As a matter of judicial prudence, a statement like Shrawan's must be regarded with suspicion: Bala v. Emperor (Criminal Revision No. 215 of 1915). The evidence of P. W. No. 5 could have been corroborated by Sapku, Chutia and Margrie, but they are not examined. Moreover, it does not corroborate the statement of Shrawan that he—Shrawan—was instigated by Sapku. If believed, it proves conduct on the part of Sapku showing that Sapku had gone to hire another person besides Shrawan to commit the murder.

The one solid fact against Sapku is the existence of a motive on his part. This raises a strong suspicion against him but cannot suffice for a conviction.

In my opinion, the accused Sapku should be acquitted.

JUDGMENT.

HALLIFAX AND PRIDEAUX, A. J. Cs.—(April 6, 1921.)—Following the opinion stated by Kotval, A. J. C., on the reference made under section 429 of the Criminal Procedure Code, we order that the conviction and sentence of the accused Sapku be set aside and that he be acquitted and set at liberty.

The existence of a decree not set aside is no bar to a prosecution under sections 193, 204, 471 and cognate sections of the Penal Code. [p. 271, col 1.]

Emperor v. Molla Fuzla Karim, 33 C. 193; 3 Cr. L. J. 365, relied on.

For the purposes of an enquiry made by a Civil Court under the provisions of section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the examination of witnesses on commission is permissible. [p 271, col. 1.]

Rule against an order of the Judge, Small Cause Court, Sealdah.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Sir Asutosh Chaudhuri, Kt. (with him Babu Kanaidhan Dutt), for the Petitioners.—Where the decree of a competent Court is subsisting and is not set aside, how can there be sanction to prosecute? Unless and until the decree is set aside, how can you say that the decree was obtained by fraud? That the sanction is not in proper form is clear and indisputable. Moreover, the examination of witnesses on commission in the course of enquiry which led to the grant of sanction is not sanctioned by law.

Mr. Orr, for the Opposite Party, refers to Hume v. Poresh Chunder Ghose (1), Emperor v. Molla Fuzla Karim (2) and Ram Prosad Malla v. Raghubar Malla (3).

Sir Asutosh Chaudhury in reply.—Emperor v. Molla Fuzla Karim (2) has no application to the facts of the case as no evidence was taken in that case. Ram Prosad Malla v. Raghubar Malla (3) cannot apply as it was an ex parte decree. Refers to Kasi Chunder Mozumdar, In the matter of the Petition of (4), Sangili Vira Pandia v. Queen (5).

JUDGMENT.—This Rule is directed against an order by which the Judge of the Small Cause Court of Sealdah has granted to a responsible officer of Government sanction for the prosecution of the five petitioners on charges under sections 204, 193, 471, and cognate sections, of the Indian Penal Code.

The suit out of which the application arose was one brought by the first petitioner against one Lakhia Chamarin and her minor son, Biswa Nath, as the heirs and representative of Gajan Chamar and his wife, Ukia, to recover a sum of money said to be due on a hand note. In this suit Dukharan, the father of Biswanath represented his minor son, and the suit eventually terminated in a compromise by which the plaintiff gave up all claims against the defendants on the execution by Dukharan of a promissory-note for the sum of Rs. 200 in favour of the plaintiff. On the order-sheet the final order reads "decreed on compromise," but this is obviously a mistake, as, in view of the statements made in the petition, there could be no decree against the defendants and the suit was in fact dismissed.

The grounds on which the Rule was issued are three, namely, (1) that the suit having been compromised the application for sanction is not maintainable, (2) that the sanction is not in proper form and (3) that the examination of witnesses on commission in the course of enquiry which resulted in the grant of sanction is not warranted by law.

In our opinion none of these objections can be sustained.

On the first point it is sufficient to refer to the case reported in Emperor v. Mollo Fuzla Karim (2), wherein it has been held that the existence of a decree not set aside is no bar to a prosecution.

The order granting the sanction embodies by reference the application made and in the several paragraghs of the said application all the essential particulars are to be found. Thus, as to form, there has been a substantial compliance with the requirements of the law.

The woman, Lakhia, and certain other witnesses reside in the State of Benares and were examined on commission. For the purposes of an enquiry made by a Civil Court under the provisions of section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code, their examination on commission was, in our judgment, permissible and sufficient.

We accordingly discharge this Rule.

Local Self-Government Act (III B. C. of 1885), ss. 78, 139, 140—Encroachment on road—District Board, power of, to frame Bye-Laws—Bye-laws, whether ultra vires.

A District Board is empowered under sections 139 and 140 of the Local Self-Government Act to make a Bye-Law for carrying out the purposes of the Act and has impliedly, if not expressly, power to provide, by its Bye-laws, for the punishment of encroachment over its roads in order to carry out the provisions of section 78 of the Act, i. e., to provide for the repairs and maintenance of its roads, etc. and such a By-Law framed by the District Board is not ultra vires. [p. 572, col. 2.]

Ramanath Ghose v. Emperor, 11 C. W. N. clxxv (175), dissented from.

Criminal reference by the Sessions Judge, Shahabad.

JUDGMENT.—This is a reference by the Sessions Judge of Shahabad under section 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, recommending that the conviction of, and the sentence passed by, the Magistrate upon the accused under the Bye-law framed by the District Board of Shahabad under section 139 of the Local Self-Government Act (Act III of 1885 B. C.) be set aside, on the ground that the Bye-law in question is ultra vires.

The Bye-law in question runs as follows:—

"Whoever encroaches on any road by cultivating crops, or by ploughing it up for cultivation or by the construction of any building or structure thereon, except by the permission of the Chairman of the District Board, shall be liable to a fine not exceeding Rs. 50 and to a further fine not exceeding Rs. 2 for every day on which the offence is continued."

Section 139 of the Act says: "Every District Board or Local Board, empowered in this behalf by the Lieutenant-Governor, may, subject to the control of the Lieutenant-Governor, make Bye-laws for carrying out all or any of the purposes of this Act."

Section 140 empowers the Board to provide for the punishment of the breach of the Bye laws with fine which may extend to Rs 50, and in the case of continuing breach with a further fine which may extend to Rs. 5 for every day during which the breach is continued.

Thus, a District Board is empowered to make a Bye-law for carrying out the purposes of the Act.

Section 78 of the Act enjoins upon the District Board the duty.....to provide for the repair and maintenance of roads, etc., which have been taken charge of by the Board under the Act, or towards which it may have agreed to contribute.

The learned Sessions Judge holds that the words "repair and maintenance" in the section cannot possibly include encroachment on the roads and, therefore, the District Board has no right to make a Bye-law for the purpose of punishing persons making encroachments upon the roads. He has relied upon the case of Ramanath Ghose v. Emperor (1) which fully supports his views and is on all fours with the present case.

Now, the words "provide for" in the section mean, to procure means in advance or to take measures in view of an expected or possible need, and the word "maintenance" of road means, the keeping it up. Maintenance of way has a technical meaning of maintaining in repairs all fixed property of a road, such as, tracks, bridges, etc., which are the necessary appurtenances. The above meanings of the words have been taken from Webster's and the Imperial Dictionaries.

Thus, under the section, a duty is cast upon a District Board to keep the road in repair and to maintain it by keeping in repairs the bridges, tracks, etc., on the road by providing funds and taking necessary measures with respect thereto.

On the one hand, it is possible to contend that no duty is cast upon the District Board to provide by its Bye-law for the punishment of persons encroaching upon their roads. On the other hand, it is difficult to see how a road can be maintained in its proper condition without preventing encroachments thereon and, impliedly, the District Board would be deemed to be authorised to make Bye-laws making encroachments penal, in addition to the provisions made for dealing with encroachments on roads by the penal laws of the country, such as, the Indian Penal Code and the Code of Criminal Procedure (section 133). The point is not free from difficulty and, in view of the decision of Stephen, J., in the case cited above, I was, at one time, inclined to refer this case for the consideration of a larger Bench so as to decide the point once for all, inasmuch as it is of great public importance. On further consideration I have come to the conclusion that the case should not be referred to a larger Bench but should be decided by us.

No decision of any Court, excepting that of Stephen, J., referred to above, has been shown to us. I have fully considered that decision in the light of the provisions of the Local Self-Government Act, and hold that the District Board has impliedly, if not expressly, power to provide for, by its Bye-laws, the punishment of encroachments over its roads, in order to carry out the provisions of section 78 of the Act, namely, to provide for the repairs and maintenance of its roads, etc. Section 139 empowers the District Board to make Bye-laws and section 140 empowers it to impose punishment for the breach of Bye-laws.

I, therefore, differ from the view taken by the learned Sessions Judge of Shahabad as well as by the Calcutta High Court, and hold that the Bye law is not ultra vires, and the conviction of, and the sentence passed upon, the petitioner was not without jurisdiction.

I decline to accept the reference.

ADAMI, J.—I agree.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 300, Excep. (1), 302—Murder—Woman of loose character—Refusal to admit husband to sexual intercourse—Grave and sudden provocation—Punishment.

MADODAR RAM v. EMPEROR.

Accused killed his wife, whom he knew to be a woman of depraved character, because she refused to have sexual intercourse with him on the night of the occurrence and also abused him. The woman had often before refused such intercourse:

Held, that the accused could not be said to have acted under grave and sudden provocation, and was guilty of murder.

Under the circumstances of this case, a sentence of transportation for life was considered sufficient.

Government Pleader v. Nattekallappa, 1 Weir 308, referred to.

Appeal from an order of the Sessions Judge, Dera Ghazi Khan, dated the 4th October 1921.

Mr. M. L. Puri for Mr. Des Raj Sawhny, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—In this case one Ghazi, a Baloch of the Dera Ghazi Khan District, has been convicted of the murder of his wife, Musammat Bano, and has been sentenced, under section 302, Indian Penal Code, to the penalty of death There is ample evidence upon the record that Musammat Bano was a woman of a loose character, and that she had contracted an illicit intimacy with one Malak Ghulam Rasul. Consequently, there were constant quarrels between the husband and the wife, and it appears that the latter would not allow the former to have sexual intercourse with her.

On the morning of the 7th of May 1921 the woman was found murdered on the platform of her husband, and the latter was smoking a huqqa by her side. The prisoner's first cousin, Chakar, P. W. No. 5, was the first to come up to him and found him sitting near the corpse of his wife with his chola and manjhla stained with blood. Upon an enquiry made by the witness the prisoner admitted that he had killed his wife. This confession was repeated by him before a large number of persons and also before a Magistrate who recorded his statement on the 13th May. Before the Committing Magistrate he again admitted his guilt and adhered to that statement when he was examined by the Sessions Judge.

There can, therefore, be no doubt that the appellant, Ghazi, killed his wife on the night of the 6-7th May 1921, and that the offence was committed with the blood-stained hatchet which he himself produced from his house. The learned Counsel for the appellant, however, seeks to minimize the gravity of the offence by invoking the plea of grave and sudden provocation. He contends that not only was Musammat Bano a woman of a depraved character, but that she also refused to have sexual intercourse with her husband on the night in question. He further invites our attention to the confession recorded by the Magistrate on the 13th May in which the accused stated that his wife had used abusive language on that night. Considering that the woman's misconduct was already known to the husband and that she had often refused to have sexual intercourse with him, we are not prepared to hold that the provocation which he received on that night was grave as well as sudden. We accordingly hold that the appellant has been rightly convicted of the offence of murder.

As regards the sentence, the learned Counsel relies upon a judgment reported as Government Pleader v. Nattekallappa (1) where the wife's refusal to have connection with her husband was regarded as a mitigating circumstance justifying the reduction of the sentence of death to one of transportation for life. In the case before us we have not only the wife's refusal to have sexual intercourse with the prisoner, but also the fact that she was a woman of an immoral character and that she probably abused her husband on the night in question. In view of these circumstances, we do not think that this is a case in which the extreme penalty of the law should be exacted. While upholding the conviction, we accept the appeal so far as to reduce the sentence to one of transportation for life.

Appeal accepted.

JUDGMENT.

BUCKNILL, J.—In this appeal and reference, appellant, who has been sentenced to death for murder, has, through his Counsel, drawn the attention of this Court to a certain circumstance (which took place in the course of the trial) which is a matter of very grave concern. It would appear from what is stated by the learned Sessions Judge in his summing up to the Jury, that to use his own words,

"the confession which was opened by the Public Prosecutor and was read to the Jury in the course of the trial was not recorded according to law and had to be ruled out as inadmissible."

The fact that such procedure took place in a case of such gravity as is this is a matter of very great regret. Whatever may have actually taken place it seems quite clear that the Jury was informed that the accused had made a confession. I have no doubt whatever that a statement may very reasonably be regarded as having been bound to affect in some measure the minds of the Jurymen, however carefully the learned Judge may have (and quite rightly) endeavoured to remove that impression from their minds. In those circumstances, and without expressing the least view as to the facts of this case, I think that the accused is entitled to a new trial. I should like to add that, pending this new trial, I think it would be highly advisable that the accused should be kept under medical observation so that his state of mind may be watched in order to see whether his mentality is normal. The circumstances under which, as is alleged at the trial, the murder took place, were so violent and barbaric, that it seems possible that the mind of a person who could have committed such a crime was unhinged.

The case will go back for a new trial.

If upon any question he suffers from a bona fide lapse of memory, and that failure of memory can be remedied by reference to any memorandum or other writing prepared by the witness at the time, and the Court invites the witness to refresh his memory with reference to the writing the witness is under an obvious obligation to do so. It is part of the duty under which he lies to lay the whole truth before the Court to the best of his ability.

Criminal appeal from an order of the Sessions Judge, Gorakhpur.

Mr. Narmadeshwar Prasad Upadhya, for the Appellant.

Mr. W. Wallach, Government Advocate for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—In this case Harku and Sheoraj, two young men, Kahars by caste, and distantly related, have been convicted; the first on a charge under section 302, and the second on a charge under section 302 109 of the Indian Penal Code, in connection with the murder of a boy named Brij Kishor. The record is before us for confirmation of the capital sentence passed by the Sessions Court. Both the convicts have submitted petitions of appeal through the Superintendent of the Jail in which they are confined, and the case on their behalf has been fully argued before us by Counsel. The record is a somewhat voluminous one, but the whole of the evidence is carefully summarised in the judgment of the learned Sessions Judge, and we do not propose to recapitulate more of it than is necessary in order to make clear the reasons for the decision we have come to.

The question of motive bulks somewhat largely in the evidence, but may be briefly disposed of so far as these appellants are concerned. There is no doubt that the right of succession to a considerable property turned on the question whether or not this boy Brij Kishor was the posthumous son of one Sismol Prasad, who died in the month of August 1912, and his second wife Musammat Ram Jota.

The argument addressed to us on behalf of the appellants has consisted largely of a general attack on the prosecution evidence in all its details. We have been asked, in effect, to disbelieve practically every statement made by any of the prosecution witness and to ascribe the statements of Harku and Sheoraj, recorded by the Magistrate on June 4th, as due to threats and ill usage. In connection with these statements our attention has been specially drawn to certain evidence which shows that when they were handed over to the Police both Harku and Sheoraj bore on their persons slight but definite marks of ill usage. Babban Singh when pressed on this point, admitted that they had been beaten on their way to the Police Station but said that this was done because they sat down on the ground and obstinately refused to move. It is probable enough that the precise truth has not been told on this point and that both the accused underwent a certain amount of rough usage at the hands of Babban Singh and the indignant neighbours of Musammat Ram Jota. There is nothing particularly surprising in this, and there is no reason whatever to associate the consequences of this ill usage with the statements made by the two accused before the Magistrate on June 4th. The accused themselves have never done so. They have either denied making those statements altogether, or have ascribed them to threats and ill usage on the part of the investigating Sub-Inspector. One other matter of detail we think it advisable to notice in this connection. The learned Sessions Judge complains that, when Sub-Inspector Ata ullah Khan was in the witness box, he was unable to remember the precise nature of the injuries on the persons of the two accused when they were brought before him and, on being asked to refresh his memory by consulting any memorandum on the point which he might have made at the time in his own diary of the investigation, refused to do so. A difficulty of this sort between the Court and an investigating Police Officer seems to crop up from time to time, chiefly in records which come to us from the Gorakhpur Judgeship. As a matter of fact, the diary of the Police investigation is in the hands of the Judge at Sessions trial and entirely at his disposal, so long as he deals with it within the limits laid down by the law. In practice, one would not have thought that any Sessions Judge would have experienced any particular difficulty in getting over a failure of memory of this nature on the part of a Police witness if only by reading aloud to him the relevant extract from the diary and asking him what he had to say about it. As, however, the Sessions Judge in this case has appealed to us to pronounce an opinion on the supposed question of law involved, we feel no hesitation in saying that a witness before a Court of Justice is under an obligation to tell the truth and the whole truth, to the very best of his power. If upon any question he suffers from a bona fide lapse of memory, and that failure of memory can be remedied by reference to any memorandum or other writing prepared by the witness at the time, and the Court invites the witness to refresh his memory with reference to the writing, the witness is, in our opinion, under an obvious obligation to do so. It is part of the duty under which he lies to lay the whole truth before the Court to the best of his ability. We trust we may not have any further occasion to notice this point.

Note.—The rest of the judgment is not material for the purposes of this report.—[Ed.]

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 488, order under—Decree of Civil Court, subsequent—Previous order of Criminal Court, enforcement of.

A subsequent decree of a Civil Court supersedes any order for maintenance that may have been previously passed by a Criminal Court under section 488 of the Criminal Procedure Code, but such a decree is no answer to an application for enforcement of an order previously obtained by the wife under section 488 of the Code for her maintenance, without proof by the husband that the conditions of the decree for custody had been duly complied with and that without any sufficient reason she has left his custody.

Reference made by the Sessions Judge, Shahabad.

Mr. S. N. Sahay, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—I am unable to agree with the views taken by the learned Sessions Judge of Shahabad. It is quite true that the subsequent decree of the Civil Court supersedes any order for maintenance that may have been previously passed by a Criminal Court under section 488 of the Code of Criminal Procedure; but, as has been held, such a decree is no answer to an application for enforcement of an order previously obtained by the wife under section 488 of the Code for her maintenance, without proof by the husband that the conditions of the decree for custody had been duly complied with and that, without any sufficient reason, she has left his custody [See Devi Ditta v. Ganga Devi (1)]. It is quite true that one of the questions which was raised by the lady, namely, that her consent to the decree was obtained by fraud could not be investigated by the Criminal Court; but still her other allegations were there, namely, that her husband refused to maintain her and was in fact ill-treating her. Those were matters which could be investigated by the Criminal Court, and they were in fact investigated by the Criminal Court. The learned District Magistrate has recorded a finding that the husband refused to maintain her. In my opinion, upon that finding, it was open to the wife to apply for enforcement of the previous order passed in her favour under section 488 of the Code of Criminal Procedure I am unable, therefore, to accept the reference.

Arbitration—Notice to parties—Award.

An award which is given in the absence of any party to the arbitration, and without any notice to him as to the time or place where the arbitrators would sit to decide the dispute, is illegal.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Delhi, dated the 23rd May 1918, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, Second Class, Delhi, dated the 3rd January 1918.

Lala Moti Sagar, R. S., and Lala Piyre Lal, for the Appellants.

Lala Sardha Ram, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal arises out of a suit based on an agreement made by the defendants, a Delhi firm known as Jugal Kishore Ram Richhpal, to sell 20 cases of dyed satin to the plaintiff firm called Raja Ram Punam Chand. The case of the plaintiffs is, that the defendants supplied only four out of the 20 cases bargained for and that they pleaded their inability to supply the remainder as the goods had been sunk at sea. The plaintiffs asked them to show their shipping documents to satisfy them that the default was really due to an act of God and not to the negligence of the defendants, but the latter were unable to produce any such documents, apparently, for the reason that the documents, if any, were with another firm, Tek Chand-Pahlad Rai, with whom they had, in their turn, placed an order for the supply of the goods in question. It is stated that the last named firm, in answer to the demands of the defendant firm, had put forward the plea that the goods had been sunk at sea. The contract between the parties to this suit was on the indent form of the Delhi-Hindustan Mercantile Association and, relying on clause 15 of that form, the plaintiffs wrote to the defendants, on the 1st September 1916, to deliver the goods or the matter would be referred to arbitration as provided by clause 15 of their contract. On the 6th September 1916 one Mr. Ratnam was nominated by the plaintiffs as their arbitrator and, later on, Pandit Balkishen was nominated as an arbitrator by the defendant firm. On the 25th the arbitrators gave an award against the defendants for Rs. 2,933-3-6, and the plaintiff firm brought this suit for Rs. 3,247 7 6 to secure the sum allowed by the award together with interest and some expenses subsequently incurred. The defendants objected to the validity of the award on the ground that no notice was given to them by the arbitrators, and that the award was made without making proper inquiries. The Court of first instance decreed the plaintiffs' claim, holding that "the defendant knew that the case was being heard on the 25th September 1916 and that it was so heard and he kept away." The defendants appealed to the District Judge, who accepted their appeal and has held that "no notice was given" and as 'the defendants had no opportunity to produce evidence there has been no proper enquiry and the arbitrators are guilty of legal misconduct." The plaintiffs have now preferred this second appeal against the above decision and decree and we have heard Mr. Moti Sagar for the appellants and Lala Sardha Ram for the respondents.

The main points on which arguments have been addressed to us are two: (1) that the plea as to want of notice had been given up in a statement made in Court by Kishori Lal, the manager and representative of the defendant firm, on the 3rd December 1917. (2) That no notice to the parties by the arbitrators was necessary. Some other points of minor importance were dealt with in arguments but as we think the decision of these two main issues will decide the case it is hardly necessary to discuss the other points.

Mr. Moti Sagar lays stress on the statement of Kishori Lal, dated the 3rd December 1917, to the following effect:—

"The award of the arbitrators is not binding because I have filed a suit against my own seller."

To this are added the words "aur koi wajah nahin hai," i. e., there is no other reason. He contends that these words clearly show that what was meant was that Kishori Lal gave up the pleas he had previously taken and confined his case to the plea above alluded to, whereupon an amended issue was framed which ran thus: "Whether the fact that a suit has been instituted by the defendant against his own seller is any reason why the award should not be binding." Mr. Moti Sagar says that his clients understood that the case was limited to that one issue and on that ground produced no evidence and that the Court practically decided the case on that point. He goes on to say that the defendants, in their grounds of appeal before the lower Appellate Court, did not take any exception to this part of the judgment of the Trial Court and the learned Judge should not have allowed them to set up a new case in appeal. Lala Sardha Ram's reply to this argument is, that the statement does not amount to a waiver of the previous pleas. Kishori Lal never intended to give up the previous pleas embodied in the written statement as to want of notice and proper inquiry. The plea he advanced on the 3rd December was in fact an additional plea and the words "aur koi wajah nahin hai" obviously meant no reason in addition to the reasons already urged. He argues that the defendant's subsequent conduct in summoning the arbitrators as witnesses and questioning them as to notice, etc., shows that he had not given up the earlier pleas and the plaintiffs never objected to the production of that evidence as they would have done had they really understood that the pleas originally advanced had been given up. We find that Kishori Lal was never asked by the Court if he gave up his original pleas and we do not think in such circumstances it can be held that there was any waiver of the pleas originally raised. The new issue framed, it must be remembered was not an amended issue but was struck as a preliminary issue and the issues already framed were allowed to stand. The Trial Court did not base its decision merely on this preliminary issue but also decided that, as a matter of fact, the defendants had knowledge of the hearing and did not require notice. We hold, therefore, that no waiver of the previous pleas on the part of Kishori Lal is established.

Coming now to the question of notice, we have before us a finding of fact by the lower Appellate Court that "no notice was given" and it is based on the evidence of the arbitrators who do not remember having given any notice to the parties nor do they remember the fact that the defendants were present before them. The award is thus given in the absence of the defendants and without any notice as to the time or the place where the arbitrators would sit to decide the dispute. This is clearly illegal. Mr. Banerji says in his "Law of Arbitration in India" (2nd Edition), at page 194: "Each party is not only entitled to present his own case, both by evidence and argument, before the arbitrators, but is also entitled to be present whenever witnesses or arguments are heard on behalf of his opponent. Hence arises the necessity that each party should have notice of the time, and place appointed for hearing.....
The necessity that by some means or other sufficient notice should be actually brought home to all the parties is absolutely imperative. If there has not been such notice, there cannot be a legal hearing, nor a legal award (Morse on Arbitration, 117)." We are of opinion that there has been no legal award in this case for want of notice to the defendants. The decision of the District Judge, is, therefore, correct and is hereby upheld and this appeal is dismissed with costs.

Easement—Right of way—Servient tenement not to be saddled with heavier burden than proved—Mode of user.

In a claim of an easement over another's property the servient tenement should not be saddled with a heavier burden than what the plaintiff has succeeded in proving. [p. 579, col. 2.]

But when a particular mode of user is not heavier than the mode of user proved the plaintiff may be allowed to use it in that particular way, e. g., the user of a way for horses may include the right to lead smaller animals as well but not larger animals or loads. [p. 579, col. 2.]

Where the user of a path is restricted to the passage of men, carts and palanquins the carrying of corpse through it does not add a heavier burden on it. [p. 580, col. 1.]

Appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Third Court, Tipperah, dated the 20th November 1919, modifying that of the Munsif, Third Court, at Comilla, dated the 2nd December 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Upendra Kumar Roy, for the Appellants.—I beg to submit that the lower Appellate Court is wrong in restricting my general right of way over the passage in question. I succeeded in proving that I carried animals, processions, carts, palanquins, etc., over this strip of land. Refers to Pollock on Easement, at page 510 and Raj Manick Singh v. Ruttun Manick (1).

Babu Upendra Lal Roy, for the Respondents.—It is a well-settled principle of law that the servient tenement cannot be saddled with a heavier burden than what the plaintiff has succeeded in proving. Refers to Gale on Easement, 9th Edition, pages 316, 319, and Mitter's Law of Easement, page 416. The restriction of the right as ordered by the learned Judge is quite in accordance with law and the evidence adduced by the appellants to prove how far their rights extend.

Babu U. K. Roy, in reply, submitted that at least the plaintiff's right to carry corpses through the strip of land to the cremation ground should be allowed.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff appellant for a declaration of right of way over a strip of land belonging to the defendants. From the pleadings and findings of the Courts below we take it that the path claimed was a private path. Both the Courts below have found in favour of the plaintiff, but they have differed as to the extent of the user. The Court of first instance gives the plaintiff a general right of way including the right of way for carriages, carts, palanquins, processions, elephants, corpses, etc. On appeal by the defendants the lower Appellate Court has held that the plaintiff claiming a right of way over another's property he should not be allowed a higher right than what he has been able to prove. On the evidence he has found that the plaintiff has succeeded in proving the user of the pathway for men, carts and palanquins. The said Court has accordingly restricted the use of the path to these three modes of user and disallowed the general right of way over it.

The plaintiff appeals to this Court and contends that he ought to have had a declaration that he is entitled to have a general right of way for carriages, processions, elephants, etc.

We think the learned Subordinate Judge is right in the view of the law he has taken. It being an easement claimed over another's property the servient tenement should not be saddled with a heavier burden than what the plaintiff has succeeded in proving. We may refer for the principle of law governing this case to Gale on Easements, 9th Edition, page, 316, and Goddard on the Law of Easements page 377. We may also refer to section 28 of the Indian Easements Act which, though not applicable to this case, codifies this well-known principle of law. But when a particular mode of user is not heavier than the mode of user proved the plaintiff may be allowed to use it in that particular way, e. g., the user of a way for horses may include the right to lead smaller animals as well but not larger animals or loads. The learned Subordinate Judge has restricted the user of this path to the passage of men, carts and palanquins and has disallowed the plaintiff's claim to take cattle, processions and corpses. By allowing the plaintiff to take his carts we understand he means carts drawn by ordinary animals. But we are not inclined to agree with the lower Appellate Court as to the restriction on the user by preventing corpse to be carried through it. We do not think it adds any heavier burden to the user. With this modification, namely, that the plaintiff will have a right of user for the passage of men, carts, palanquins and corpses, we disallow the plaintiff's claim, affirm the decision of the lower Appellate Court and dismiss the appeal. As the appellant has failed in greater part of his claim he must pay the respondent's costs of this appeal.

(1) 15 W. R. 40.

Document, reading of—Question of fact—Appeal, second—Limitation, plea of—Question of law.

In a case where it is possible to read the words of a document in two ways, it is open to the first Appellate Court to adopt whichever reading appears to it to be more reasonable after considering all the connected circumstances. A finding as to what the words in dispute really are is a finding of fact and cannot be questioned in second appeal. [p. 581, col. 1.]

An objection that an appeal presented to the lower Appellate Court was barred by time can be taken in second appeal. [p. 581, col. 1.]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Ferozepore, dated the 9th July 1917, reversing that of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Ferozepore, dated the 16th January 1917.

Dr. G. C. Narang, for the Appellants.

Lala Hukam Chand, for Mr. L. C. Mehra, for the Respondent.

ORDER.—The suit out of which this second appeal has arisen was brought by one Bhagu Mal against Nigahia Ram and Nihal Chand, two brothers, for Rs. 2,000 on account of principal and interest and was based on an entry in the plaintiff's bahi. The entry was in Hindi and was dated the 3rd January 1911, to the effect that Rs. 800 were borrowed from the plaintiff by Nigahia Ram, defendant No. 1, in the name of himself and his brother Nihal Chand. Under the Hindi entry appeared an acknowledgment of the debt in the Urdu in the handwriting of Nigahia Ram. Nigahia Ram admitted the Urdu writing to be his but pleaded that no payment in cash was made to him and that the money was due on an old account, which had been brought on to page 16 from page 13 of the bahi. He stated that he had paid the debt and that this fact was noted on page 13 but that page had been removed by the plaintiff. Reliance was placed by him on the words "baqi panna 13" which, according to him appeared at the end of the Urdu entry and from which it could be inferred that the item of Rs. 800 was a balance from the accounts at page 13. The Trial Court dismissed the plaintiff's suit accepting the defendants' version as to the entry and the adjustment of the debt and the removal of page 13 of the bahi by the plaintiff. On appeal the lower Appellate Court reversed the decree of the Court of first instance, finding that "there is no satisfactory proof that any account ever existed on page 13, nor is there any satisfactory evidence that Nigahia Ram ever liquidated his account with the plaintiff." It may be mentioned that Nihal Chand did not appear before the Trial Court and the proceedings were ex parte against him.

Against the above decision the defendants have come up to this Court in second appeal and we have heard Dr. Narang on their behalf and Mr. Hukam Chand on behalf of the respondent. It is contended by Dr. Narang that, in spite of the findings of fact above alluded to, there is ground for second appeal because the concluding portion of the entry on page 16 has been misread. The misreading relied upon is that the words at the end of the entry which, according to the defendant, are "baqi panna 13" have been read "baqi rupia nahin hai" by the learned District Judge, though the Trial Court had adopted the reading of the defendant. We think, however, that in a case like the present where it is possible to read the words in dispute either way, it was open to the District Judge to adopt whichever reading appeared to be more reasonable to him after considering all the connected circumstances and as he has done so, his finding as to what the words in dispute really are, is a finding of fact which cannot be questioned in second appeal. We may add that the learned District Judge has given good reasons for rejecting the reading which suited the defendant. We cannot, therefore, allow this question to be re opened now.

Dr. Narang attacks the decree of the lower Appellate Court on two other grounds:—(1) That no decree should have been passed against Nihal Chand, as the lower Appellate Court has not decided the question of his responsibility nor has it come to any finding as to his being a member of a joint Hindu family or as to the debt having been incurred for any joint family business; (2) that the plaintiff's appeal before the lower Appellate Court was time-barred and should have been dismissed.

We think these contentions are not without force. As to the responsibility of Nihal Chand, the lower Appellate Court has certainly come to no finding and apparently the matter has been left unconsidered by an oversight. As regards the question of limitation, it is true that the point has been raised for the first time in second appeal but it is a point of law and can be taken up even at a late stage. The learned Counsel points out that the suit was decided by the Court of first instance on the 16th January 1917 and the appeal was filed on the 22nd February 1917. The application for copies was received on the 22nd January 1917 and the copies were delivered to the appellant on the 23rd January 1917. Thus, only two days being allowable for the time taken up in obtaining the necessary copies, it is contended that the appeal is time-barred. This, again, is a matter which has not been gone into by the lower Appellate Court. It may be noted that the application which was received on the 22nd January 1917 appears to have been dated the 17th January 1917 but there is no explanation as to this delay, nor is it known who was responsible for that. We, therefore, remand this case to the lower Appellate Court under Order XLI, rule 25, Civil Procedure Code, to enquire into the question whether Nihal Chand was a member of a joint Hindu family and responsible for the debt incurred by Nigahia Ram and also into the question of limitation and to record its findings on these points according to law. We direct that a return may be made to this Court within three months.

Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Nadia, dated the 3rd March 1920, affirming that of the Munsif, Second Court, at Krishnagar, dated the 21st December 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Amarendra Nath Bose (with him Babu Radhikaranjan Guha), for the Appellant. —I venture to submit that the appellant is entitled to claim rent at the rate of Rs. 8·11·12½ gundas. The appellant bases his claim on two rent-decrees which he got against the respondent and which mention the rate of rent to be that which he now claims. How can the respondent now turn round and go back upon those two rent-decrees which make the present matter res judicata? Moreover, I claim protection under proviso (1) of section 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. I submit that the Courts below are wrong when they say that the question of rate of rent is not res judicata, as also the defence under section 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. This defence ought to have been raised in the previous case. Modhusudun Shaha Mundul v. Brae (1) has been cited as if this case concludes me, but I submit it does not touch me at all. It is not an authority against me. These questions now agitated are barred by the prinsiple of constructive res judicata. Refers to Raj Kumar Roy v. Alimaddi (2) and Banee Madhub Banerjee v. Bhagbut Pal (3). Nilmoney Singh v. Heera Lal Dass (4) takes a contrary view to that of Banee Madhub Banerjee v. Bhagbut Pal (3).

Further, I submit that as no defence under section 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act was taken in the previous rent-suits, such defence cannot now be raised, see Explanation 4 of section 11, Civil Procedure Code.

Babu Monmotho Nath Roy, for the Respondent.—There cannot be any res judicata as the question of rate of rent was not specifically raised and agitated in the previous suits. And there was no decision as regards such rate. I contend that Modhusudun Shaha Mundul v. Brae (1) is directly against my learned friend's submission.

The defendant's claim under section 29, Bengal Tenancy Act, cannot be barred by reason of the previous rent-decrees.

Babu Amarendra Bose Nath replied.

JUDGMENT.—The suit giving rise to this appeal was a suit for rent brought by the plaintiff-appellant claiming rent at the rate of Rs. 8·11·12½ gundas. The defendant alleged that the rent was Rs. 6·7 a year. It has been proved that the plaintiff got two rent-decrees one for the rent for 1313 to 1316 and the other for the period 1317 to 1320 at the rate of rent claimed by him. These decrees were ex parte decrees but they were put into execution and in both cases the money was paid out of Court. The Court of first instance treated these decrees as evidence in the case but gave effect to the defendant's contention that the plaintiff was not competent to claim the rent at the rate alleged by him in contravention of the provisions of section 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. It was found from the evidence on the record that the rent of the holding was Rs. 6·7 a year. On appeal the learned District Judge raised a presumption in favour of the plaintiff as to the rate of rent under section 51 of the Bengal Tenancy Act on the basis of the above two decrees obtained by him against the defendant but held that the tenant is not precluded from contending that that rate is illegal being in contravention of the provisions of section 29 of the Tenancy Act. The appeal was dismissed and the plaintiff has preferred this second appeal to this Court.

It is argued on his behalf that the two rent-decrees ought to have been given effect to as res judicata against the defendant. In these decrees no issue was raised as to the rate at which the rent was payable by the defendant. Nor was there any decision with regard to such rate. The decrees were ex parte and the suits were decreed at the rate claimed by the plaintiff in those suits. Such decrees, therefore, cannot operate as res judicata in favour of the plaintiff. [Modhusudun Shaha Mundul v. Brae (1)] decided by a Full Court. The question as to the effect of an ex parte decree which has been put into execution was left open. It has since been held in several cases that an ex parte decree for arrears of rent which has been duly executed is of some evidence as to the rate of rent. Madhu Munjari v. Jhumar Bibi (5) and Mati Lal Poddar v. Nripendra Nath Ray (6). Both the Courts below have treated ex parte decrees as evidence in the case. The learned Munsif observes with regard to the first decree: "It should be considered only as a piece of evidence as to the rate at which the defendant actually paid rent to the plaintiff during the period in claim in the suit, that is 1313 to 1316 B. S. It is not res judicata about the rate of rent". As such, he has found as a fact that the defendant made payment of rent for 1313 to 1316 and 1317 to 1320 at the rate of Rs. 8-11-12½ gundas a year. The learned District Judge has also taken these decrees into consideration as raising a presumption in favour of the plaintiff under section 51 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. It cannot, therefore, be said that the Courts below have not taken these important pieces of evidence into consideration. But they have concurrently found that the rent paid by the defendant was originally Rs. 6 7 a year and that it was for the landlord to explain the enhancement which he has failed to do.

It is next argued that the defendant not having taken in the previous rent suits the defence under section 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is incompetent to raise that defence in this suit under section 12 Explanations 2 and 4 of the Civil Procedure Code. We do not think that there is any force in this contention. There cannot be any estoppel against Statutes and even if the previous rent decrees were res judicata the plaintiff could not do what the Legislature specifically laid down that he should not be allowed to do. The whole scheme of the Tenancy Act is to prevent the landlords from circumventing the provisions of the Act to the detriment of the illiterate tenants. Section 147A of the Tenancy Act shows the scheme on which the Act was framed.

On the authority of the case of Nil Madhub Sarkar v. Bro;o Nath (7) it is argued on behalf of the respondent with some force that the previous rent decrees did not bar the defendant's claim under section 29 of the Tenancy Act and hence would not prevent the defendant from raising a plea on that ground in the present suit.

All the points taken by the appellant having failed this appeal is dismissed with costs.

THE BENGAL NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY, THROUGH ITS AGENT AT GORAKHPUR, AND THE BOMBAY BARODA AND CENTRAL INDIA RAILWAY, THROUGH ITS AGENT AT BOMBAY —DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS —OPPOSITE PARTIES.

Railways Act (IX of 1890), s. 76—Risk Note Form A—Consignment in damaged condition—Contract not to hold Railway liable—Shortage—Burden of proof.

Certain "Bakoos" of Tobacco were consigned from Bombay to Agra under Risk Note Form A which contained an entry that the consignment was in bad condition and was liable to damage, leakage and wastage as the "Bakoos" were old and torn and the contents were wet and the consignors agreed to hold the Railway Company harmless and free from all responsibility for the condition in which the goods may be delivered to the consignee at destination and for any loss arising from the same. On delivery there was shortage in weights and the consignee sued the Company for the price of the difference in weights:

Held, that under the circumstances of this case the burden lay on the plaintiff and not on the Railway Company under section 76 of the Railways Act to prove that the shortage was due to pilfering by the Railway Company's servants. [p. 584, col. 1.]

Revision against a decree of the Judge, Small Cause Court, Agra, dated the 26th May 1921, ABDUL RAKIB KHAN v. JALAL AHMED.

JUDGMENT.—This application in revision arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiffs against the Bengal North Western Railway in the Small Cause Court at Agra. Twenty three "bakoos" of tobacco were despatched sometime in March last to Agra Fort consigned to the plaintiffs. The weight consigned to the Railway was 101 maunds. At Agra Fort when delivery was taken the consignment was found 28 maunds short in weight and this suit was brought to recover the difference in price. The Court has found that the tobacco when despatched was raw and wet and was not securely packed. It has come to the conclusion that the shortage in weight was due most probably to the drying up of the moisture originally contained in it. The consignment did not arrive in Agra until sometime in April. The Court held that some of the shortage may be due to wastage owing to defective packing and that the plaintiffs had failed to prove that the shortage was due to pilfering by the Railway Company's servants. It is argued that, under section 76 of the Railways Act, the onus did not lie on the plaintiffs to prove this, but in this case there was a specific contract between the parties. The goods were consigned under Risk Note Form A. The note is on the record. It is stated in it that the consignment was in bad condition and was liable to damage, leakage and wastage as the "bakoos" were old and torn and the contents were wet, and the consignors agreed to hold the Railway Company harmless and free from all responsibility for the condition in which the aforesaid goods may be delivered to the consignee at destination and for any loss arising from the same. It is next argued that the Risk Note A does not properly apply to this consignment. I do not agree with this. Under these circumstances, it seems to me that I cannot interfere in revision. I, therefore, reject the application with costs.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 22—Amending Act (I B. C. of 1907), whether retrospective.

Where a tenure-holder bought the subordinate raiyati interest of a tenant before the amendment of section 22 of the Bengal Tenancy Act in 1907 the subordinate right did not cease to exist by the alteration in the law subsequently made by the Amending Act of 1907. [p. 585, cols. 1 & 2.]

Act I B. C. of 1907 is not retrospective in its effect. [p. 585, col. 2.]

Appeal against a decree of the Additional District Judge, Noakhali, dated the 22nd of November 1919, affirming that of the Munsif, Hatiya, dated the 8th of May 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Asiranjan Chatterjee for Babu Satyendra Chandra Mitra, for the Appellant.—I am a raiyat and also a co-sharer landlord. The question is whether there was a merger. The defendants were non occupancy raiyats and so they were liable to ejectment. The defendants are under raiyats. The provisions of amending Act can have no retrospective effect. Refers to section 22, Bengal Tenancy Act (E. B. portion) as it stands after the amendment. Sub section 2 of that section has been apparently applied to the facts of the case by the Appellate Court. Reads the old law before amendment of 1907. 'It' here refers to occupancy right. See Ram Mohan Pal v. Sheikh Kachu (1). This case was before the amendment. A vested right cannot be taken away by a subsequent Statute. Refers to Nabin Chandra Pal v. Banga Chandra Choudhury (2), case of ejectment of an under-raiyat. If the two rights did not coalesce into one they could not coalesce subsequently. I submit there was no merger. The same view as in Nabin Chandra Pal v. Banga

(1) 32 C. 386; 9 C. W. N. 249; 1 C. L. J. 1 (F. B.).
(2) 15 Ind. Cas. 705.

Chandra Chowdhury (2) is also taken in Alimaddin v. Ainaddin Majumdar (3). Subsequent purchase of superior howla right does not improve the position of the under-raiyat. Akhil Chandra Biswas v. Hasan Ali Sadagar (4). Sukhoda Gobind Saha v. Raja Sosi Sekhareswar Roy Bahadur (5) says that there is no retrospective effect of the amendment. Defendants are liable to be ejected as the old law applies.

Babu Jitendra Kumar Sen Gupta, for the Respondents.—The question is whether the case is to be governed by old law or new law. Lease was granted after the amendment was made. This suit should be determined with regard to the lease which is the starting point. Section 22, Bengal Tenancy Act, as amended by the Act of 1907, should apply. In all the cases cited by my learned friend the lease and purchase were before the amending Act. Can a co-sharer landlord remain a raiyat after the amending Act was passed? I submit no.

Babu Asiranjan Chatterjee replied.

JUDGMENT.—The only question that arises in this appeal is whether, in a case where the tenure-holder bought the subordinate raiyati interest before the amendment of section 22 of the Bengal Tenancy Act in 1907, the subordinate right lost its separate existence and got merged in the superior right after the amending Act of 1907 came into force; or, in other words, whether the amending Act of 1907 has any retrospective effect.

The plaintiff was a co-sharer of a howla under which there was a raiyati right which was purchased by the plaintiff on the 18th Magh 1312 B. S. and subsequently he let out to the defendant's predecessor on the 18th Pous 1315 in under-raiyati right for 9 years which term expired in the end of 1323 B. S. He has consequently brought this suit under section 49 of the Bengal Tenancy Act to secure ejectment of the defendants from the lands in suit.

The defence is that the subordinate right having got merged in the superior right after 1907 the defendants occupy the status of a raiyat and are not liable to be ejected under section 49A of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Both the Courts below have given effect to this plea and held that the defendants are raiyats occupying the status of a settled raiyat of the village and are not liable to be ejected. They have taken the view that section 22 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, as amended in 1907, extinguished the raiyati interest purchased by the plaintiff which got merged in his howla right.

We are satisfied that this view of the law is erroneous. Whatever right the plaintiff acquired by his purchase in 1312 did not, in our opinion, cease to exist by the alteration in the law subsequently made by the amending Act of 1907. We do not think that that Act has any retrospective effect. In support of our view we may refer to the Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 2304 of 1909, decided on July 16, 1912 [Nabin Chandra Pal v. Banga Chandra Chowdhury (2)] and Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 1272 of 1915, decided on January 25, 1917 [Alimaddin v. Ainaddin Majumdar (3)]. The same view has been very recently taken by Chatterjea and Panton, JJ., in the case of Profulla Nath Tagore v. Secretary of State for India in Council (6).

We, therefore, set aside the decrees of the lower Courts and decree the plaintiff's suit with costs in all the Courts.

Dr. M.L. Agarwala and Mr. Haribans Sahai, for the Appellant.

Mr. Panna Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The only point in this appeal that has given us any difficulty is the question whether the plaintiffs were barred by Order II, rule 2 from including in their claim the profits for the Kharif of 1320 Fasli. The Judge in the lower Court undoubtedly assumed that the reason why those profits had been omitted in an action which was commenced on the 29th of July 1913 was, because the plaintiffs at that date were under the impression that the profits were paid annually and not, as was subsequently shown to be the fact, half yearly. In that view he accepted the authority of the case to which he refers in this judgment. In this Court the learned Judge upheld the decision of the lower Appellate Court and we think that we ought to do the same. That really is the substantial point in the appeal. The other points which are raised have no substance, and we, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs and fees on the higher scale.

JUDGMENT.

JWALA PRASAD, A. C. J.—These are appeals under the LettersPatent from a decision of Mr. Justice Adami, dated the 12th August 1920. By his decision Mr. Justice Adami upset the decision of Mr. Boyse, District Judge of Shahabad, and restored that of the Munsif of that District, with the result that the plaintiffs' suit has been dismissed.

The suit arises out of delivery of possession under a batwara which took place on the 24th February 1916, the disputed lands having fallen into the takhta of the defendants. After the delivery of possession the defendants instituted criminal proceedings under section 144 of the Code of Criminal Procedure in which an order dated the 2nd June 1916 restraining the plaintiffs from using the lands in question was passed. The plaintiffs and defendants were co-sharers in the estate and had held a mortgage of the 4-annas share of another co-sharer of the villages Semraon and Akbari. The plaintiffs purchased the occupancy holdings of certain tenants under kobilas and also took certain plots of land in rehan from different persons. The mortgagors redeemed the mortgage and brought separate suits against the plaintiffs, the defendants and others, in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Arrah. That case was fought up to the High Court. The High Court held that the mortgagors were entitled to treat the holdings purchased by the mortgagees as accessions to the mortgaged property and to obtain possession of them on paying the purchase-money. The decision of the High Court is reported as Ram Brich Narayan Singh v. Ambika Prosad Singh (1). The purchase-money was not paid and the plaintiffs continued in possession of the holdings. In the Survey and Settlement Record the lands were shown as bakasht and in possession of the plaintiffs under section 22 (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. After the publication of the Record of Rights there was a Collectorate partition under the Estates Partition Act in 1916 between the co-sharers. Under section 49 the Survey Record of Rights was accepted as the basis of the partition. The lands in dispute 9·35 acres in area which were recorded in the Survey as bakasht and in possession of the plaintiffs under section 22 (2) were allotted to the patti of the defendants. The plaintiffs claim to hold the land in their possession under section 22 (2) on the strength of the Survey Record of Rights as well as the batwara khatian which followed the Survey. The defendants, on the other hand, claim to hold the land in their possession as being bakasht or serait of the proprietors. They assert that whatever rights the plaintiffs may have acquired by the purchase prior to partition were done away with by the batwara proceedings. They also dispute the plaintiffs' right to institute the present suit and refer to section 119 of the Estates Partition Act. The contentions of the defendants succeeded before Mr. Justice Adami, and the plaintiffs challenge before us the soundness of the view taken by that learned Judge.

The strongest point urged by Mr. Kulwant Sahay on behalf of the defendants in support of the judgment is that based on section 119 of the Estates Partition Act. It is said that the present suit virtually seeks to upset the valuation of the allotment of the lands by the batwara proceedings and that the plaintiffs, who were parties to the proceedings, are estopped from claiming the lands as against the entries made in the batwara khatian, describing the land as the bakasht of the proprietors and as having fallen into the pattis of the defendants. It is also urged that the present action seeks to disturb the direct possession of the land in suit awarded to the defendants under section 94, Chapter X, of the Estates Partition Act. The ingenious argument of Mr. Kulwant Sahai lent great colour to the simple point involved in this contention. True, the plaintiffs being co-sharers and parties to the partition proceedings are estopped from claiming otherwise than the Record of Rights, as approved by the batwara proceedings, purports to give them. I am in full accord with the view expressed in the case of Baldeo Sahai v. Brijnandan Sahay (2) that a co-sharer is not permitted to show that land entered as raiyati land was, as a matter of fact, zerait land. This is, however, not the scope of the plaintiffs' suit. The plaintiffs' case, if I understand it aright, is founded upon the batwara khatian and the description of the lands mentioned therein. That khatian has, as observed above, simply adopted the Survey Record of Rights. The lands no doubt in both the Survey Record of Rights and batwara khatian have been described as bakasht lands. Both the records state that the same are in possession of the plaintiffs as purchasers thereof. The Survey Record makes it still clearer by describing the possession of the plaintiffs to be under section 22 (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

(1) 19 Ind. Cas. 90; 17 C. W. N. 586 at p. 587.

(2) 43 Ind. Cas. 359; 3 P. L. W. 266; (1918) Pat. 164.

The batwara khatian has, therefore, to be interpreted with the help of the Survey Record of Rights, for under section 49 the entire Record of Rights was accepted for the purposes of the partition, and under the subsequent section there is nothing to show that the Record of Rights was in any way varied. The plaintiffs nowhere say that they have been aggrieved in any way by the batwara proceedings. In paragraphs 7 and 8 the plaintiffs have clearly based their claim upon the batwara proceedings and say that their former possession was continued by the batwara proceedings. Their grievance originates after the delivery of possession and the termination of the batwara proceedings and the order passed under section 144 of the Code of Criminal Procedure at the instance of the defendants. In this view section 119 can be of no avail to the defendants nor need we consider it Mr. Kulwant Sahai has, however, failed to show what particular order the suit of the plaintiffs seeks to set aside. Section 119 acts as a bar to a suit being brought against certain orders of the authorities passed under the Estates Partition Act. If the defendants seek to bar the plaintiffs' suit under that section they must clearly show in what respect the order of the Revenue Authorities is affected or sought to be set aside in the present suit. This Mr. Kulwant Sahai has failed to do. The contention must, therefore, be overruled.

The next contention is upon the status of the plaintiffs with respect to the lands in suit. It is said that the lands were bakasht of the proprietors and as such the plaintiffs had no right to the same if they fell into the pattis of the defendants in the partition proceedings. This would be so if the land was the bakasht of the proprietors prior to the partition. It is admitted that the lands formed originally the occupancy holdings of the tenants of the village. They were purchased by the plaintiffs, when they were part proprietors of the village and had held the other shares as mortgagees. Reliance has been placed upon the judgment of the High Court at Calcutta referred to above [Ram Brich Narayan Singh v. Ambika Prosad Singh (1)] in order to shew that the lands were purchased by the 16-annas proprietors and the status of the proprietors holding the lands was that described in section 22 (1) of the Bengal Tenancy Act and not in section 22 (2). It is, however, said, the difference between the two clauses is that, under the former, when the 16-annas proprietor purchases a holding of a tenant, the interest of the landlord and the raiyat become united in the same person. In other words, the tenancy right is merged in the proprietary interest, whereas under clause (2) when a part proprietor of a holding purchases the holding he is entitled to hold possession of the same subject to the payment of the proportionate rent to the other co-proprietor. Mr. Kulwant Sahai says that no rent was ever paid for this holding by the plaintiff to any of the proprietors and, therefore, clause (2) of section 22 does not apply. The circumstance under which no rent was paid was fully explained in the decision of the High Court relied upon by Mr. Kulwant Sahai. In that litigation both the plaintiffs and the defendants in the present case were defendants. Chatterji, J., one of the Judges who decided that case, observed:

"The defendants, though holding different interests in the mahal and in the mortgage, represented between themselves the entire interest of the landlord for the time being when the purchases were made. There was no one else to whom the portion of the rent which was payable for the lands purchased by them, could be paid during the subsistence of the mortgage."

The mortgage has been redeemed and the plaintiffs and the defendants are not the entire 16 annas proprietors of the Mouza. The mortgagor is also in possession of certain shares in the village. The question is not whether any rent was ever realised but whether any rent was payable. There can hardly be any doubt that the purchase in the present case was by the plaintiffs co-sharers, and they were liable for the payment of the proportionate rent to the other co-sharers, but, in the circumstances set forth in the judgment of the High Court, there was no rent due from them on accounts being taken between the several proprietors and the mortgagees. The Survey Record of Rights states clearly that the possession of the plaintiffs was under section 22 (2). No doubt, that is the status descrip-ed under the law, but the Survey Authorities being conversant with the Bengal Tenancy Act must be presumed to have fully appreciated the true scope and meaning of clauses (1) and (2) of section 22. The real import of the entry is one of fact that the plaintiffs as part proprietors had purchased the holdings and were in possession thereof as part proprietors. In this view the Survey Authorities made the aforesaid entry that their possession was under section 22 (2).

It is then contended that, whatever the possession or status of the plaintiffs might have been before the partition, the partition effected a complete change in that status, inasmuch as the plaintiffs ceased to be co-proprietors after the partition, separate pattis or estates having been allotted to the several co-proprietors. The plaintiffs are not now the co-proprietors in the pattis allotted to the defendants wherein the land in dispute has fallen, and consequently they cannot now claim possession of the land under section 22 (2). To this I replied in the case of Ram Prasad v. Gopal Chand (3), in the following words:—

"It will be anomalous and indeed unjust to permit a co-proprietor, after the kasht lands in the estate have been purchased by another co-proprietor at great expense, to go to the Collectorate partition and to claim the same as bakasht and to share in the acquisition to which he has not contributed a single farthing. The section clearly empowers a co-proprietor to hold possession of the kasht land purchased by him, the only condition imposed upon him being that he should pay rent therefor to his co-sharers. There is no limit of time of his possession nor is it controlled by any event, such as the partition of the estate. If his possession was to remain only for so long as the estate was not partitioned, it would have been clearly and unmistakably expressed by the Legislature. I do not, on principle, see any reason why a flourishing co-sharer of a small fractional share in the village should be deprived of an opportunity of purchasing lands in his occupancy holdings in the village, just in the same way as a stranger would be allowed to do. Neither law nor equity would make him worse than a stranger."

(3) 58 Ind. Cas. 955; 2 P. L. T. 163 at p. 164.

The authorities quoted by Mr. Kulwant Sahay have also been dealt with in that judgment.

The term kasht or bakasht also does not at all embarass me in any way. They are words of art introduced for the purpose of understanding the possession of lands by the proprietors and the tenants. The former term is one of recent creation by the Settlement Authorities. The latter, in its true sense, equally applies to the cultivation of lands by the proprietors and the tenants. However, the question of status does not arise in the present case. The real question is, whether the plaintiffs are entitled to continue to hold possession of the land in the same way as they used to do before the partition of the estate. I have discussed in detail the question in the case referred to above [Ram Prasad v. Gopal Chand (3)], and I do not want to repeat my arguments here. For the sake of brevity I would prefer to refer to the said judgment. I have no doubt that the plaintiffs are entitled to hold possession of the land on payment of rent to the defendants under section 22 (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

I would, therefore, respectfully differ from the view taken by my learned brother, Mr. Justice Adami, and would decree these appeals and consequently the suits of the plaintiffs with costs throughout.

UDOY CHANDRA BASU v. MAHAMMAD ALI FEPARI.

for—Presumption—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), ss. 50, 105, 105A.

When a tenant holds over after the expiration of the term of a tenancy, it is a new tenancy coming into operation after the date of the expiration of the term of the previous tenancy. [p. 591, col 2.]

A kabuliyat executed in 1282 B S. creating a tenancy for a term of 3 years stated that, after the termination of the period of settlement, the tenants would take a fresh settlement on a proper rent. After the tenancy had come to an end in 1284 B. S., the tenants held over and continued paying rent at a uniform rate for more than 20 years. In a proceeding for enhancement of rent on the ground of rise in prices of staple food crops:

Held, that the origin of the tenancy should be considered to be from the year 1285 B. S., that the presumption under section 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act had been rebutted, and that, consequently, the landlords were entitled to have fair and equitable rent settled under the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act. [p. 591, col. 2.]

Appeal against a decree of the Additional District Judge, Noakhali, dated the 24th of January 1920, affirming that of the Assistant Settlement Officer of that District, dated the 23rd of September 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Bepin Chandra Bose, for the Appellants.—The landlord is not precluded from having a fair and equitable rent settled. In the lease itself there is a provision for further settlement and thus the presumption under section 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act does not arise. The effect of holding over by the tenants is the creation of a new tenancy upon the same terms as to the payment of rent. The tenants by agreeing to pay proper rent are estopped from questioning my right to enhance the rent. Refers to Upendra Nath Ghose v. Dwarkanath Biswas (1). Then in the finally published Record of Rights the tenants are recorded as settled raiyats. The question of the status of the tenants is thus res judicata.

Babu Asiranjan Chatterjee, for the Respondents.—The position is this that, although there was a recital in the kabuliyat as to the payment of proper rent, yet in point of fact rent was never enhanced. I take a hypothetical case that if a tenant holds over under such a kabuliyat from 1793 up to the present time and pays an uniform rent all along there can be no question of the rebuttal of the presumption under section 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Then there was no new tenancy as the kabuliyats were never acted upon. Refers to Abhoy Shankar Mozumdar v. Rajani Mandal (2) and Biseswar Ray Chowdhry v. Rajendra Kumar Singha (3). Again, payment of rent at a uniform rate for a long series of years raises a presumption of fixity of rent. See Golab Missir v. Kumar Kalanand Singh (4).

Babu Bepin Chandra Bose, was not called upon to reply.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the only question raised on behalf of the appellants, who were the petitioners before the Settlement Officer, is whether they are precluded from having a fair and equitable rent settled with regard to the land in the occupation of their tenants, the defendants, opposite parties, on the grounds of excess area and that the rate of rent is lower than the prevailing rate and also on account of rise of prices of staple food crops.

The proceedings were started under sections 105 and 105A of the Bengal Tenancy Act The record was finally published on the 20th September 1917. The Assistant Settlement Officer dismissed the application and on appeal the Special Judge has affirmed the decision.

The first question for decision, as stated in the judgment of the learned Special Judge, was (1) "whether the defendants' rent is consolidated? Is there any excess area and can plaintiffs get any increase on that count?" The learned Judge has found, and we agree with his finding, that the landlord has not been able to show that the tenants are occupying more land than what they got at the time when they were let into the land. Two Kabuliyats have been produced in this case dated the 2nd and 3rd of Agrahayan 1282 B. S. The landlords' case was that the tenancy commenced from those dates. The tenants alleged no, these kabuliyats were only confirmatory of the lease of the land which they held from before. The leases were for a term of three years which would come to an end in 1284. Upon the terms of the leases there is no doubt that they were in confirmation of the tenancy which existed from before.

Then, the second and third questions that arose for determination in the Court of the learned Judge were, "whether the plaintiffs can get enhancement on the ground of rise in prices of staple food crops and what would be the fair and equitable rent and from which year will it take effect?" The learned Judge has decided these two questions against the landlord on the ground that the defendants were paying rent at a unifrom rate for more than 20 years for these lands and, therefore, the presumption under section 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act was in their favour that they were holding the lands from the time of the Permanent Settlement at a uniform rate of rent and the rent was, therefore, not liable to enhancement on the grounds stated.

The question before us is, whether it should be considered, having regard to the terms of the kabuliyats mentioned above, that the presumption under section 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act does not arise in this particular case. The terms specially referred to are: "That after the termination of the period of settlement we shall take a fresh settlement on a proper rent." Then, towards the end, it is further stated in the kabuliyat that "we shall enjoy the "tenancy for a fixed term under the conditions stated above and to this effect we execute this raiyati kabuliyat for a fixed period." The contention on the part of the appellants is that whatever might be the origin of the original tenancy, that came to an end at the expiration of 1284 B. S., the fact that the tenants held over from that time should be held to be under a new tenancy created when the period mentioned in the kabuliyat expired and, therefore, the presumption under section 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act has been rebutted. It is contended, on the other hand, that as the landlords did not exercise their right to take possession of the tenure or to alter the rent after the expiration of the term of the kabuliyats these kabuliyats were never acted upon and that the tenancy which existed from before the date of the kabuliyats continued throughout, and so the presumption under section 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act has not been rebutted. It is also contended that a new tenancy cannot be inferred from the fact that the landlords did not take any step to exercise their right under the terms of the kabuliyats after the expiration of the period mentioned therein. We may state that no authority has been cited which really covers the point now in controversy. We are of opinion that, on general principles, when a tenant holds over after the expiration of the term of the tenancy it is considered to be a new tenancy coming into operation after the date of the expiration of the term of the previous tenancy; and we have not been referred to any authority that this general principle should not apply to this case. The kabuliyats, we may state, were executed before the Bengal Tenancy Act came into operation and the term mentioned therein also expired before that date. There was nothing to prevent the landlords from enforcing the terms of the kabuliyat after the expiration of the year 1284 B. S. and the fact that they did not take possession or otherwise alter any of the terms of the previous tenancy gives rise to this inference that a new tenancy commenced from after that date upon the same terms as regards payment of rent and other stipulations except the stipulation with regard to the period of settlement. That being so, the origin of the present tenancy should be considered to be from the year 1285 B. S. and, in our opinion, the presumption under section 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act has been rebutted in this case.

We think, therefore, that the landlords are entitled to have fair and equitable rent settled under the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The case is, therefore, sent back to the Court of first instance for fixing a fair and equitable rent.

Costs to abide the result. We assess the hearing fee in this Court at one gold mohur.

Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Noakhali, dated the 13th of February 1920, reversing that of the Munsif, Second Court, at Feni, dated the 5th of September 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Asiranjan Chatterjee (with him Babu Nagendra Nath Bose for Babu Satyendra Chandra Mitra), for the Appellant.—The lower Appellate Court has misread the evidence in the case and on such misreading he has reversed the judgment of the learned Munsif. I beg to submit that the rent-decree obtained by the Maharaja of Tipperah and the sale following that cannot affect the wakf property. The wakfnamah was executed in 1300 B. S. and by that my client was appointed a joint matwali. There is no evidence to contradict the sworn statement of my client that the landlord was perfectly aware of the wakf. Minnatali was never appointed as the representative or agent of my client. My client states that the rent was paid by Minnatali and himself jointly as they were joint mutwallis. There is nothing to show that Minnatali represented my clients or the wakf estate in the landlord's sherista. So the suit against one of the two mutwallis is bad in law. The rent decree cannot affect my client or the wakf estate. The suit must be properly framed and all necessary parties must be made parties to it.

Abdul Rab Chowdhury v. Eggar (1).

On the authority of the case reported as Faizannessa v. Gaganeswari (2) I contend that the rent-decree cannot affect the interests of those that are not parties to the decree.

No one appeared for the other side.

JUDGMENT.—The property in suit which appertains to Taluk Durga Ram Mazumdar was sold in execution of a decree for rent obtained by the landlord, the Maharaja of Tipperah, against, amongst others, Minnatali, defendant No. 1, as representing his father Kamarali who had a share in the taluk. Kamarali had executed a wakfnamah in 1300 B. S. by which he appointed his two sons Minnatali and Abdul Gani, the second defendant, as Mutwallis. The plaintiffs as purchasers in the said execution sale brought this suit for recovery of possession of the share of the taluk which was owned by Kamarali against all the heirs of Kamarali. Defendant No. 2 contended that the rent decree obtained by the Maharaja of Tipperah and the sale consequent upon it did not affect the wakf estate. On these pleadings two issues were raised:—(1) Had the landlord notice of the wakfnama? (2) Did defendant No. 1 represent the defendants or mutwallis in the landlord's sherista? Both these issues were found against the plaintiffs by the learned Munsif who tried the case in the first instance. On appeal by the plaintiffs the lower Appellate Court has found that the landlord had no notice of wakf and that Minnatali represented the wakf estate and defendant No. 2 in the landlords' sherista and hence the rent-decree and the auction-sale passed the wakf estate and whatever interests defendant No. 2 had in it.

Defendant No. 2 appeals to this Court and it is contended on his behalf that the learned District Judge has misread the whole of the evidence and his findings are based upon such misreading of the evidence. We have gone through the evidence in the case and we find that the contention of the appellant is correct. The learned Judge says: "There is nothing to show that the landlord was aware of this wakf;" we find that defendant No. 2 swears that the landlord was aware of the wakf and there is no evidence contradicting this statement. The learned Judge has in several places in his judgment remarked that defendant No. 2 has deposed that rent was paid marfat defendant No. 1, Minnatali, and he adds that, such being the case, "it is clear that Minnatali after the death of his father Kamarali represented all the heirs of Kamarali and as such representative paid the rent:" then, again, "This marfat according to defendant No. 2 was entered in the dakhilas. That shows by implication consent of defendant No. 2 to be represented by defendant No. 1. Defendant No. 2 as unregistred tenant is bound by the proceeding against the registered tenant, i. e., defendant No. 1." All these findings are based on the supposition that defendant No. 2 has stated in his examination in Court that the rent was paid through Minnatali as marfatdar and that dakhilas were issued in the name of Minnatali as such. Whereas, on reading the evidence, it is clear that he says that the rent was paid by defendant No. 1 and defendant No. 2 jointly as they were joint mutwallis, and he adds: "In the dakhilas we were described only as marfatdars, that was because we were the only co sharers of the taluk." This is exactly contrary to what the learned Judge thinks defendant No. 2 deposed in Court. There is no evidence, as the learned Munsif observes, on the plaintiffs' side to show that defendant No. 1 represented defendant No. 2 or the wakf estate in the landlord's sherista. The suit against one of the mutwallis is, therefore, bad [See the case of Abdul Rab Chowdhury v. Eggar (1)]. Accepting the findings of the Munsif that defendant No. 1 did not represent defendant No. 2 or wakf estate in the landlord's sherista, we cannot but hold that the rent-decree obtained by the landlord did not bind either defendant No. 2 or the wakf estate and that on that date defendant No. 1, Minnatali, had no interest which could pass by the decree obtained against him in his personal capacity.

It is now settled beyond dispute that, on the death of a tenure-holder, if a decree is obtained for rent against some of his heirs the interest of those heirs that are not parties to the decree will not be affected either by the decree or by sale under that decree [Fa'zinnessa v. Gagneswari (2)].

We accordingly set aside the decree of the Court of Appeal below and restore that of the Court of first instance. The appellant will get his costs both in this Court and in the Court of Appeal below.

Hindu Law—Prostitutes—Succession.

The property of a deceased Hindu prostitute, whether she was married or not, devolves upon her heirs, and is not inherited by the Crown in preference to them. [p. 594, col. 1.]

Second appeal from a decision of the Sessions and Subordinate Judge, Mirzapur, dated the 8th May 1920.

Mr. Surendra Nath Gupta, for the Appellant.

Dr. S. M. Sulaiman, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Janki and Kali, deceased, were Hindu women who made their living as professional prostitutes. There is no evidence to show whether Janki had ever been married. Janki purchased a house. After the death of Janki and her sister, Kali, this house was claimed by their mother, Bhanga, the present appellant, as the heir of Janki, and by Shaikh Din Mohammad, who claimed under a Will from Kali. Sheikh Din Mohammad obtained possession. Bhanga sued him for possession and recovery of certain ornaments and mesne profits. Her suit was decreed by the Munsif who found that the house and ornaments belonged to Janki and that the Will by Kali conferred no title. Din Mohammad appealed. The learned Subordinate Judge upheld the finding that all the property belonged to Janki, but he dismissed Bhanga's suit on the finding that, inasmuch as Janki was a prostitute, she must be taken to have been an unmarried woman who had become unchaste and that, under the Hindu Law, the property of an unmarried woman who has become unchaste must be inherited by the Crown, as she can have no heirs. In the first place, there is nothing to show whether Janki was or was not unmarried. It is well known law in connection with Hindu widows who have become prostitutes, that the succession is as the succession of married women. I have not been able to discover a case deciding the succession to an unmarried woman who has become a prostitute. Considering the fact that the large majority of Hindu girls do get married and that prostitution is uncommon amongst Hindus except in the case of widows, the absence of precedents is not surprising. In all probability, if the facts had been gone into, it would have been discovered that Janki was a widow. The Mitakshara Law recognises two forms of descent to a Hindu woman's self-acquired property, according as to whether she is married or unmarried.

There is nothing in the Hindu Law which states that when an unmarried woman has fallen from chastity, no one can succeed to her property except the Crown. It is not really of great importance whether Janki was married or not. Her property would go, in any circumstances, to her mother who is her only heir. I, therefore, allow this appeal, set aside the decree of the learned Subordinate Judge and restore the decree of the learned Munsif. Sheikh Din Mohammad will pay his own costs and those of the plaintiff in all Courts which will include fees on the higher scale.

Specific performance—Incomplete contract.

In a suit for specific performance of a contract alleged to have been entered into by defendants Nos. 1 and 2 to sell a certain property it was found that it was agreed between the plaintiff and defendant No. 1 that the latter and defendant No. 2 would sell the property to the plaintiff:

Held, that as the agreement proposed was between the plaintiff on the one hand and defendants Nos. 1 and 2 on the other and as defendant No. 2 had not agreed, there was no completed contract which could be specifically enforced. [p. 595, col. 2.]

Appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Bankura, dated the 21st of July 1919, affirming that of the Munsif, Third Court, at Bishunpur, dated the 21st of March 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Dr. Dwarkanath Mitter (with him Babu Rishindra Nath Sircar, for the Appellant:—The appeal arises out of a suit for specific performance of contract. Both Courts dismissed the suit on the ground that specific performance of the contract could not be claimed as of right. The contract was to the effect that the defendant No. 1 and the defendant No 2, together, would sell a two annas share of a tank and an entire plot of land to the plaintiff. There was a further agreement that if defendant No. 2 did not consent to sell his share the defendant No. 1 would sell his own share to the plaintiff. I am entitled, at any rate, to the half share of the defendant No. 1. Refers to section 15 of the Specific Relief Act; Shama Charan Kotal v. Kumed Dasi (1). The case reported as Jatindra Nath Basu v. Peyer Deye Debi (2) does not apply to the present case. The case in Abdul Rahman v. Jadunandan Singh Jha (3) is distinguishable, inasmuch as it is a case under the Mitakshara School of Hindu Law. It does not, therefore, apply to the facts of the present case. Refers to Lumley v. Ravenscroft (4).

Babu Mohendra Nath Roy (with him Babu Bhupendra Kumar Ghose), for the Respondents.—The plaintiff states that both the defendants would execute the Kobala. There was a second allegation that there was a contract by the defendant No. 1 and that his share would be sold. The Courts below find that the second allegation was not made out; as regards the first allegation it has been found that defendant No. 1 did not contract to sell on behalf of his brother, defendant No. 2. Therefore, there was no contract enforceable in law. Section 15 of the Specific Relief Act presupposes the existence of a contract enforceable in law. Refers to Shama Charan Kotal v. Kumed Dasi (1). Section 15 of the Specific Relief Act would apply only when the contract between the parties is proved to be valid and enforceable in law. Here the facts prove otherwise.

Dr. Dwarkanath Mitter, in reply.—Refers to Fry on Specific Performance, 384; Burrow v. Scammell (5), Hexter v. Peirce (6).

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for specific performance of a contract.

The plaintiff's case is, that it was agreed that the defendant No. 1 and the defendant No. 2, together, would sell a 2-annas share of a tank and an entire plot of land to the plaintiff. A further agreement was set up, viz., that if the defendant No. 2 did not consent to sell his share, the defendant No. 1 would sell his own moiety share.

The defendant No. 2, it is found, had never agreed to sell his share. Both the Courts below have come to the conclusion that the plaintiff was not entitled to specific performance of the contract.

The only question raised before us is, whether the plaintiff was entitled to specific performance of the contract so far as the share of the defendant No. 1 was concerned.

In the present case, there was no agreement by defendant No. 1 to sell on behalf of defendant No. 2. He did not profess to have any authority to do so and there was no contract that he would sell the property for self and on behalf of defendant No. 2. The Courts below have come to the conclusion that there was no completed contract which could be enforced.

It appears from the judgment of the Munsif that, when the proposal was made, the defendant No. 1 told the plaintiff that he would consult his mother, brother and co sharers and would then let the plaintiff know. The Munsif points out that, though the defendant No. 1 probably held out some hope to the plaintiff that his brother would agree, the plaintiff knew very well that without consulting his brother, the defendant No. 1 could not give his final word. The learned Subordinate Judge in one place of his judgment says that it was agreed between the plaintiff and defendant No. 1 that the latter and defendant No. 2 would sell the property to him, but further on he says that it was a contract which could be enforced. This is explained by what we have stated from the judgment of the Munsif. The agreement proposed was between the plaintiff on the one hand, and the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 on the other, but the defendant No. 2 did not agree. That being so, we think that the Courts below were right in holding that there was no completed contract.

It has been pressed upon us that the question of intention ought to have been gone into. But the plaintiff set up an alternative case, viz., that there was an agreement that the defendant No. 1 would sell his own share even if the defendant No. 2 did not agree. That case has been found against the plaintiff by both the Courts. But the fact that such an alternative case was set up indicates how the agreement was understood by the parties. Besides, the plaintiff did not invite either of the Courts below to go into the question of intention. In both the Courts below he insisted upon the alternative case, namely, that there was an agreement that the defendant No. 1 would sell his own share even if the defendant No. 2 did not agree; and both the Courts below have found against the plaintiff.

The Court of first instance found that the plaintiff never tendered any consideration money to the defendants. The lower Appellate Court has not come to any finding on the point. It is unnecessary, however, to consider the point.

The appeal fails and is dismissed. We make no order as to costs in this Court.

Civil revision against an order of the Judge, Gorakhpur, dated 4th April 1921.

Mr. Akhil Nath Sanyal, for the Applicants.

Mr. Sankar Saran, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application in revision from an order of the Small Cause Court of the City of Gorakhpur, dated the 4th of April last, rejecting an application to restore an ex parte decree. It appears that on the 25th of February 1921 an ex parte decree was passed against the present applicant. The suit in which that decree was passed was a suit to recover an ox or its price, namely, Rs. 80 and costs. The Court decreed Rs. 80 to the plaintiff plus Rs. 14-4-0 costs. On the same day the applicant here applied for the restoration of the case and asked leave to deposit Rs. 80 within a fortnight. Thereupon, the Court ordered notice to go to the other side and fixed the 2nd of April for hearing the application. Nothing was said in the order about depositing any money. The decree in the case was drawn up on the 1st of March showing a sum of Rs. 94-4-0 as due from the defendant-applicant here. On the 14th of March the applicant deposited Rs. 90. On the 2nd of April the case was taken up in the presence of the parties. The applicant asked for one day's adjournment the reason for which was not disclosed. The Court adjourned the case to the 4th. On the 4th, apparently, the notice of the Court was drawn to the fact that Rs. 90 only had been deposited whereas the amount decreed was Rs. 94-4-0. Thereupon the Court passed this order: "Judgment-debtor to pay R. 4-4-0 before the restoration application can be taken up. Put up to morrow." Some time on the same date the Court recorded the following order: "The above order is cancelled now. Turning to section 17 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, I find that an application for setting aside an ex parte decree shall be accompanied with the deposit in Court of the amount due from the judgment-debtor under the decree. The application was put in on the 25th of February 1921 and Rs. 90 out of Rs. 94-4-0 was deposited on the 14th of March 1921. The provisions of the law are thus frustrated. I am afraid I cannot extend the time to the judgment-debtor. The application is, therefore, rejected." It appears that sometime on that date, whether before or after the passing of this order, Rs. 4-4-0 was tendered by the applicant. It looks as if the attention of the Court was drawn to section 17 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act for the first time on the 4th of April 1921. I am asked to interfere in revision and direct the Court to accept the tender of Rs. 4-4-0 thus making up the whole amount due under the decree and to restore the application for restoration. It seems to me that I have no power to do so. The words of section 17 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act are mandatory as was held by a Divisional Bench of this Court in the case of Jagan Nath v. Chet Ram (1). The learned Counsel for the applicant relies on the case of Lachi Lal v. Mewa Ram (2). In that case a decree was passed ex parte in favour of the plaintiff for Rs. 190 plus Rs. 20 8-0 costs. The decree holder subsequently applied for execution of his decree and a notice was issued to the judgment-debtor to show cause why the decree should not be executed. The notice which was issued by the Court to the judgment debtor stated that the decree was for Rs 190. The judgment-debtor then applied for restoration of the suit and deposited Rs. 190 the amount shown in the notice which he had received from the Court as the amount due on this decree. At the hearing it was objected that the provisions of section 17 had not been complied with and the Court accepted that view and refused the application. On revision to this Court, a learned Judge, sitting alone, held that, as the full amount alleged to be due under the decree had been deposited, the Court could entertain the application, and the case in Jagan Nath v. Chet Ram (1) was distinguished. In that case, however, the only notice which the judgment debtor had of the amount decreed against him, was what was stated in the summons of the Court itself, because ex hypothesi if his application was bona fide, he had no previous notice that a suit even had been instituted against him, much less what amount had been decreed. Under these circumstances, it might well be held that he was entitled to accept as accurate the summons of the Court as to what had been decreed, and that, having paid that amount with his application for restoration, he had done all that was required of him. But, even if the ruling in that case were applicable to the facts here, I think I am bound by the Divisional Bench case quoted above.

It was then argued that there was here "a substantial compliance" with the words of the section. I do not understand what is meant by "a substantial compliance." Either the provisions of the section were complied with or they were not. In the first instance, no money at all was deposited, and leave was asked to deposit Rs. 80 only. On the 14th March Rs. 90 and not Rs. 80 were paid in, obviously suggesting that the applicant was conscious that something over and above the Rs. 80 claimed must have been decreed, presumably for costs or interest, or both. He appeared in Court that very day, and if he had made inquiries then, or had taken the trouble to look at the decree, which was prepared on the 1st March he would have seen that the amount decreed against him was Rs. 94-4-0. It seems to me doubtful whether, even on the 14th of March, if he had deposited the full amount of Rs. 94-4-0 that he would have complied with the provisions of section 17. In my opinion the Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the application without following the procedure prescribed in section 17; that is to say, it should have satisfied itself that the deposit had been made as provided in that section, or else that security had been given to its satisfaction. I reject the application with costs.

Nawab Khaleh HABIBULLA AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Deed, construction of—"Kar," meaning of—Kar, if includes cesses.

The word "kar" is wide enough in its ordinary meaning to include the word cess

A clause in a deed of partition and exchange provided as follows:—"The second party will not have to pay to any one any kar whatsoever; should any body ever recover any kar from them then the first party should re-imburse them":

Held, on the interpretation of the document, that the second party would not have to pay either revenue or rent or any kind of taxes including road cess.

Appeal against a decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Baekerganj, dated the 4th June 1919, reversing that of the Munsif, Third Court, at Patuakhali, dated the 24th June 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Surendra Chandra Guha, for the Respondents took a preliminary objection that the present second appeal is barred under the provisions of section 102 of the Code of Civil Procedure, inasmuch as the suit is of a Small Cause Court nature for Rs. 21.

[NEWBOULD, J.—The suit is for a declaration that the plaintiff is not liable to pay cesses and is, therefore, not of a Small Cause Court nature.]

Maulvi A. K. Fazlul Haq (with him Babu Abinash Chandra Ghose), for the Appellant: The appeal depends on the construction of a deed of partition and exchange. Under the document it has been agreed that the second party to it will not have to pay any kar whatsoever. The word kar is wide enough to include cesses.

Babe Surendra Chandra Guha, for the Respondents:—The statutory liability to pay cesses is on the party in possession. In the document referred to by my learned friend there is nothing to show that we undertook to pay cesses. The word 'kar' cannot include cesses for in the document itself kar and cesses have been separetely described, Maulvi A. K. Fazlul Huq, was not called upon to reply.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of the case are set out in the judgments of the lower Courts and need not be recapitulated. The only point we have to decide in this appeal is the meaning of the word "kar" used in a document (Exhibit 11), a deed of partition and exchange. The claim of the plaintiffs in this suit is based on paragraph 10 of that document in which these words appear, "In respect of the same the second party will not have to pay to any one ary kar (?) whatsoever should any body ever recover any kar from them, then the first party should re imburse them". The question is, whether the word kar in this sentence includes cesses as well as rent. We find in Haughton's Dictionary the meanings of this word are as taxes and revenue and also on a reference to Sen's English to Bengali Dictionary we find the word "kar" is given as a translation of the word cess; also the road cess recoverable under the Cess Act is commonly spoken of in Bengali as Pathkar. It seems, therefore, that there is no doubt that the word kar is wide enough in its ordinary meaning to include the word cess. We think the clause "the second party will not have to pay any kar whatsoever" means, that the second party will not have to pay either revenue or rent or any kind of taxes including road cess.

Our attention has been drawn on behalf of the respondents to the fact that in another paragraph of the same document reference is made to the entire kar and cesses. But we do hold that it does not necessarily follow that when the word 'kar' is used alone it cannot be held to include cess also.

The lower Courts differed in opinion as to the proper interpretation of the document. The interpretation we put on it is that of the First Court and not of the lower Appellate Court. The result, therefore, is that this appeal is decreed with costs. The decree of the lower Appellate Court is set aside and that of the Court of first instance restored.

The appellants will get their costs in the lower Appellate Court also.

—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Practice—Procedure—Evidence—Hearing of suit without affording parties opportunity of examining their witnesses, propriety of.

On the day to which a Small Cause Court suit had been adjourned for hearing both the parties to the suit applied for time on the ground that their witnesses had not come The Court rejected the application and proceeded with the hearing of the suit with the result that, after examining the plaintiff and two of his witnesses and the defendant, the Court decreed the suit:

Held, that, under the circumstances of the case, the Court ought to have allowed time to the parties to produce their evidence before it for the purpose of coming to a just decision in the case and that the defendant having been prejudiced by the procedure adopted by the Court, the case ought to be re-heard.

Rule against an order of the Judge of the Court of Small Causes at Munshiganj.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Bhupendra Chandra Guha, for the Petitioner.—The petitioner comes up before your Lordships in revision under section 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act; the provision therein gives your Lordships ample jurisdiction in a case like this where justice and equity both demand that the case should be fully gone into. There have been grave irregularities leading to flagrant miscarriage of justice. As it was not proper service under the law, I applied for fresh service upon witness. Some attempts ought to be made for proper service. Refers to Cohen v. Nursing Dass Auddy (1), Ganesh Narayan Sathe, In re (2) and Huree Dass Bysack v. Meer Moazzum Hossein (3).

Babu Bankim Chandra Banerji, for the Opposite Party—Small Cause Courts are for speedy trial of cases. The defendant took time to file statements. The rulings cited by my learned friend are applicable to Presidency Small Cause Courts and not to Provincial Small Cause Courts. Unless there is substantial injury or failure of justice, your Lordships will not interfere.

Babu B. C. Guha, replied,

JUDGMENT.—Defendant No. 2 has obtained this Rule against the decree of the Small Cause Court Judge of Munshiganj, Dacca, on the ground that he was not afforded a full opportunity of examining his witnesses. He filed his written statement on the 13th May 1921, when the case was adjourned till the 21st June 1921 for hearing. On that day both the parties applied for time on the ground that their witnesses had not come. The plaintiff said that his witness, Sarat Chandra Acharjya, had not come with the necessary papers and another witness, Rajani, was seriously ill and could not come. Defendant No. 2 applied for process against his witness, Durga Mohan Chakravartty, on the ground that the summons had not been served on him on the previous occasion.

The learned Small Cause Court Judge refused both the applications and proceeded with the hearing of the suit with the result that after examining the plaintiff and two witnesses and the defendant No. 2 he decreed the suit against that defendant.

In the circumstances above set forth, we are of opinion that the learned Judge ought to have allowed time to the parties to produce their evidence before him for the purpose of coming to a just decision in the case. We are not satisfied that the defendant was not prejudiced by the procedure adopted by the learned Judge.

We, therefore, make the Rule absolute, set aside the decree passed by the Small Cause Court Judge of Munshiganj, Dacca, on the 21st June 1921, and direct that the case be re-heard. No order as to costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 73—Execution—Rateable distribution—Court distributing assets, whether can inquire if decree obtained by fraud.

Application against an order passed by the First Class Subordinate Judge, at Ratnagiri, in Darkhast No. 243 of 1920.

Mr. K. N. Koyajee, for the Appellant,

Mr. P. B. Shingne, for the Opponent.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—This is an application to this Court under section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The applicant obtained a decree against his debtor, presented a Darkhast for execution, and applied therein for rateable distribution of the proceeds of a sale in execution of another decree obtained by the opponent against the same judgment-debtor.

The opponent raised a plea that the applicant's decree had been obtained by fraud. The lower Court considered this question and, being bound by the decision in Ohhaganlal v. Fazarali (1), decided that the Court could decide the question of fraud in execution proceedings, where the rival decree-holder raised the point, notwithstanding that a concurrent remedy by a regular suit was left open to him. It is necessary, therefore, to consider the ruling in Ohhaganlal v. Fazarali (1). Sir Charles Sargent, C. J., said:—

"The question referred to us is not without difficulty, but we are disposed to adopt the ruling of the Calcutta High Court Sunder Dass, In re (2) that the Court distributing the proceeds of execution under section 295 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) should inquire into the bona fides of the decree holders if called in question and decide it in the same manner as all other questions that arise in execution."

This question arose in Saravana Pillai v. Arunachalam Chettiar (3). The learned Judges, after considering the Calcutta case and also the decision of Ohhaganlal v. Fazarali (1), came to the conclusion that it was not open to a Court exercising its duties under section 73 of the Code of 1908 to inquire into the legality or validity of a decree brought to its notice in distributing the assets.

Our attention has been drawn by Mr. Koyajee to section 272 in the Code of 1859 which says:—

"If it shall appear to the Court, upon the application of a decree holder, that any other decree under which property has been attached has been obtained by fraud or other improper means, the Court may order that the applicant shall be satisfied out of the proceeds of the property attached, so far as the same may suffice for the purpose, if such other decree be a decree of that Court, or if it be a decree of another Court, may stay the proceedings to enable the applicant to obtain a similar order from the Court by which the decree was made."

Therefore, under that Code the Court which was distributing the assets amongst the decree holders had the power to deal with the question whether any of the decrees passed by itself had been obtained by fraud or other improper means. But this power was not given by section 295 of Act XIV of 1882 nor by section 73 of the present Code. Section 73 directs that the assets, after deducting the costs of realization, shall be rateably distributed among all such persons as shall have made applications to the Court for the execution of decrees for the payment of money passed against the same judgment debtor. On general principle, the Court which would be merely a distributing agency, would not have any power to deal with the question whether any of the decrees had been obtained by fraud or other improper means just as in an ordinary case of execution the Court which executes the decree cannot go behind the decree. So it would appear that, where the Court is only concerned with distributing assets under section 73, it cannot have any greater power to go behind the decrees which are presented by the various decree-holders asking for rateable distribution. Sub-section (2) of section 73 expressly provides that where all or any of the assets liable to be rateably distributed under this section are paid to a person not entitled to receive the same, any person so entitled may sue such person to compel him to refund the assets on the ground that such share of the distribution was obtained by fraud or collusion. No doubt if any such suggestion is made to the distributing Court, the applicant making it would be given an opportunity of filing a regular suit to set aside the decree which he alleges had been obtained improperly, and the distribution might be stayed till that suit was decided. But that would be a matter purely for the distributing Court to decide, because sub-section (2) implies that, in spite of an objection, the assets have been distributed, in which case the suit would be one for the refund of the amount distributed, on the ground that the person who obtained such amount had got a decree passed in his favour either by fraud or other improper means. I think, therefore, the decision in Ohhagonlal v. Fazarali (1) must be overruled. The Rule must be made absolute and the distribution must proceed in the lower Court in the light of this judgment.

(1) 13 B. 154; 7 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 103.

(2) 11 C. 42; 5 Ind. Dec (N. S.) 785.

(3) 38 Ind. Cas. 117; 40 M. 841; 21 M. L. T. 225 (1917) M. W. N. 280; 5 L. W. 538; 32 M. L. J. 553.

Costs to be costs in the execution in the lower Court.

Raikishori Ghose v. Kumudini Kanta Ghose, 14 Ind. Cas. 377; 15 C. L. J. 138 and Joy Coomar v. Bundhoo Lall, 9 C. 363; 12 C. L. R. 490; 5 Shome L. R. 142; 4 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 891, referred to.

But where the Court visits the locality in order to ascertain if the map which was put in by the plaintiff correctly depicts the locality and does not base its judgment on the result of the local investigation, the defendant cannot in any way be prejudiced by the fact of the local investigation being not put into writing. [p. 602, col. 1.]

A High Court in second appeal cannot enter into the question whether the plaintiff's suit was barred by limitation or not unless the point was taken before the lower Courts. [p. 602, col. 2.]

Appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Howrah, (Hooghly) dated the 6th March 1920, affirming that of the Munsif, Third Court, at Howrah, dated the 23rd of July 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Lalit Mohan Banerjee, for the Appellants:—My clients have been materially prejudiced by the fact that result of the local investigations held by the Courts below has not been put into writing. See Joy Coomar v. Bundhoo Lall (1) and Raikishori Ghose v. Kumudini Kanta Ghose (2). My next contention is that there ought to have been a measurement by a qualified surveyor. The last ground upon which I challenge the decision of the Court below is that the lower Appellate Court ought to have held that the plaintiff's suit was barred by limitation.

Babu Pannalal Chatterjee, for the Respondent:—The judgment of the lower Appellate Court is not based on the result of the local investigation held by it. Had the judgment been based upon the result of the local investigation, then there might have been a ground of compilant, Reads Raikishori Ghose v. Kumudini Kanta Ghose (2). As regards the objection of my learned friend that there was no measurement by a qualified surveyor, my submission is that the defendants never objected to the plan on that score. As a matter of fact, the plan was prepared in their presence. Then, as regards the question of limitation, the point not having been taken before the Court below should not be entertained by your Lordships in second appeal.

Babu Lolit Mohan Banerjee replied.

JUDGMENT.—In this appeal by the defendants against the judgment of the Subordinate Judge of Hooghly, affirming the decree of the Munsif at Howrah, three points have been urged before us.

First, that the Courts below should have reduced to writing the result of the local investigation held by them, and in support of this contention the cases of Raikishori Ghose v. Kumudini Kanta Ghose (2) and Joy Coomer v. Bundhoo Lall (1) have been cited. The learned Subordinate Judge and the learned Munsif visited the locality in order to ascertain if the map which was put in by the plaintiff correctly depicted the locality and it appears that they did not base their judgments on the result of the local inspections held by them. The law as to local inspection is that, when a Court bases its judgment on the result of the local inspection held by it, it ought to enter, the result of such investigation on the record in order to enable the parties to adduce evidence in respect thereof. In this case the Courts simply tried to ascertain the correctness of the map filed by the plaintiff. We do not think that the defendants were in any way prejudiced by the fact of the local investigation not having been put into writing.

The second point taken is that there ought to have been a measurement by a qualified amin of the locality. It is evident from the judgment of the lower Appellate Court that the defendants never objected to the accuracy of the plan, Exhibit 3, before that Court. They did not traverse the evidence in the case that the map was prepared in their presence.

The third point is that the lower Appellate Court should have considered the evidence in order to determine whether the plaintiff's suit was barred by limitation or not. No such point was taken before that Court and we cannot enter into that question in second appeal.

The result is the appeal is dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.

SHAH, J.—This is an appeal from the judgment of Mr. Justice Kajiji in a suit filed by one Bai Nandubai as the next friend of the minor, Bai Gulab, for a declaration that the marriage of the minor with the defendant was null and void and for certain other reliefs.

The defendant is a Visa Modh Bania of Ahmedabad living in Bombay. The next friend of the minor is a Luhana by caste, and the minor, whose caste is a point in dispute between the parties, lived under the care of Bai Nandubai at the time of the marriage.

The plaintiff filed the suit alleging that the marriage between the minor and the defendant was the result of fraud, that the minor girl was a Sudra and that the marriage was invalid. A sum of Rs. 10,000 was claimed as damages.

The defendant pleaded that the girl was the daughter of a Bania named Jagjivandas; that the marriage was properly and openly performed as a marriage would be performed among Banias according to Hindu rites; that the girl was in fact a Bania girl and not a "Sudra." He repudiated the allegations as to fraud and damages and made a counter-claim for the restitution of conjugal rights as the husband of the minor girl.

Several issues were raised, but at the hearing, issues Nos. 4 and 7 relating to the fraudulent character of the marriage ceremony and the claim for damages were abandoned.

It was admitted before the Trial Court that the marriage ceremony was performed and that consummation had taken place. It was also admitted that the minor girl was born of the connection between Jagjivandas and one Durgabai, a Maratha woman, and that Durgabai was not married to Jagjivandas.

On a consideration of the evidence the learned Trial Judge held that the girl was a "Sudra" but was accepted as a Bania girl at the time of the marriage as she lived with Jagjivandas, who looked after her practically as his daughter until she went to live with Dhangavri, the legitimate daughter of Jagjivandas, who put her in charge of Nandubai. The learned Judge found that the marriage was valid as she was practically recognised as a Bania girl at the time. Certain other improper suggestions made by the plaintiff in the course of the hearing were found on the evidence to be unfounded, and accordingly a decree was passed disallowing the plaintiff's claim and allowing the defendant's counter-claim.

In the appeal before us it is urged that the marriage is invalid as the girl is, in fact, a Sudra girl; that the circumstance that the girl was recognised as a Bania girl by the caste people cannot make the marriage valid, if it be otherwise invalid, and that, according to the Hindu Law, a marriage between a Vaishya male and a Sudra female is invalid.

As regards the caste of the girl, on the facts admitted in these proceedings, it is clear that her mother was a Maratha woman and her father is a Visa Modh Bania. It appears from the evidence that she was brought up by the father as a Bania girl. In the Birth Register the caste is described as Wani and the names of the parents are mentioned. It appears from Gulab's evidence that her mother died when she was about two years old, and apparently she lived as a Bania girl with her father. A few months before the marriage in question, which took place in December 1919, the girl was sent away to Dhangavri, the daughter of Jagjivandas. Then Nandubai, who was a neigbour of Dhangavri, came to have charge of the girl, and the marriage in question was arranged apparently by Nandubai with the defendant. Though there is no evidence on the point, under the circumstances it is not unlikely that at least in the beginning Nandubai was acting with the knowledge and acquiescence of Dhangavri—and perhaps of the father of the girl—and it is also not unlikely under the circumstances that the parties concerned might have been aware of the parentage of the girl. However that may be, apparently the marriage was brought about on the footing that she was a Bania girl. As a fact, however, her parentage is known now, and the question arises whether she was a Sudra or occupied any better status. The lower Court has recorded the finding that she was a Sudra, but has found that her caste is a matter of doubt according to law and that as she was treated as a Bania girl for the purpose of the marriage, she must be treated as a Bania girl. It is also urged on behalf of the defendant-respondent that, according to Hindu Law, as stated in Brindavana v. Radhamani (1), the caste of the girl would be higher than that of the mother and lower than that of the father and reliance is placed upon Manu, Chapter X, Verse 41 and Yajnavalkya, Verses 91, 92, 95, and 96 of the Yajnavalkya Smriti, Acharadhyaya with Vijnaneshwara's commentary thereon, as supporting the view that the girl in the present case cannot be treated as a Sudra. Apart from the decision in Brindavana v. Radhamani (1), the difficulty in the way of accepting this argument is that where the anulomajas are referred to they are referred to as born of the wedded wife of a lower class: and where the pratilomajas are described there is no reference to the lawful wedlock. We are not concerned here with the pratilomajas but in the case of anulomajas Yajnavalkya and Vijnaneshvara refer to those born of a wife though she may be of a different class. The word used is vinna which indicates a married state and not any irregular connection. It is true no doubt that in Brindavana's case (1) the learned Judges held that a son born of a Kshatriya male and Sudra female though not married was higher in caste than a Sudra. In fact, they applied the principle applicable to the anulomajas to the case of an illegitimate son. They observe at page 85 of the report as follows:—

"Though the illegitimate children of members of the regenerate classes are excluded from inheritance by the author of the Mitakshara, they are substantially recognised by him as members of their father's families for purposes of maintenance, and the absence of legal marriage is, in our judgment, no bar to the determination of their caste with reference to the law applied to the anulomajas, the point in analogy being the conventional notion in regard to the superior efficacy of the seed."

If the learned Judges in Madras were prepared to go so far on the strength of these texts, I am unable to discover any serious difficulty in applying the same rule in this Presidency. Of course, if this rule be applied Bai Gulab would not be a Sudra. In view of the difficulty of applying these texts in their entirety on account of the mixed marriages being very uncommon, the absence of any precedent in this Presidency on this point and the special features of the caste system on this side of India, I prefer to leave this question open, and to deal with the case on the footing that the girl is a "Sudra."

The fact that the caste people of her father, who is a Visa Modh Bania of Surat, raised no objection to her father treating her as a Bania girl before the marriage, and that the marriage was celebrated as though she were a Bania girl without any objection on the part of the caste at Ahmedabad, to which the defendant belongs, does not appear to my mind to afford a sufficiently firm basis for the view that the marriage is valid, even though otherwise it may not be valid. It is urged for the defendant that as the caste people of the defendant have raised no objection to the marriage and are not shown to be likely to do so, the marriage must be accepted as valid. No doubt where there is any plea of special custom or usage, the attitude of the caste people would be very relevant as bearing on the existence of such a custom. But it is very doubtful to my mind whether the validity of a marriage can be determined solely with reference to the position which the caste people may take up with regard to it. Their power to deal with the matter socially whenever they find any departure from the usual practice of marriage within their own circle, is undefined and practically unlimited. But this Court has not recognised the power of the caste to decide questions as to the legal validity of a particular marriage. That must be decided ultimately with reference to the provisions of law subject, of course, to the proof of any special usage having the force of law. For instance, in Reg v. Karsan Goja (2) and Reg. v. Sambhu Raghu (3) the Court refused to recognise the interference of the caste as having any effect on the question whether the particular marriage was void or not. These rulings have no direct application here, but the principle underlying them is capable of application to this case; and, even apart from these decisions, on principle the position is clear to my mind.

The question, therefore, that arises for decision is whether, according to the Hindu law, the marriage between a Vaishya (in this case a Visa Modha Bania of Ahmedabad) and the illegitimate daughter of a Vaishya (in this case a Visa Modh Bania) born of a "Sudra" (in this case a Maratha woman) is valid. It is valid if, according to law, the marriage between a Vaishya and Sudra is not prohibited by law. If it is prohibited, it would be invalid. The pratiloma marriages have been held to be invalid in this Presidency. In Bai Lakshmi v. Kaliansing (4) a marriage between a Brahmin girl and a Rajput male was set aside. In Bai Kashi v. Jamnadas (5) it was held that a Brahmin woman cannot contract a valid marriage with a "Sudra." Mr. Justice Chandavarkar has discussed the various texts bearing on this question and the judgment is very helpful in deciding the question now under consideration. Both these were decisions relating to pratiloma marriages. But there is no decision of this Court, so far as I am aware, and none has been cited to show that anuloma marriages also are invalid.

It is clear that where there is a marriage in fact, there is a presumption in favour of there being a marriage in law: Inderun Valungypooly Tater v. Ramasawmy Pondia Talaver (6). The argument on behalf of the appellant has been that mixed caste marriages even of anuloma nature are not only obsolete but are prohibited by the Hindu law. This is a point of great importance and it is desirable to deal with it in some detail. It is important to remember at the outset that what is out of practice or obsolete is not necessarily prohibited, and the argument is based upon the assumption that what is obsolete is prohibited by law. The importance of the difference between the two positions will be clear when I refer to the texts bearing on this point.

In the first place, we have the texts of Manu (Chapter III, Verses 12 and 13) which point out that, while for the first marriage of twice born men (wives) of the same class are recommended, the anuloma marriages are permissible, see Sacred Books of the East, Vol. XXV, pp. 77 and 78. The following Verses Nos. 14 and 19 express disapproval of marriages of higher classes with Sudra women. But where, first, there is a provision for such marriages and, next, any strong disapproval thereof is expressed, the fair meaning is that such marriages are disapproved but option is given and they are not prohibited. That is the meaning which a commentator like Medhatithi has put upon them; and Kulluka Bhatta has interpreted them to mean that the prohibition is to be understood as limited to pratiloma marriages and not to be extended to anuloma marriages. Mr. Justice Chandavarkar has referred to these views in Bai Kashi's case (5) at pages 551, 552* of the report, and it is clear that, so far as Manu is concerned, no prohibition of anuloma marriages can be inferred.

I shall now refer to the Verses in the Yajnavalkya Smriti and Vijnaneshvara's commentary thereon bearing on the point as the position is very clearly stated there. In the third Chapter of Acharadhyaya, which relates to marriages, Yajnavalkya first lays down rules as to the selection of the bride and of the bridegroom some of which are mandatory and others clearly recommendatory only. It is not necessary to refer to them in detail. Thereafter, he proceeds to lay down the rules as to intercaste marriages in Verses 56 and 57. It will be convenient to quote here the translation of these Verses as well as of Vijnaneshvara's commentary thereon given in the translation of Acharadhyaya by Srisachandra Vidyarnava (published by the Panini Office. Bhuvaneshwari Ashrama, Allahabad, in 1918) at pp. 120, 121, 122, 128 and 129:—

"Marriages are of three kinds, as they are either for the sake of enjoyment, or for the sake of a son, or for the sake of Dharma (religion.) Among these, the marriage for the sake of a son is of two kinds, necessary (Nitya) and optional (Kamya). In the necessary (Nitya) marriage for the sake of a son from the text 'the bridegroom must be of the same class and learned,' it is shown that the wife of the same class is the principal.

Now, the author mentions an optional rule with regard to Kamya marriages (In Kamya marriages, a man may marry a girl of the same caste, as in the Nitya marriage, or of lower caste). This is on the strength of the maxim, that an option may be allowed in the cases of the Kamya in relation to a Nitya form of any ceremony."

YAJNAVALKYA.

LVI.—Though it has been said that a twice born may take a wife from a Sudra family, yet that is not my opinion, because out of her, he is born himself—55.

Though it has been said:—"but for those who through desire proceed (to marry again) the following females (chosen) according to the (direct) order (of the castes), are most approved" (Manu III. 12) After having premised this (another sage, Vishnu, XXIV, 1 to 5) says:—"(1) Now a Brahmin may take four wives in the direct order of the (four) castes, (2) a Kshtriya three, (3) a Vaishya two, and thereby (though these authors, Manu and Vishnu, would allow) to the twice born men, marriages with Sudra women, yet, "it is not my," Yajnavalkya's "opinion." "Because he," the twice born, "is born himself therein." As says a Shruti (Aitareya Brahmana VII, 13, 10 or 7):—"His wife is only then a real wife (jaya from jan to be born) when he is born (jayate) in her again." Hereby assigning the reason "that out of her he is born himself," the author prohibits a marriage with a Sudra woman for one who is desirous of begetting a Naityaka (necessary) son. But in the case of not being able to produce a Naityaka son, in producing an optional son for a Brahmana, a Kshatriya, a Vaishya woman, and for a Kshatriya, a Vaishya woman, are allowed.

* * * *

Now the author describes the order in which such inter marriage may take place for him who is still desirous of sexual gratifications, though he has got a son, or has lost his wife and is not entitled to enter another order (asrama), but is anxious to remain in the order of the house-holder.

YAJNAVALKYA.

LVII.—Three, according to the order of the caste, so also two, and one for a Brahmana, a Kshatriya and Vaishya respectively (may be the wives). To a person born as a Sudra, a girl of her own caste is his wife.—57.

According to the order of the classes, for the Brahmana three, for the Kshatriya two wives, and for the Vaishya one wife are ordained. A Sudra can have only one wife born in the same class.

It is an established rule that a wife of the same class has precedence over all other wives. In the absence of her that precedes, she that follows takes precedence (as the principal wife) in the due order (of classes). This is also the order in the injunction of begetting a son either as a substitute for a necessary (Nitya) son, or an optional (Kamya) son.

As to the son of a Sudra woman being counted among sons and being described in the Chapter on Partition, s. q., where the author after enumerating the son begotten by a Brahmana upon his Kshatriya wife, is Murddhavasikta, etc., ends with "this rule refers to wives regularly married," (Verses 90 and 91) that refers to the son of a person desirous of sexual enjoyment or who is simply desirous of remaining in the Asrama (order of house-holder) and does not refer to twice-born in legitimate wedlock.

* * * *

The author now describes the special ceremonies to be observed in marrying girls of the same or of different classes.

YAJNAVALKYA.

LXII.—In marrying a girl of the same class the hand should be taken, the Kshatriya girl should take hold of an arrow, the Vaishya should hold a goad, in the marriage with one of higher class—62.

In marrying a girl of one's own class, the hand should be taken, according to the rules of one's own Grihya Sutra. A Kshatriya girl should hold an arrow, a Vaishya girl should hold a goad in her marriage with persons of higher classes. A Sudra girl should take hold of the end of the skirt. As it has been said by Manu (III. 44):—

"A Sudra girl marrying one of higher class should take hold of the hem of the (bridegroom's garment)."

Taking the Verses of Yajnavalkya without the commentary, it is clear that in the opinion of Yajnavalkya a twice-born person should not take a wife from a Sudra family but if at all a person is inclined to depart from that rule, he can do so on the lines indicated in Verse No. 57. Far from there being a prohibition, there is a provision for what Yajnavalkya is not in favour of. Here Yajnavalkya has adopted a style of expression which, to my mind, is clearly indicative of disapproval on his part of such marriages; but of readiness to recognise departures from approved lines within the limits indicated in the next Verse, Vijnaneshvara makes this clear in his commentary. The word nishedha (meaning prohibition) used by him in the commentary in Verse No. 56 must be read subject to the limitation which he points out in that very sentence and also subject to what he clearly lays down in his commentary on Verse No. 57. This meaning is clear from the phraseology adopted by Yajnavalkya and Vijnaneshvara in Verse No. 92 in the next Chapter in the same Adhyaya. While speaking of anulomajas both Yajnavalkya and Vijnaneshvara use the word vinna (married woman) which indicates the recognition by them of valid marriages among those classes in their order. No such word is used in Verses Nos. 93 and 94 relating to pratilomajas Yajnavalkya expressly states in Verse No. 95 that all pratilomajas are bad (asanta) and anulomajas are good (santa).

Further, while speaking of the shares of sons belonging to different classes in Chapter I, section 8 (in the Chapter on Dayavibhaga in the Mitakshara), there is provision made for sons born of anuloma marriages, but there is no provision for pratilomajas (see Stokes' Hindu Law Books, page 402, Mitakshara, Chapter I, section 1, paragraphs 4 to 6). That indicates the validity of and not prohibition against anuloma marriages. I refer to these provisions only for the purpose of the present point and not as necessarily governing the rights of such sons at present.

Lastly, in the Prayaschitta Adhyaya Vijnaneshvara has made the meaning clear once more in his commentary on Verse No. 22 of that Adhyaya. I do not consider it necessary to quote the translation here but the relevant passages may be found in the second paragraph of clause 109 and clause 111 at p. 49 of the translation of the Prayaschitta Adhyaya published by the Panini Office, Bhuvaneshvari Asrama (Allahabad) in 1913.

Thus, Yajnavalkya and Vijnaneshvara, whose opinions are binding upon us, do not lay down any prohibition as distinguished from disapproval of anuloma marriages.

The next authority that we have to consider is Nilakantha's opinion as expresd in his Mayukhas. In his Vyavahara Mayukha he refers to the division of property among sons of wives of different classes and has incidentally referred to anuloma and pratiloma marriages (see Mandlik's Hindu Law, pp. 46 and 47). No doubt there the author does not deal with the question of marriage. He deals with it in his Samskara Mayukha in the chapter relating to marriages under the heading of vivahi krama (order of marriages). The passage may be found at p. 98 of the edition published by the Gujarati Press. The Verse No. 57 from Yajnavalkya is quoted and explained as referring to marriages other than a marriage with the woman of the same class; and the passage taken as a whole clearly shows that Nilakantha practically accepts the view as propounded in the Mitakshara that anuloma marriages are permissible. The passage concludes with a reference to Yajnavalkyas' Verse No. 62 and a part of Manu's Verse (III, 44) which is also quoted by Vijnaneshvara in his commentary on Verse No. 62. The translation of this part of the Mitakshara is already quoted above.

Nilakanthas's view appears to be further clear from his treatment of the subject of anulomajas and pratilomajas in the Samas-kara Mayukha at pp. 120, 121 of the same edition.

It would thus appear that Manu and Yajnavalkya, Vijneshvara and Nilakantha are agreed that the anuloma marriages are not prohibited. This reading of the Mitakshara and the Saunskara Mayukha conflicts with certain observations of Chandavarkar, J., in Bai Kashi's case (5), in which he refers to Vijnaneshara as prohibiting such marriages. It must be remembered that the learned Judge had to deal with a pratiloma marriage and his observations were mainly directed to such marriages. He has fully realised the difference between the two kinds of marriages and has refrained from expressing any definite opinion as to anuloma marriages, as would appear from his observations at p. 553* of the report in Bai Kashi's case (5).

Thus, the argument for the appellant derives no support from the two principal Smritis nor from the Mitakshara and the Saunskara Mayukha. How is, then, the prohibition to be inferred contrary to these opinions? The only ground suggested is that such marriages are obsolete and must be taken to be prohibited by usage. I am unable to accept the view that, because such marriages are obsolete, they are illegal or prohibited by law. The prohibition must be found in the law-books or in the usage having the force of law. Such usage must be proved like any other fact. It may be that the fact of their being obsolete may render the proof of such usage easy. But in the present case not only is there no proof of such usage, but the evidence, such as it is, goes to show that such marriages are not treated as illegal or void by the castes concerned. It seems to me that far too much weight is sought to be placed upon the circumstance that the anuloma marriages are more or less obsolete. The opinions of Manu and Yajnavalkya and Vijnaneshvara and Nilakantha, if I may say so, are fairly reflected in the general attitude of the castes in these matters. They approve of marriages within their respective circles, and, generally speaking, disapprove of marriages outside their circles. They do not, however, necessarily refuse to recognise the marriages outside their circles but extend the same toleration socially to those who depart from the usual rule as the Smriti writers and the commentators have extended legally to anuloma marriages. The readiness on their part to recognise socially what is legally not prohibited depends necessarily upon the circumstances of each case as it arises, including the nature of the usual rule and the attitude of the parties concerned. But the attitude of the castes, which is stated in different modern books as prohibiting inter-caste marriages altogether, is generally indicative of nothing more than the disapproval of such marriages according to the rules of practice of each different caste. It does not afford a sufficient justification for treating as illegal what has not been prohibited but in terms contemplated and allowed by law.

I have discussed the question specially with reference to the principal authorities of Hindu Law accepted in this Presidency and to the decisions of this Court. I have considered the decisions of other High Courts; but as a matter of law I have not been able to find any basis therein for inferring any legal prohibition of such marriages, and, so far as they are based on usage, I do not think that they could be applied in their entirety to this Presidency. I have not, therefore, referred to them specifically. I may add that I do not see anything in these judgments which necessarily conflicts with my view. No other legal objection to the marriage is suggested. I am, therefore, of opinion that the marriage in question is valid.

I would affirm the decree appealed from and dismiss the appeal with costs. The costs to be payable by the next friend.

Musammat PARBATI—ACCUSED—APPELLANT

versus

EMPEROR—COMPLAINANT.

Reformatory Schools Act (VIII of 1897), s. 31 (1), applicability of, to girls—Girl of eleven—Murder.

Section 31 of the Reformatory Schools Act, 1897, applies to girls as well as boys.

A girl of eleven who caused the death of a child of three was sentenced to transportation for life:

Held, on appeal, that it was undesirable that a girl of such tender age should be sent to prison, and that, under the provisions of section 31 of Act VIII of 1897, she should be delivered to her father on his executing a bond to be responsible for her good behaviour for twelve months.

Appeal against an order of the Additional Sessions Judge, Sitapur, dated 4th July 1921.

Mr. J. P. C. Bhattacharji, for the Appellant.

The Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—Musammat Parbati, a girl of ten or eleven years, has been convicted of murder under section 302, Indian Penal Code, and sentenced to transportation for life. The circumstances are unparalleled in my experience. Musammat Parbati and another little girl named Pachui, whose age is given as six or seven years, took Musammat Bishan Dei, a girl of three, with them to the jungle near the village promising to give her some karaunda berries. Having got her there and fed her with karaunda berries they proceeded to strip off her ornaments and finally pushed her into a well in which, as the medical evidence shows, she was drowned. Musammat Bishan Dei was missed in the evening and accused and Musammat Pachui were questioned, as it was known that they and the deceased had been playing together. Musammat Parbati denied all knowledge. The younger girl on being pressed admitted what she and Musammat Parbati had done. The two girls took Musammat Bishan Dei's mother and others to the well, which was pointed out either by Pachui or by both girls—the witnesses differ on the point. The dead body of Musammat Bishan Dei was found in the well and recovered. She was found to have been stripped of the ornaments which she was wearing when she left her house. The accused and Musammat Pachui both admitted having taken off the ornaments and buried them and took the witnesses to a spot from where the ornaments were dug up. All this took place before the Police were informed, and is proved by the deceased's mother and other witnesses of the village. The chaukidar was then called and made a report in which the essential facts are stated. However extraordinary such conduct may be in a child of such a tender age, there is no room for doubt that Musammat Parbati and Musammat Pachui did strip Musammat Bishan Dei of her ornaments and push her into the well. Musammat Parbati herself does not deny that deceased was dropped into the well intentionally. She seeks to lay the whole blame on Musammat Pachui, who was too young to be charged with a criminal offence. Apart from the fact that Musammat Parbati and Musammat Pachui had gone to the jungle together, no one can possibly believe that a child of six or seven could have carried out this transaction without the aid of the elder girl. The learned Sessions Judge, I have no doubt, would have been very glad if he could have seen his way to acquit the accused but he felt that the facts were too strong.

The learned Sessions Judge considered that he had no option but to pass a sentence of transportation for life and proposed to move the Local Government for a reduction of the sentence. It appears to me that section 31 of the Reformatory Schools Act, 1897 provides a way out. This section applies "notwithstanding anything contained in this Act or in any other enactment for the time being in force" and unlike section 8 of the same Act, it applies to girls as well as boys. Whatever she may have done, it is obviously undesirable that a girl of this tender age should be sent to prison. Under the provisions of this section I accordingly direct that the accused shall be delivered to her father on his executing a bond in one hundred rupees to the satisfaction of the District Magistrate to be responsible for the accused's good behaviour during twelve months.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 342—Charge, alteration and addition of—Fresh examination of accused, omission, whether vitiates trial.

The accused were examined at the proper stage as required by section 342, Criminal Procedure Code, and were then called upon to enter into their defence. On the date fixed for entering into defence the prosecution amended the charge and also added a fresh charge whereupon the accused re-called and cross-examined afresh the prosecution witnesses. There was no further examination of the accused It was contended in the High Court that there should have been a fresh examination of the accused after the prosecution witnesses were cross-examined after the addition and alteration of the new charges:

Held, that on the addition and alteration of a charge the trial did not commence de novo and that if the Court was of opinion that there would be no prejudice to the accused it was not necessary to examine the accused afresh under section 342, Criminal Procedure Code. [p. 611, col. 2.]

Criminal revision against an order of the Sessions Judge, Champaran, dated the 31st August 1921.

Mr. Nandkeolyar, for the Petitioners.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

JWALA PRASAD, J.—The petitioners have been convicted of rioting and with the loot of gram and wheat which the servant of one Santlal was carrying on three carts having received the same as his Maliki share from the Bataidars. Shamlal Kulwar, petitioner No. 1, has further been convicted under section 325, Indian Penal Code for having caused grievous hurt to Chethru by breaking his right ulna; Shamlal has received 18 months' rigorous imprisonment under section 147, 379, and another three months under section 325, the sentences to run consecutively. Thus, Shamlal has received 21 months' rigorous imprisonment in all. Bireh Koeri has received nine months under section 147 and six months under section 379 read with section 75, the sentences to run concurrently and the rest of the petitioners have received three months' rigorous imprisonment under each of the sections 147 and 379, the sentences to run concurrently.

The occurrence is said to be the outcome of a long standing dispute between the petitioner No. 1, Shamlal, and Santlal. Santlal claimed the land by virtue of sale deed, executed in his favour by one Amirband, father-in-law of Shamlal, who previously had got a sale-deed in his name from Shamlal. Shamlal disputed the title of Santlal in the land by virtue of the sale-deed, for he claimed that Amirband was a mere Farzidar. The dispute as to the possession of the land was set at rest by an order under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, in favour of Santlal. Shamlal was, however, convicted in a case under section 304, Indian Penal Code, and was sentenced to two years' rigorous imprisonment. He has just come out of jail and has started the dispute with Santlal again about this land.

The case of the prosecution is that on the day of occurrence Santlal's servant Chethru went to get the Maliki share of the crop from the Bataidars with carts. The carts were loaded and started off; one was some distance, the other two were together. Accused came and beat Chethru and drove away the carts. Shamlal, on the other hand, states that he was in possession of the land through his Bataidar Bireh Koeri, petitioner No. 2, and that on the day of occurrence the complainant's men tried to loot bundles from Birsha's Kalihan and a fight occurred. Undoubtedly a fight between the parties did take place as two men on the side of the complainant, and Hira and Bireh on the side of accused were hurt.

The chief question for determination is as to how and where the occurrence took place. Both the Courts below have concurrently held that the occurrence took place as alleged by the prosecution while the carts were being taken by Chethru. This is corroborated by the fact that two of the loaded carts were found in the Kalihan of Bireh Koeri which is on the north west part of the village. The Kalihan of the Bataidar of Sant Lal is on the south and the place of occurrence is further south. We have, therefore, no hesitation in accepting the finding of the Court below as to the occurrence itself.

Learned Counsel also moved before us for the reduction of the sentences passed upon the accused. Shamlal, petitioner No. 1, has acted in a high-handed manner and the history of the litigation shows that he disregarded the order of the Magistrate under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, in raking up the dispute as to the possession of the land without having gone to the Civil Court. He, therefore, deserves a severe punishment and the sentence passed upon him does not, in the circumstances of the case, appear to be severe. Birsh Koeri no doubt has had a previous conviction under section 379 and, therefore, he has received an imprisonment of six months under that section. He has further received a sentence of nine months under section 147. We reduce his sentence under the latter section to six months' rigorous imprisonment and make both the sentences run concurrently. Thus, he gets six months in all. He certainly deserves a somewhat severe sentence inasmuch as he appears to have fully supported the case of Shamlal, and the two cart loads of gram and wheat were found in his Kalihan. He is also said to be the Bataidar of Shamlal. The rest of the accused appear to be mere servants and underlings of Shamlal and do not seem to have had particular interest in the dispute. They have received three months' rigorous imprisonment under each of the sections 379 and 147, the sentences running concurrently. We reduce their sentences to the term already undergone by them.

It may be mentioned that the learned Counsel on behalf of the petitioners raised a law point founded on section 342 of the Criminal Procedure Code, urging that the entire trial was vitiated and that there shouldbe a re-trial. We have carefully examined this contention with the facts and circumstances and we are of opinion that there is no substance in it. The examination and cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses finished on the 24th May 1921 and the charge was then framed. The accused were asked if they would cross-examine any of the prosecution witnesses after the charge but they declined and consequently they were called upon to enter on their defence, fixing the 11th June. On the 11th June, at the instance of the Public Prosecutor, a charge under section 325 was added against one of the accused Shamlal Kulwar and the charge under section 147 was verbally altered. The prosecution witnesses were then re-called and were cross examined on the 17th June. On the 25th of June the previous convictions against two of the accused Shamlal and Birsh Keori were framed and five defence witnesses were examined on behalf of the defence and discharged. It is not disputed that the prosecution evidence then closed and the accused were called upon to enter on their defence on the 24th May 1921 upon the charges that were originally framed. It is, however, contended that after the alteration of the charge under section 147 and the addition of the charge under section 325 on the 11th June the procedure under sections 255 to 257 of the Code of Criminal Procedure re-opened and the prosecution case, therefore, was closed on the 25th June 1921 when the accused should have been examined, and the omission to do so contravened the mandatory provisions of section 342 of the Code. In my opinion sections 255 to 257 have no application to a case when a charge is altered or added. Section 342 has consequently no application when the accused were already called on to enter on their defence prior to the alteration or the addition of the charge. The procedure for the trial in regard to the alteration or addition of a charge is laid down in sections 227 to 231 of the Code. Section 228 empowers the Court to proceed with the trial as if the new or altered charge had been the original charge. Section 229 empowers the Court either to direct a new trial or to adjourn a trial for such period as may be necessary if the Court be of opinion that the proceeding immediately with the trial is likely to prejudice the accused or the prosecution. Section 231 entitles the prosecutor and the accused to re-call or summon or re summon and examine, with reference to the altered or added charge, any witness who may have been examined and also to call any further witness whom the Court may think to be material. The addition or the alteration of a charge does not open up the trial from the beginning and the Court may immediately proceed with the trial if it is of opinion that there will be no prejudice to the accused,

In order to safeguard the interests of the parties section 231 gives them the right to re-call or re-summon any witness. The re-calling of the prosecution witness for further cross-examination in the present case by the accused was evidently under that section. Under section 227 the added or altered charge has to be read and explained to the accused. These safeguards appear to have been deemed sufficient to protect the interests of the prosecution or the accused in the case. The trial, as already observed, does not commence de novo, so that if the accused had been already called upon to enter on their defence there is no further obligation upon the Magistrate to examine the accused under section 342 of the Code. Therefore, the authorities on the subject, of which we are so well cognisant, do not at all apply to the present case. The contention is, therefore, overruled.

ADAMI, J.—I agree.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 419, 420—Appeal from jail decided—Appeal through Counsel not maintainable.

Where an appeal received from an appellant while in jail is dismissed, a subsequent appeal on his behalf filed through Counsel cannot be entertained because there is no warrant in the Code of Criminal Procedure for differentiating between a judgment passed on an appeal filed under section 420 of the Criminal Procedure Code by an appellant in jail and a judgment on a similar appeal filed through Counsel under section 419.

Hulai v. Emperor, 36 Ind. Cas. 133; 3 O. L. J. 326; 17 Cr. L. J. 453, not followed.

Appeal against an order of the Additional Sessions Judge, Lucknow, at Unao, dated 6th July 1921.

Mr. K. N. Chak, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—The appeal of this appellant having been already dismissed by this Court no further appeal lies. The view taken in Hulai v. Emperor (1) has to my knowledge not been shared by other Judges of this Court. There is no warrant in the Code of Criminal Procedure for differentiating between a judgment passed on an appeal filed under section 420 by an appellant who is in jail and a judgment passed on a similar appeal filed through Counsel under section 419. They both stand on the same level, and the one is just as much a binding and final judgment as the other. I, therefore, hold that the present appeal does not lie, the appeal having already been decided, and I accordingly reject it.

CRIMINAL REVISION CASE No. 591 OF 1921.

(CASE REFERRED No. 65 OF 1921.)

December 2, 1921.

Present:—Mr. Justice Oldfield and Mr. Justice Krishnan.

In re PONNUSAMI THEVAN AND ANOTHER—ACCUSED.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 161, 171-E—Bribery of Panchayat—Complaint against member—Sanction of Government—Madras Village Courts Act (II of 1920).

A member of a village Panchayat, constituted under the Madras Village Courts Act, is a Judge, and the sanction of the Government is an essential precedent to the prosecution of such member of an offence under section 161 or section 171-E of the Penal Code. [p. 613, col. 1.]

Case referred for the orders of the High Court under section 438 of the Criminal Procedure Code, by the Sessions Judge, Madura Division, in his letter, dated the 24th August 1921.

Mr. S. Subramania Iyer, for the Accused.

Mr. O. Adam, Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

ORDER.—The complainant came before the Sub-Divisional First Class Magistrate, Usilampati with a complaint alleging that the second accused, one member of the Village Panchayat Court, lately established in his village under Madras Act II of 1920, approached the first accused to persuade him to give his vote for the Presidentship of the Court in his favour and that he eventually paid Rs. 250 to the first accused, which the latter accepted. On these allegations the complainant charged the first accused with committing an offence punishable under section 161, Indian Penal Code, and the second accused with abetment thereof. The Magistrate returned this complaint, not with reference to the Indian Penal Code but to Act XXXIX of 1920, observing that the offence more properly fell under section 171-E, Indian Penal Code, as amended by that Act, than under the general section relating to bribery, (section 161, Indian Penal Code) and that when the allegations in a complaint fall under a particular section of law, it is not proper to take them under a general section under the same or any other law. He then said that the prosecution for an offence under section 171-E required the sanction of the Local Government, and returned the complaint for want of such sanction.

We are not concerned at present to decide whether the Magistrate's action in returning the complaint and not dismissing it was in accordance with law The case has been submitted to us by the learned Sessions Judge on the ground that section 171-E will not apply to this case. The point has been argued at considerable length by the learned Public Prosecutor, but we need not, we think, decide it at present. For, in fact, whether the accused is charged under section 171-E or 161, Indian Penal Code, the sanction of the Local Government or other authority for his prosecution is essential, in the former case with reference to the amendment of section 196, Criminal Procedure Code, effected by section 3 of Act XXXIX of 1920, and in the latter with reference to section 197 of the Criminal Procedure Code. See also Act II of 1920 and sections 19 and 21, Indian Penal Code, as justifying the description of a member of a village Panchayat as a Judge.

It is then material that, in our opinion, the Sub-Divisional Magistrate had no right to disregard the fact that the complaint was made by the complainant under section 161, Indian Penal Code. That section has not, so far as we have been shown, been repealed by anything in Act XXXIX of 1920 and is still in force. If the complainant can establish the accused's responsibility under it, there is nothing in law to prevent his doing so; and we do not know how the Magistrate can claim any discretion to insist, in such circumstances, on a complainant proceeding under one of two sections either of which may apply to the facts he alleges, rather than under the other. In these circumstances, there is no ground for our interference in what has happened. Whether the complaint proceeds under section 161 or section 171-E, Indian Penal Code, he will require a sanction. It is for him to obtain such sanction as he may be advised and to institute proceedings again with it.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 164, 533—Confession—Failure of Magistrate to ask whether confession made voluntarily—Illegality.

Section 164 of the Criminal Procedure Code makes it imperative for the Magistrate, before recording a confession made to him in the course of a Police investigation, to question the person making it as to whether it is made voluntarily. Telling an accused person that he should make his statement voluntarily and questioning him as to whether he is making it voluntarily are two very different things. [p. 614, col. 2.]

The omission to question an accused person before recording his confession as to whether he is making it voluntarily is a material omission which prejudices him and the defect is a fatal one not curable by section 533 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Such a confession is not, therefore, admissible in evidence. [p. 614, col. 2.]

Appeal from an order of the Sessions Judge, Hoshiarpur, dated the 30th June 1921.

Pir Tajud-Din and Mr. Abdul Aziz, for the Appellant.

Diwan Khialinda Ram, R. S., Public Prosecutor, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant Farid, who lives at Sham Churasi in the Hoshiarpur District, has been sentenced to death for the murder of a boy named Gurbachan Singh. One Fazal was tried jointly with Farid for the murder, but has been acquitted. Gurbachan Singh, whose home was at Bhagowal, went on the 27th March last to his sister's house at Laroi. He was a student of the Government School at Hoshiarpur, and on the 31st March he left Laroi for Sham Churasi in order to take the train for Hoshiarpur, as he wanted to be present at the school on the 1st April, when the result of the first Middle School examination in which he had lately appeared was expected to be announced. On the 2nd April his dead body was found near the field of one Chiragh Din at Sham Churasi. There was a wound on his neck, and his hands were tied with his turban, which had been wound round his neck and body. The body was naked from the waist downwards, and the pyjamas, a book, a bundle, and some other articles were lying close by. There was also blood on the ground. The prosecution theory is that Fazal and Farid committed an unnatural offence on the boy and then murdered him.

No clue was obtained by the Police till the 11th April, when they received a letter from one Miran Bakhsh in which it was mentioned that two men named Buland Khan and Ata Muhammad had met the boy in Sham Churasi, and that Ata Muhammad had left him with Farid. Farid's house was searched and a blood stained khes was found in it, while the shirt that Farid was wearing was also found to have a number of small stains of blood on it. He was arrested on the 13th April, and on the 14th a gandasa (not blood stained) was found in a well which he pointed out in Chiragh Din's field near which the body had been found. On the 15th his confession was recorded by Sheikh Abdul Aziz, Magistrate of the First Class, and it is mainly on this confession that the conviction rests. The important question is, whether the confession, which was retracted in the Committing Magistrate's Court, is admissible in evidence, the contention of Counsel for the appellant being that the Magistrate who recorded it made no inquiry as to whether it was made voluntarily, and that it is for that reason inadmissible. In the memorandum written by Sheikh Abdul Aziz, before recording the confession, he noted that the accused was made to understand that he should make his statement voluntarily without any inducement or influence, and that he was given time to satisfy himself and make his statement voluntarily. In his evidence also he says that it was explained to Farid that whatever statement he was going to make he should make voluntarily and without influence of any sort, and that he was told that the confession could be used against him. He says that the appellant made the statement of his own accord, but he does not say, nor is it mentioned in the memorandum, that he asked the appellant whether he was making it voluntarily. Telling an accused person that he should make his statement voluntarily and questioning him as to whether he is making it voluntarily are two very different things. Section 164 of the Criminal Procedure Code makes it imperative for the Magistrate, before recording a confession made to him in the course of a Police investigation, to question the person making it as to whether it is made voluntarily. In the present case it appears that this was not done, and the question to be determined is, whether the failure to comply with the provisions of section 164 in this respect renders the confession inadmissible.

If it were not for the provisions of that section of the Criminal Procedure Code the confession would be admissible under section 21 of the Evidence Act, in the absence of proof that it was caused by any inducement, threat or promise such as would render it irrelevant under section 24, and it may appear anomalous that the confession should be inadmissible on account of the Magistrate's omission to question the person making it as to its voluntary nature, notwithstanding that it would have been admissible if made orally, Feroz v. Emperor (1), the Magistrate not being required by law to make such an inquiry in the case of an oral confession. The authorities, however, are in favour of the view that such an omission is a fatal one.

It was held in Thein Maung v. Emperor (2) that unless the Magistrate has made a real and substantial inquiry as to the voluntary nature of a confession, the confession recorded by him under section 164 of the Criminal Procedure Code is inadmissible in evidence and the same view was taken in Nga Shwe Sin v. Emperor (3).

In Queen-Empress v. Viran (4) it was held that section 533 of the Criminal Procedure Code would not render a confession recorded under section 164 admissible where no attempt has been made to conform to the provisions of the latter section.

In Jai Narayan Rai v. Queen-Empress (5) the learned Judges said on page 871 that a confession recorded in direct violation of sections 164 and 364 would not be a confession recorded under them, and that the recorded statement to be proved, must mean a statement recorded in accordance with the provisions of the Act and not in violation of them.

In Queen-Empress v. Bhairab Chunder (6) it was held that the rule laid down in section 21 of the Evidence Act must be taken subject to the special provisions relating to confessions and statements of accused persons enacted in sections 164 and 364 of the Criminal Procedure Code, since, were it otherwise, confessions and statements of accused persons not recorded in accordance with the requirements of those sections of the Code might be proved as admissions by the accused, and the wholesome provisions elaborately laid down in those two sections practically reduced to a nullity. With regard to section 533 it was held that the defect which that section is intended to cure is one not of substance but of form only.

In Buta v. Empress (7) it was held that section 533 was presumbly not intended to override the law of evidence, and that when it was enacted that "such statement" (that is the statement recorded under section 164 or 364) "shall be admitted," the meaning is, that the document shall not be excluded merely by reason of the error of the recording Magistrate, but shall be admitted, as a matter of criminal procedure, subject to any just exceptions under the Evidence Act, other than an objection under section 91 of that Act. But in that case the error committed by the Magistrate who recorded the confession was one which had not prejudiced the accused, and as the confession was also not shown to have been improperly induced it was held to be admissible.

Section 533, after providing that when any of the provisions of section 164 or section 364 have not been complied with, the Court shall take evidence that the statement recorded was duly made, lays down that such statement shall be admitted if the error has not injured the accused as to his defence on the merits. The necessary implication appears to be that if the error is one that has injured the accused as to his defence on the merits the statement is not admissible. The omission to question the appellant before recording his confession as to whether he was making it voluntarily was a material omission which prejudiced him, and we are of opinion that the defect is a fatal one, not curable by section 533, and that the confession must, therefore, be excluded.

The rest of the evidence is insufficient to support the conviction. Ata Muhammad's statement that he left the boy with Farid is no proof of the latter's guilt in the absence of evidence to show what happened to the boy afterwards. The presence of blood stains on the appellant's shirt and khes, and his pointing out a well in which a

The appellant is said to have pointed out other places also, but his doing so does not advance the case for the prosecution as it did not lead to the discovery of any material facts not already known.

We must accordingly hold that Farid's guilt has not been proved, and accepting his appeal we set aside the conviction and sentence and acquit him.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 145, 148—Magistrate, jurisdiction of, to depute Commissioner to survey and report—Report wrongly relied—Jurisdiction—"Local inquiry," meaning of—Estoppel.

A Magistrate who has drawn up proceedings under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, is not empowered to delegate any of his judicial functions to any person other than a Magistrate or to direct any person to report as to who is in possession of the lands in dispute, but he has jurisdiction to direct a Pleader Commissioner to survey the disputed lands and report. If a report is wrongly relied on by a Magistrate taking proceedings under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, that would not amount to an error or want of jurisdiction which would warrant an interference of a High Court. [p. 618, col. 1.]

A mere survey of the lands in dispute in a proceeding under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, after inquiry from all the parties as to what land is in dispute does not amount to a "local inquiry" within the meaning of section 148 of the Act but is a mere ministerial act. [p. 617, col. 2.]

A party who throughout asserts that the lands mentioned in the proceedings under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, could be identified cannot be allowed on the judgment being against him to assert the contrary in High Court. [p. 618, col. 1.]

Application against an order of the Deputy Magistrate, Bhagalpur.

Mr. S. N. Sahay, for the Petitioner.

Messrs. C. C. Dass for Mr. G. C. Pal and Satya Sunder Bose, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.

ADAMI, J.—The petitioners were the third party to proceedings drawn up by the Deputy Magistrate, Bhagalpore, under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code; they apply to have the order passed in favour of the first party to those proceedings set aside.

It appears that after the proceedings under section 145 showing the boundaries of the lands in dispute had been served on all the parties, the first party on their written statement declared that the disputed 378 bighas of land with the boundaries as shown in the proceedings could not be identified, nor was there any trace of such lands to be found in village Dildarpur. On the 18th February 192 the Deputy Magistrate passed the following order :—

"First party states that the lands are not at all identifiable, the other parties assert that they are indentifiable. The first party offers to pay the costs of a Survey passed Pleader Commissioner for identifying the lands as per proceedings drawn up and report to this Court. I think this is reasonable and I direct the first party to deposit Rs. 100 and then I shall appoint a Commissioner."

A Commissioner was appointed, who went to the lands in dispute and submitted a map and report on the 10th of April. Copies of the report were furnished to the parties and the Pleader Commissioner was examined and cross-examined as a witness, and after his cross examination on the 14th of May the Vakil for the first party contended that as the report showed that the land, bounded as shown in the proceedings, was not identifiable, the proceedings should be cancelled. The other parties apparently resisted the contention. The Deputy Magistrate passed the following order :—

"Heard the parties on the contention of the learned Vakil of the first party that the Pleader Commissioner having reported that the lands are not fully identifiable according to the boundaries given in the proceedings, the same, i.e., the proceedings, should be cancelled. I hold that the Pleader Commissioner's report and evidence are only evidence and not a final judgment and that it is liable to be challenged by the parties who are entitled to produce further evidence in Court. I, therefore, decide to go into the evidence in the case."

On subsequent dates the witnesses produced by the three parties respectively were examined, and the Deputy Magistrate then delivered judgment declaring the first party to be in possession of the disputed lands.

The chief contention raised by Mr. S. N. Sahay on behalf of the petitioners is that the Deputy Magistrate, dealing with a case under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, has no jurisdiction to direct a Pleader Commissioner to hold a local enquiry and cannot receive in evidence a report drawn up by the Commsisioner after completing the inquiry. He argues that Chapter XII of the Code of Criminal Procedure furnishes a complete code of procedure for the prevention of breach of the peace arising out of disputes as to immoveable property, and that the only provision in that Chapter allowing any delegation is that contained in section 148, which runs:—

"Whenever a local inquiry is necessary for the purposes of this chapter, any District Magistrate or Sub-Divisional Magistrate may depute any Magistrate subordinate to him to make the inquiry, and may furnish him with such written instructions" consistent with the law for the time being in force "as may seem necessary for his guidance, and may declare by whom the whole or any part of the necessary expenses of the inquiry shall be paid. The report of the person so deputed may be read as evidence in the case."

So that the Magistrate who has drawn up proceedings is precluded from deputing any one other than a Magistrate to hold any local inquiry whatever. He argues that if there is, in the opinion of a party, the necessity to have the lands demarcated or surveyed and inquiry made locally, that party should privately engage its own man to make the survey and inquiry and then put him into the witness-box and examine him like any other witness, and let him be cross-examind, for the Court is likely to give more weight to the evidence of an officer appointed by itself to do work locally than to that of a witness produced by one of the parties.

Now, if the question were whether a Magistrate who has drawn up proceedings under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, is empowered to delegate any of his judicial functions to any person other than a Magistrate, or if such person were directed to report who was in possession of certain lands, there could, I think, be no doubt that the answer would be in the negative. Here, however, the direction was merely, "to survey the disputed lands and report within 15 days."

All the person had to do was to ascertain from the parties what lands were in dispute and then to survey the lands pointed out and to draw up a map and report what he had done. This was a ministerial act; whether the duty of survey was entrusted to a Pleader Commissioner or to an amin makes no difference; stress cannot be laid on the fact that the person selected to do the work bore the title of Pleader Commissioner.

I cannot hold that the mere survey of the lands after enquiry from all the parties as to what land was in dispute amounted to a "local inquiry" within the meaning of section 148, Criminal Procedure Code. It was a mere ministerial act.

It is to be noted that section 148, Criminal Procedure Code, gives the special privilege to a report made by a Magistrate under its provisions, that such report may be taken into evidence without calling the Magistrate to prove it. In the present case no such privilege was claimed and the Pleader Commissioner was called as a witness and examined and cross-examined.

If Mr. Sahay's contentions were correct a Magistrate who had drawn up proceedings under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, would, in almost every case, be unable to get a map prepared of the disputed lands, for there are few, if any, Magistrates who are competent to carry out a survey and prepare a map. Directions to draw up a map of the disputed land in proceedings under section 145 have been frequent in the past and there is no decision to be found showing that the power to issue such directions has been disputed, except the case of Achambit Das v. Sarada Prosad (1) where it was held that the Court has power to depute a kanungo to demarcate disputed lands in proceedings under section 145.

In the present case the Pleader Commissioner was examined and cross-examined by the present petitioners without objection by them as to his delegation, and I hold that the Court was fully empowered to refer to his evidence and to the map he prepared. His report should not have been admitted in evidence except for the purpose of proving that he surveyed lands, pointed out to him by the parties, as being in dispute and showing which, those lands were, but a perusal of the judgment shows that the Court did not rely on this report, the case was decided on the evidence as to possession given by the parties and the only reference made to the Commissioner or his report is the remark, after the finding that boundaries mentioned in kabuliyats relied on by the present petitioners were entered therein without a visit to the lands, "no wonder, therefore, that the Pleader Surveyor found that boundaries given in the kabuliyats of the tenants (third party) could not be identified on the spot."

Even if the report had been wrongly relied on, that would not amount to an error or want of jurisdiction which would warrant an interference of this Court.

I hold that there was no defect as to jurisdiction in the direction to the Pleader Commissioner to survey the disputed lands and report.

It is next contended that, as the first party asserted from the first that the lands could not be indentified, the Deputy Magistrate could not award them possession of lands which did not exist. This is not a question of jurisdiction, and apart from this, the petitioners throughout asserted that the lands mentioned in the proceedings could be identified, and they cannot now be allowed to assert the contrary; they "chose to wait and take the chance of judgment in their favour, and cannot now be heard to complain of excess of jurisdiction."

(1) 12 Ind. Cas. 88; 12 Cr. L. J. 480.

Marsden v. Wardle (2), Kulada Kinkar Roy v. Danesh Mir (3).

The third point argued by the learned Counsel for the petitioners, namely, that the petitioners were induced to execute kabuliyats in favour of the first party by their properly constituted agent, and that, therefore, the first party were estopped from giving evidence to show that they, and not the petitioners, were in possession, raises no question of jurisdiction, and, apart from this, the finding being that effect was not given to the kabuliyats, they do not stand in the way of evidence being given to show what the actual possession was at the time proceedings were taken.

I would dismiss the application.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 342, 537—Examination of accused—Summons-case—Irregularity—Illegality.

The procedure prescribed by section 342 of the Criminal Procedure Code is binding on the Courts, even in summons-cases, and the omission to comply with the provisions of that section is not a mere irregularity such as can be cured under section 537 of the Code, but is an illegality vitiating the trial. MUHAMMAD BAKHSH v. EMPEROR.

Case reported by the Sessions Judge, Ferozepore, with his No. 185 of 1920.

FACTS.—On 5th March 1921 Balli Ram filed a complaint under section 447, Indian Penal Code, against Muhammad Bakhsh, Fateh Din and Ghulam Muhammad. It was alleged that the land on which the alleged trespass was committed belongs to the Nawab of Jalalabad. It was originally leased out to Shams Din and Feroz Din, and sub-let by them to Balli Ram, Arora, complainant in the case. This Balli Ram had a crop of gram standing on the land in Rabi 1920, and was shown accordingly in cultivating possession in the Revenue papers. Prior to this, however, the Estate Authorities, on the 2nd November 1919, had given this land to Haji Muhammad Bakhsh, accused, on lease. It was agreed that Haji Muhammad Bakhsh should not then disturb Balli Ram's possession, but that the latter should pay him batai in respect of the land in suit, and it was understood that Balli Ram should give up possession to Haji Muhammad Bakhsh after the cutting of his gram crop. It was alleged that Haji Muhammad Bakhsh and his sons took forcible possession of this land in Bhadon 1920.

The complainant put in six witnesses. The accused put in seven witnesses. The lower Court convicted the accused Haji Muhammad Bakhsh, Ghulam Muhammad and Fateh Din under section 447, Indian Penal Code, and sentenced each of the accused to 15 days' rigorous imprisonment.

GROUNDS.—Haji Muhammad Bakhsh and his two sons, Fateh Din and Ghulam Muhammad, have been convicted of criminal trespass, and sentenced under section 447, Indian Penal Code, to 15 days' rigorous imprisonment each, by Faqir Sahib Said-ud-Din, exercising the powers of a First Class Magistrate in the Ferozepore District. The land on which the alleged trespass was committed belongs to the Nawab of Jalalabad. It was originally leased out to Shams Din and Feroz Din, and sub-let by them to Bali Ram, Arora, complainant inlthe case. This Balli Ram had a crop of gram standing on the land in Rabi 1920, and was shown accordingly in cultivating possession in the Revenue papers. Prior to this, however, the Estate Authorities, on the 2nd November 1919, had given this land to Haji Muhammad Bakhsh, accused on lease. It was agreed that Haji Muham-mad Bakhsh should not then disturb Balli Ram's possession but that the latter should pay him batai in respect of the land in suit, and it was understood that Balli Ram should give up possession to Haji Muhammad Bakhsh after the cutting of his gram crop. It is alleged that Haji Muhammad Bakhsh and his sons took forcible possession of this land in Bhadon 1920, and it is on this account that the accused have been convicted.

Revision is sought on three grounds; firstly, that the Magistrate has not complied with the provisions of section 342 of the Criminal Procedure Code; secondly, that the lower Court is wrong in holding, in reliance on Ram Saran v. Emperor (1), that Balli Ram was in possession, and, thirdly, that there was no intent to annoy the complainant.

The correctness of the first ground is not really contested. Section 342, Criminal Procedure Code, requires that the Court shall question the accused generally on a case after the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined and before he is called on for his defence. This the Magistrate did not do. This particular provision of section 342, Criminal Procedure Code, has been held to be mandatory in Ghulla v. Emperor (2), and Fernandez v. Emperor (3). The section applies to all enquiries and trials, and is not affected by section 245 (i) of the Code under which, in summons-cases, the Magistrate has been given the discretion to examine or not to examine an accused; that section, moreover, appears to refer only to cases in which an accused is being acquitted. On this ground alone, therefore, the conviction would appear to be bad. This being so, it is unnecessary for me to examine the other grounds urged, but I may observe that, even on the facts as alleged, it is doubtful whether the Magistrate was right in convicting. He appears to have relied blindly on Ram Saran v. Emperor (1), and not to have examined that ruling in the light of the facts of the present case. It is doubtful whether the complainant could be held to have retained physical possession of the land after the Rabi crop in 1920 had been harvested. As the judgment quoted shows, the question of the interpretation of section 441, Indian Penal Code, is one of considerable difficulty [cf. Vullappa v. Bheema Row (4)] and, in the circumstances, I think that the Magistrate should have hesitated before recording a conviction.

Finally, the sentences passed appear to me to be inappropriate. Even if the convictions were to be maintined, I think that sentences of fine would meet the case. Haji Muhammad Bakhsh is a man of wealth and position, and I am strongly of opinion that he and his sons should not have been sent to prison. In this connection, and as showing the mental attitude of the Magistrate towards the accused, it may be mentioned that, although the evidence and arguments in the case had been completed on the 10th August 1921, which was Wednesday, judgment was postponed until Saturday, 13th August 1921, (it is stated that the Court had originally proposed to announce orders on the 12th August 1921 but that that date did not suit the accused) and that, on the Saturday, judgment was not announced until close upon 4 o'clock. The Sunday, Monday and Tuesday were all holidays, and consequently there would ordinarily have been no chance for the accused to move this Court until the following Wednesday, during which period they would have had to remain in jail. There was, moreover, a case between the same parties, under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, and Wednesday, the 17th August 1921, was fixed for the announcement of orders. It is alleged that this day had been deliberately fixed in order that the accused might be subjected to the indignity of being publicly brought up in chains from the jail in order to hear the announcement of that order. In a connected case against the first two accused, under section 504, Indian Penal Code, judgment was announced at the same time, the accused were convicted and another sentence of 15 days' rigorous imprisonment in each case was passed. That case is also being forwarded to the High Court for revision.

ORDER.—In this case Haji Muhammad Bakhsh and his two sons, Fateh Din and Ghulam Muhammad, have been convicted under section 447, Indian Penal Code, and sentenced to 15 days' rigorous imprisonment. The case has been referred to this Court by the learned Sessions Judge whose order of reference may be read along with this judgment.

The facts are fully given in the order of a reference, and there is no need to repeat them. In the first place, it is to be noticed that the provisions of section 342 were not observed. The procedure prescribed by the section is binding on the Courts and the omission to comply with the provisions of this section is not, in my opinion, a mere irregularity such as can be cured under section 537, Criminal Procedure Code, but is an illegality vitiating the trial [see Ghulla v. Emperor (2) and Fernandez v. Emperor (3)]. The conviction must, therefore, be set aside.

Having regard to the facts stated in the order of reference it seems to me impossible to hold that the land was at the time in physical possession of Balli Ram and even if it was in Balli Ram's possession, I do not think it could for a moment be said that the entry of Haji Muhammad Bakhsh and his sons was a criminal offence, the land having been leased to them by the owners and Balli Ram's tenure having long expired. Balli Ram, no doubt, had grown gram on the land in the Rabi of 1920, but it does not appear to me that he had any right to hold possession in Bhadon long after the gram had been removed or that he was, as a matter of fact, in possession. It is, therefore, out of the question to order re-trial in this case as I consider that Haji Muhammad Bakhsh and his sons have not committed any offence. The conviction is quashed.

PHUMMAN RAM—RESPONDENT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 547, whether applicable to livestock.

Section 547, Criminal Procedure Code, only provides a summary method for realising "money payable" and these words cannot be stretched so as to include livestock or other goods. [p. 622, col. 1.]

Case referred by the Sessions Judge, Ferozepore, with his No. 169 of 1921.

FACTS.—On 7th February 1919 Phumman Ram reported to the Police that his house was broken into and certain property was stolen. The Police sent up Gurditta, Ratna and Gajjan Singh for trial before Rai Sahib Dewan Gyan Nath who convicted the three accused under section 457, Indian Penal Code, on 16th July 1919, and ordered that the property be delivered to Phumman Ram and Kanhaya Lal after the result of appeal. Ratna and Gurditta, accused, appealed and were acquitted on 20th August 1919, by the Sessions Judge who said nothing as to who was to get the articles seized by the Police during the investigation. The District Magistrate had the things handed over to the complainant. Gurditta and Ratna applied to the Sub-Divisional Officer for restoration of the property unsuccessfully and then the Court ordered on 15th March 1920 that the articles be made over to them on the ground that the alleged offence has been held to be not proved. The complainant then appealed to the High Court for revision of the order dated 15th March 1920, and the High Court held that the property be restored to the apparent owner. Ratna had produced Rs. 17 himself and Rs. 140 were recovered from his uncle with whom he had deposited the sum. This property was not proved to have been stolen. Ratna claimed it as his own; Ratna applied to the Magistrate and then Phumman Ram, complainant, was summoned. Phumman Ram, complainant, stated that he had disposed of the property and had nothing to pay. The Magistrate referred Ratna to a Civil Court. Ratna has now applied for revision of this order urging that the Magistrate had power to realize the cash Rs. 157 from Phumman as a fine.

GROUNDS.—The applicant Ratna was convicted along with other persons in a case under section 457, Indian Penal Code, on 16th July 1919, but was acquitted in appeal. Certain property was recovered from the various accused and this was apparently delivered to the complainant in spite of the acquittal of the accused. The applicant, Ratna, first applied for restoration of the property to this Court and it was accordingly ordered to be restored. The complainant, Phumman Ram, who had been in possession of the property applied to the High Court for revision of this order, and it was held in the revision order that the property should be restored to the "apparent owner" (vide Criminal Revision No. 651 of 1920, order dated 25th June 1920). It will appear from the judgments of Original and Appellate Courts in the 457 Indian Penal Code case that applicant, Ratna, had produced Rs. 17 himself and Rs. 140 were recovered from his uncle, with whom he had deposited the sum. He was also found in possession of some sheep and goats believed to have been purchased with the stolen money. According to the order in appeal passed by Mr. Parker (Sessions Judge) this property in possession of Ratna was not proved to have been stolen. Ratna had claimed it as his own. In accordance with the revision order of the High Court, Ratna is, therefore, entitled to this property.

Ratna applied to the Magistrate for the purpose. Phumman Ram was summoned but he made a statement that he had disposed of the property and had nothing to pay. The Magistrate held that he had no power to realize the property from Phumman Ram under the circumstances and referred Ratna to a Civil Court. Ratna has now applied for revision of this order.

The only point urged before me is that the Magistrate had power to realize the cash Rs. 157, (Rs. 140 and Rs. 17) at any rate, from Phumman Ram as a fine under section 547, Criminal Procedure Code. Crown v. Hira Nand (1) is cited as an authority.

The contention appears to be correct. I am of opinion that the Magistrate should have realized the sum of Rs. 157 as a fine from Phumman Ram and paid it to the applicant. I accordingly submit the records for the orders of the High Court.

Mr. Ghulam Rasul, for the Petitioner.

ORDER.—The facts are clearly explained in the order of reference of the learned Sessions Judge. On the conclusion of a criminal case of burglary by the acceptance of the appeal by the Sessions Judge, it was discovered that the articles and money which were to have been returned to the complainants on and only on the appeal being dismissed had been returned in anticipation of dismissal. After a fruitless application to the Sub Divisional Magistrate the Sessions Judge on revision ordered these goods and the money to be returned to the accused. From this order a revision was presented to the High Court and accepted by Chevis, J., so far as certain definite articles were concerned. The remainder were to be returned to the accused, that is to say, the original order of the Sessions Judge regarding them was allowed to stand. The accused, Ratna, applied to the Magistrate who referred him to the Civil Court and the Sessions Judge makes this reference so far as the cash in the hands of the complainant is concerned. Counsel urges that the complainant should also be ordered to return the 28 goats which are not covered by and included in the order of Chevis, J., or rather 27 goats and Rs. 10 realised by sale of the twenty-eighth, and that the value of the animals should be recovered from him as a fine. Although the order, as originally passed by the Sessions Judge, may have referred to the goats, section 547, Criminal Procedure Code, only provides a summary method for realising "money payable" and these words cannot be stretched so as to include livestock or other goods. The meaning of the word "money" is quite clear; section 547 applies to money only and, moreover, the value of such goods is not known and cannot be ascertained. I, therefore, accept the revision and direct the Magistrate to recover the money in the hands of the complainant as if it were a fine and to pay it over to the accused.

LALA—CONVICT—APPELLANT

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Approver—Corroboration—Confession of co-accused.

In cases where a large number of persons have been arrested by the Police and confessions are obtained one after the other, it is likely enough that those confessions should agree with each other, and each man would be likely to name as far as possible those persons who have already been named in the previous confessions. The fact of any particular person having been named in the confessions of more than one of the co-accused cannot, therefore, be regarded as sufficiently reliable corroboration of the statement of the approver. In such a case, each person accused is entitled to claim that as against him the statement of the approver shall be corroborated by some reliable evidence. [p. 623, cols. 1 & 2; p 624, col 2]

Appeal from an order of the Sessions Judge, Karnal, dated the 29th April 1921.

Lala Jai Lal, R. B. Assistant Legal Remembrancer, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from a conviction under sections 395 and 435, Indian Penal Code, by the Sessions Judge of Karnal. Twelve persons were committed for trial in this case, of whom the learned Sessions Judge has acquitted three and convicted the remaining nine. Out of these nine, six have preferred appeals to this Court, namely, Bhartu, Lala, Harbal Nathu son of Badlu, caste Kahar, Dalip and Mangat. This judgment will cover all the six appeals.

On the night of 15-16th June 1920 a dacoity accompanied by arson was committed in the house of Surjan, a Bania of village Garh Sarnai, in the Karnal Tahsil. A telegram had previously been sent by the Circle Inspector of Bharaut in the Meerut District to the effect that a gang of dacoits were crossing the river Jamna to commit dacoity. This telegram unfortunately reached the Police Station at Gharanda in which Thana the village of Garh Sarnai is situate only after the dacoity had been committed. The Circle Inspector, Bharaut, had given orders that suspects absent from home should be watched and a Head Constable and two constables, who had gone to village Bam, found Nathu Lohar absent from home, and on his returning to the village the Police caught hold of him. Property was recovered from him and various names were ascertained from him with the result that the present case was challaned and committed to Sessions.

The principal witness in this case is the approver, Mam Raj. The learned Sessions Judge is of opinion that his account of the dacoity is true, and I see no reason to come to a different finding But it is obviously necessary that there should be corroboration of the approver's statement as against each of the appellants.

In this case none of the witnesses, who saw any members of the gang on the way to and from the scene of the dacoity, is able to identify any of the prisoners and none of the villagers of Garh Sarnai can give evidence as to their identity. So the convictions rest solely on the statement of the approver corroborated by retracted confessions of certain co accused, and in some cases on evidence as to recovery of the stolen property. The property recovered has been fully identified.

The learned Sessions Judge has laid down as a test of the corroboration of the approver's story that any particular person implicated by the approver should also be implicated by the confessions of at least two co-accused. The Sessions Judge points out that there are no less than four independent confessions by persons other than the approver, and he considers that implication by one confession of a co-accused would be insufficient corroboration of the approver's statement, while implication by two co-accused would be sufficient. He argues that though retracted confessions may not be of great value, some weight must be attached to each confession, and that where the same individual is named by more than one of the co-accused confessing, the corroboration may be regarded as sufficient. I regret to say that I am unable to accept this view as a test. In cases where a large number of persons have been arrested by the Police and confessions are obtained one after the other it seems to me likely enough that those confessions should agree with each other, and that each man would be likely to name as far as possible those persons who have already been named in the previous confessions. It may, of course, be said that when a man confesses he does not necessarily know the details of a previous confession made by another accused, but I do not think it necessarily follows that he should be unable to ascertain what persons have been implicated in the previous confessions. In the course of the investigation it might easily be that the subordinate Police Officers concerned would know more or less the names of the persons who have been implicated in confessions, and a man who makes a confession might thus be able to ascertain what persons have been named in an earlier confession. I am unable, therefore, to regard the fact of any particular person having been named in the confession of more than one of the co-accused as sufficiently reliable corroboration of the statement of the approver. I will now take up the case of each of the appellants separately, and will first deal with the case of Lala.

This man himself made a confession before a First Class Magistrate and he pointed out that certain ornaments which had been satisfactorily proved to be a part of the property looted in this case of dacoity, were concealed in the rubbish heap near his house. He is named both by the approver and by other co accused before the Committing Magistrate. He admitted that he had made a confession but alleged that he had been beaten by the Police. He also charged the approver, Mam Raj, with enmity. At his trial he only called one defence witness, who is his own father, to corroborate his statement of having been beaten by the Police. I here note that the learned Sessions Judge has convicted all the appellants both of committing dacoity and also of committing arson, and has sentenced them to separate terms of imprisonment under both heads; the sentences to run concurrently. In the appeal of Lala to this Court I see that he appeals only from his conviction under section 395 and at the end of the appeal he states that he does not wish to appeal in the other case. So far as is known to me, there is no conviction against him except the convictions under sections 435 and 395, Indian Penal Code, in the present case, yet I fail entirely to understand how he can allege that he is innocent of the dacoity and has, at the same time, not appealed from his conviction under section 435 of arson committed in the course of the dacoity.

In taking the present appeal as an appeal from both convictions I still have no hesitation in rejecting the appeal. The assessors, too, were of opinion that the guilt of this man was proved. There is ample evidence against him in this case and his appeal will stand as dismissed.

Next, I will deal with the appeal of Harbal, who has also appealed only from his conviction under section 395, Indian Penal Code. Here the same remarks apply as in the case of the appeal of Lala. This man confessed before a First Class Magistrate and he is implicated by confessions of co-accused. Certain ornaments, which have been proved to be a part of the property looted in the dacoity, were recovered on search of his house from the persons of his mother and his sister in-law. He stated that these ornaments belonged to the persons from whom they were recovered. Three witnesses were produced for the defence. The first two merely stated that the jewellery was taken from his sister in-law, and this is, no doubt, correct, but they do not give evidence as to the ownership of this jewellery. The third witness was the sister in-law herself and she, of course, claimed the ornaments taken from her as her own. Harbal, like others, attempts to explain his confession by saying that the Sub-Inspector beat him and made him unconscious. In his case there is ample corroboration of the approver's story, and I agree with the assessors and the learned Sessions Judge as to the guilt of Harbal, and I dismiss his appeal.

Next comes the appeal of Bhartu. This man is implicated by the evidence of the approver and by three confessions of co-accused. None of the stolen property was recovered from him and there is no corroboration of the approver's evidence as against this appellant except the statement of the co-accused. I am unable to hold the evidence to be sufficient in this case and his appeal is accepted. I note that the assessors regarded the evidence as insufficient in his case.

I will now deal with the appeal of Mangat. Here the corroboration of the approver's story lies in the confessions of four co accused. Apart from this, there is no evidence against him except that he was absent from his village on the day after the commission of the dacoity. This man is a registered badmash. I do not see that the fact of his absence from the village on the night in question can be taken as any proof that he was at the scene of the dacoity. The assessors considered this man to be guilty, but I am unable to distinguish his case from that of Bhartu and I accept his appeal.

I next take up the appeal of Nathu Kabar. Here the only corroboration of the approver's story is the confession of three of the co-accused. The assessors regarded this as insufficient for conviction and I agree with them. His appeal is accepted.

Last comes the appeal of Dalip. Here the corroboration of the approver's story lies in the confession of two of the co-accused. The learned Sessions Judge himself hesitated before convicting Dalip, but the approver in one part of his story states that at the distribution of the plunder there was a scramble and Dalip got nothing, so all the rest of the dacoits contributed a little to make up his share. The learned Sessions Judge remarks that the approver could not have invented such a story. This is probably correct, but it does not in the least follow that Dalip is the man concerned. It would be perfectly easy for the approver to conceal the real name of the person concerned and to substitute the name of Dalip. It is obvious that it is always open to the approver to screen those men who are his real friends and accomplices, and to substitute the names of others who are not really concerned. Those persons whose names are substituted generally allege enmity but in most cases they are unable to prove such enmity. There is no satisfactory proof of the allegations of enmity in this case but still each person accused is entitled to claim that as against him the statement of the approver shall be corroborated by some reliable evidence. The appeal of Dalip is also accepted.

The result is that I accept the appeals of Nathu Kabar, Dalip, Bhartu and Mangat, and reversing their convictions and sentences I acquit them and order that they be released. In the cases of Lala and Harbal I confirm the convictions and sentences and dismiss their appeals.

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 263—Summary trial—Record, contents of—Conviction based on appearance of accused.

Section 263 of the Criminal Procedure Code requires that the Magistrate's record under that section shall state the offence complained of and the offence, if any, proved, the plea of the accused and his examination, if any, the finding and in case of a conviction, a brief statement of the reasons therefor. These particulars should be specified in different columns of the register and should not be lumped together in one column. [p 626, col. 1.]

A man cannot be convicted on his appearance and manner of speech An ugly, stammering, nervous man may be innocent, while a good looking, plausible man may be a scoundrel.[p 6 6, cols. 1 & 2]

Where a Magistrate in convicting an accused remarks in the judgment, "his appearance and the manner of his speech are such that I have no doubt he committed the offence", it is quite sufficient to condemn the whole judgment. [p. 626, col. 1.]

Case reported by the Sessions Judge, Lyallpore, with his No. 785 of 1921.

FACTS.—The accused applicant has been convicted in a summary trial of an offence under section 182, Indian Penal Code and has been sentenced to undergo one month's rigorous imprisonment. He has already undergone 14 days' imprisonment and is now on bail.

The accused on conviction by Khan Bahadur Sayyed Mehdi Shah, Honorary Magistrate, exercising the powers of a Magistrate of the First Class in the Lyallpore District, was sentenced, by order dated 22nd April 1921, under section 182 of the Indian Penal Code, to one month's rigorous imprisonment.

GROUNDS.—On behalf of the accused it is contended that a technical offence under section 182, Indian Penal Code should not have been tried summarily and in support of this view ruling cited as Bakkhu v. Crown (1), has been relied upon. On this point I need say nothing beyond this that the Legislature did not contemplate the removal of this offence from the category of offences scheduled as triable summarily.

The next objection is, that the judgment of the lower Court does not give the reasons of conviction as required under section 263 (h), Criminal Procedure Code. The judgment runs as follows:—"Accused does not plead guilty. Prosecution evidence supports the prosecution story. Witnesses are reliable. Defence evidence is not of much use, etc. Accused did lay out a false claim. His appearance and speech are such that I have no doubt that he committed the offence." Now, this judgment certainly does not give such reasons as would assist the Revisional Court in coming to any decision on the merits of the case. Similar and in fact more lengthy judgments have been set aside by different High Courts on account of this defect.

It is sufficient to refer to the following amongst other such judgments:—

1. Punjab Singh, In the matter of the Petition of (2), 2. Queen-Empress v. Mukundi Lal (3), in which it was remarked that brevity should not tend to obscurity.

3. Queen-Empress v. Shidganda (4), 4. Mehtab v. Empress (5), in which it was laid down that discussion relating to the weakness of the defence was not sufficient. 5. Sher Singh v. Empress (6).

In the judgment under reference the Magistrate does not even state what the false information was which the accused is said to have furnished, it does not say whether that information was false and how it was proved to be false and whether it was false to the accused's knowledge.

The record behind the trial shows that the accused had applied to the Superintendent of Police requesting that officer to order an enquiry into the high-handed conduct of certain lambardars and other people who, according to the accused's story, had belaboured and illegally confined his son and who had also robbed him of cash, etc. We do not know how the falsity of this information was established in the summary trial before the Magistrate who has failed to make any mention of it in the brief judgment recorded by him.

In my opinion the judgment is not such as meets the requirements of section 263 (h), Criminal Procedure Code, and should be quashed. The case is to be referred to the High Court for orders. The accused applicant will remain out on bail pending decision of this reference.

ORDER.—Ghulam Muhammad has been convicted summarily of an offence under section 182, Indian Penal Code. The law requires that the Magistrate's record shall state the offence complained of and the offence, if any, proved, the plea of the accused and his examination, if any, the finding and in case of a conviction a brief statement of the reasons therefor, see section 262, Criminal Procedure Code. The register has been produced before me, and I find that the practice is to lump together in one column all the particulars required by clause, (g) to (j) of section 263. In the present case the judgment, if so it may be described, begins by saying the accused pleads not guilty. It next says the prosecution evidence supports the prosecution story and the witnesses are reliable. It then discusses the defence evidence, pointing out that one gives only hearsay evidence and the others plead ignorance. It then goes on to refer to a statement made by the accused, this is a reversion to clause (g). It says that accused apparently brought a false case in Court in "order to avoid the consequences of this case."

From this I gather that the charge against the accused is, that he supplied false information to the Police, charging some one with having committed a theft in his house. The judgment winds up by saying: "In my opinion the accused certainly brought a false case (this sounds as if he was being convicted of bringing a false case in Court). His appearance and the manner of his speech are such that I have no doubt that he committed the offence." This last sentense in itself is, I consider, quite sufficient to condemn the whole judgment. How far the Magistrate has convicted on the evidence and how far an accused's appearance it is impossible to say. Obviously, a man cannot be convicted on his appearance and manner of speech. An ugly, stammering, nervous man may be innocent, while a good looking, plausible man may be a scoundrel.

I set aside the conviction and sentence and, as the petitioner has already undergone 14 days of the month's imprisonment to which he was sentenced, I do not order a re trial.

The Government Pleader, for the Crown.

RAMPAL v. EMPEROR.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure against an order of the Sessions Judge of Lucknow, dated the 25th April 1921, confirming an order passed by a Magistrate of the First Class of Bara Banki, dated the 31st March 1921, under which the applicant was sentenced to six months' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 50 for having committed an offence under section 202 of the Indian Penal Code.

The facts of the case are as follows:—On the 31st May 1920 one Chote Lal killed a certain Sadhu with a spear in the village of Loni Katra. Chote Lal was tried and convicted by the Court of Session of an offence under section 304 of the Indian Penal Code. The applicant along with one Kamta and another person were subsequently tried under section 201 of the Indian Penal Code by the Magistrate mentioned above. The applicant was convicted by that Magistrate under section 202 and not under section 201 of the Indian Penal Code. The admitted facts show that about the evening of the 30th May 1920, the day on which the Sadhu was killed, two reports were made one after the other with an interval, the exactness of which it is difficult to discover, one by Kamta and another later by the Chaukidar of the village. The report which was made by Kamta was admittedly a false one. The report made by the Chaukidar of the village was a true one. The former stated that the Sadhu was killed by a bullock, while the latter said that he was killed by Chote Lal. At the time of the making of this report by Kamta, the applicant was also there and the true decision of this case depends upon what happened when Kamta was making his report to the Police Sub-Inspector and as to what part the applicant took in making the report. The events attending upon the making of the report can be granted only from the evidence of the Sub-Inspector. In my opinion this gentleman has tried to introduce a good deal of fencing in his evidence. Whatever he stated in the first instance he tried to negative in the next breath and the general impression left on my mind as to his evidence is, that the signatures which he obtained on the report in writing made by Kamta, of the applicant and the other man were in token of the fact that that report was made by Kamta. This is the view which has been taken of the evidence by the Deputy Magistrate also and I am glad I am in agreement with him in interpreting that evidence. The Sub-Inspector, so far as the oral statement of Kamta was concerned, stated that the accused (by which he intended to mean all the three including the applicant) first of all gave him the information orally. In almost the next breath he said, "Kamta gave me the information orally." It is impossible to draw any definite conclusion from the statements of this nature. I am, however, satisfied that the part which the applicant took with reference to Kamta's report was only this much that he identified Kamta to the satisfaction of the Sub-Inspector and that he also attested the fact that the report in writing was the one which was made by that Kamta. I am, therefore, of opinion that the applicant is not guilty of anything connected with the information contained in the report made by Kamta in writing. But this finding is not enough to exonerate him from the offence of which he has been convicted by the Courts below, that is, of section 202 of the Indian Penal Code.

It is admitted that the applicant himself made no report of the commission of the offence and if other elements of section 45 of the Code of Criminal Procedure were satisfied, I have no doubt that the applicant would be guilty of an offence under section 202 of the Indian Penal Code. Two points were urged before me by the learned Counsel for the applicant to take out the case from the provisions of section 202 of the Code,—(1) that it was not shown that the applicant was the headman or Mukhia of the village in which the offence was committed. This is a question of fact, which does not seem to have been raised at any stage of the proceedings before and the learned Sessions Judge in his judgment assumes, and no protest seems to have been made against the assumption, that the applicant is the Mukhia of the village Loni Katra. I, therefore, reject this contention.

The second point is more serious and it is to the effect that the report as to the commission of the offence having been admittedly made in the presence of the applicant by the Chaukidar and that report being admittedly correct in all particulars no further duty or obligation lay upon the applicant under the terms of section 45, Criminal Procedure Code, for adding his own weight to the information supplied by the Chaukidar by furnishing fresh information on the same lines. In my opinion the contention is sound and must be accepted. It is admitted that, in consequence of the information furnished by the village Chaukidar, the Sub-Inspector took action, the result of which was the conviction of the offender, Chote Lal. Consequently, justice has been fully satisfied. The provisions of the section are not intended to be punitive in themselves but are intended to facilitate information as to the commission of an offense and thereby to facilitate steps being taken in the investigation of the same. All this object was attained by what happened in this case and particularly by what the Chaukidar had informed the Sub-Inspector in the clearest terms. This view of the law is supported by a series of authorities, three of which have been referred to by the learned Counsel for the applicant in the course of the arguments before me. They are 1. Empress v. Sashi Bhusan Chuckrabutty (1), 2. Queen-Empress v. Gopal Singh (2) and 3. Panaya Nayak, In the matter of the petition of (3).

I, therefore, accept the application, set aside the conviction and sentence of the applicant and direct that the bail, on which he stands at present, be cancelled and the fine, if paid, be refunded to him.

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 457, 460—Death caused in house-breaking—"At the time of the committing of house-breaking by night," meaning of.

The expression "at the time of the commission of house-breaking by night" in section 460 of the Penal Code must be limited to the time during which the criminal trespass continues which forms an element in house-trespass, which is itself essential to house-breaking, and cannot be extended so as to include any prior or subsequent time. [p. 629, col 2.]

Jaffir v. Empress, 2 P. R. 1887 Cr., followed.

Accused was one of several persons who broke into the complainant's house by effecting a breach in the wall. On issuing from the house the accused was caught while his companions ran away. Some of the latter were armed with dangs and inflicted blows on one of the pursuers as a result of which the latter died:

Held, that the accused was not guilty of an offence under section 460 of the Penal Code, inasmuch as the offence of house-breaking had become complete before death was caused, but that he was guilty of an offence under section 457 of the Penal Code. [p. 630, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal from an order of the Additional Sessions Judge, Montgomery, dated the 30th June 1921.

Dr. Muhammad Iqbal, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—One Muhammad was committed to the Sessions on a charge under section 302, Indian Penal Code, and there was a charge in the alternative under section 460, Indian Penal Code. The Sessions Judge has acquitted him of the graver charge, in agreement with the opinion expressed by the Assessors, but has convicted him of an offence under section 460, Indian Penal Code and sentenced him to rigorous imprisonment for seven years including three months' solitary confinement. Against this conviction and sentence he has preferred an appeal through Dr. Muhammad Iqbal, who argues that section 460, Indian Penal Code is not applicable, and that the sentence awarded may be reduced if the conviction is altered to one under any other section.

MUHAMMAD v. EMPEROR.

The facts of the case are fully stated in the judgment of the learned Sessions Judge and may be only briefly summarised here. On the night of the 16th April 1921, there was a burglary in the village Khajjian, where four thieves broke into the house of Phallu by effecting a breach in the wall of his house. He was awakened by a noise and saw three men standing outside the breach and a fourth man just coming out of the hole. The three men ran away when they saw him but he secured the man whom he had noticed coming out of the breach in the wall. The other three returned to rescue the captured man and succeeded in rescuing him by beating Phallu with sticks. All the four burglars were running away when certain neighbours of Phallu arrived, including Hassu, deceased. Hassu is said to have caught hold of the same man who had been rescued from Phallu, but he received certain injuries of which he died on the spot. The story of the prosecution was, that the captured man, who is the present appellant, had an iron implement of house-breaking, called sandhewa, in his hand when he was caught and he thrust it with both his hands into the ribs of Hassu and thereby caused his death. It was on the basis of this story that Muhammad was charged with the offence of murder. The medical evidence in the case, however, showed that this story was not true. The three injuries caused to the deceased were all contused injuries resulting from blows by a blunt weapon like a dang or a lathi and the iron implement which had a pointed sharp edge was not found to have been thrust in the manner described by the eye-witnesses. The Court accepted the theory that Hassu must have been beaten by the companions of Muhammad who could not probably rescue him as a number of villagers arrived. It has not been held that any of the injuries to the deceased was caused by Muhammad and he was, therefore, acquitted of the charge under section 302, Indian Penal Code. In convicting him under section 460, Indian Penal Code, the Court observed that, "as death was caused in the commission of the house-breaking the accused as one of the gang of thieves is guilty under section 460, Indian Penal Code." Dr. Muhammad Iqbal's contention is that the offence of house breaking by night had been completed when Hassu arrived on the scene. The thieves were admittedly running away when Hassu tried to catch one of them and any injury that was caused to him by any companion of Muhammad could not be said to be caused at the time of committing the house-breaking or the house-trespass in question. I think this contention must prevail. It was held by Plowden, J., in a ruling published as Jaffir v. Empress (1) in a similar case, that "section 460, Indian Penal Code was not applicable, as the expression in that section 'at the time of the committing of house-breaking by night' must be limited to the time during which the criminal trespass continues which forms an element in house trespass, which is itself essential to house-breaking, and cannot be extended so as to include any prior or subsequent time." This authority appears to be on all fours with the present case and I hold that the conviction under section 460, Indian Penal Code is not correct and cannot be maintained.

There remains the question as to what other offence has been committed by the appellant. His learned Counsel does not dispute the fact that the appellant was caught at the spot immediately after the burglary. There can be no doubt that he was one of the burglars. It is argued, however, that his offence falls only under section 456, Indian Penal Code, being simple house-breaking by night, as there is no finding as to the intention with which the house-breaking was committed. It is obvious that, if it were presumed that the four men came with the intention of committing theft, an offence under section 457, Indian Penal Code would be clearly constituted and, considering that the thieves had dangs in their hands, section 458, Indian Penal Code, would also be applicable, as that would amount to having made preparation for causing hurt to any person. Dr. Iqbal urges that there is no convincing evidence that his client was armed with a dang. From the discrepant evidence produced by the prosecution it cannot be concluded that the possession of a dang by the appellant is proved. It is not unlikely that he was empty-handed when he crawled out of the breach in the wall and as he was the only one of the culprits who was arrested, the prosecution witnesses in their anxiety to have some one punished for the death of Hassu began to attribute to him the possession first of the iron implement and then of a dang in addition to that implement. Sardara, P. W. No. 2, says "the accused had a dang in his hand as well... The sandhewa was in one hand and the dang in the other." This describes a somewhat impossible position for a man who has been caught on crawling out of a hole in a wall. A dang and a sandhewa are said to have been found lying near the breach when the Police arrived and may have been left there by any of the four men. Phallu, P. W. No. 4, says "accused had a dang in his hand but did not strike Hassu with it.....When the accused issued from the breach he had the sandhewa in his hand but not the dang. When he escaped from me he had only the sandhewa in his hand. I did not see the dang in his hand when Hassu seized him." Allu (P. W. No. 5), son of Hassu, deceased, does not say that the appellant had any dang and adds that the dang was found on the ground. Jiwan (P. W. No. 6) also states that the dang in Court was near the breach. It cannot be said, therefore, that the appellant had been armed with a dang or had made preparation for causing hurt before he came to commit the offence. This view of the evidence may possibly exclude the applicability of section 458, Indian Penal Code, to the offence committed by Muhammad but I cannot accept the argument that the offence was only one under section 456, Indian Penal Code. I think an offence under section 457, Indian Penal Code, is clearly made out against the appellant. The presence of the sandhewa on the spot and the breach in the wall leave no doubt as to the intention with which the house-breaking was committed and I think the intention of theft can be very safely presumed. The Court below did not record a finding on that point because it held the offence to be one under section 460, Indian Penal Code. I hold that the appellant is guilty of an offence under section 457, Indian Penal Code and, though he was not charged with that offence, I do not think he can be prejudiced by his conviction being altered to one under section 457, Indian Penal Code. As it has been held that he was not directly responsible for the death of Hassu and as constructive responsibility is ruled out by the exclusion of section 460, Indian Penal Code, a reduction of the sentence awarded against him seems to be called for and his sentence is hereby reduced to one of four years' rigorous imprisonment for an offence under section 457, Indian Penal Code. To this extent his appeal is accepted.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 145—Property in possession of tenants—Dispute—Procedure.

Where neither party is in actual physical possession of the land in dispute and the real dispute is whether the tenants, who are in actual possession, are the tenants of one party or of the other, a Magistrate is not competent to take proceedings under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code in respect of the land in dispute. Petition, under section 439, Criminal Procedure Code, for revision of an order of the Magistrate, First Class, Multan, dated the 15th March 1921.

Lala Hargopal, for the Petitioner.

Sheikh Nias Ali, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The Magistrate has refused to take action under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, on the ground that the complainant himself says that he has not been in possession. I do not think that the complainant ever said or intended to say that he had had no sort of possession. But I gather from Counsel that the real facts are that the land is cultivated by tenants. Each side claims that the tenants are his. The defendant has for the last two years got the landlord's share of the produce from the tenants (the complainant in his complaint says defendant has taken it forcibly) and this year the defendant has turned off the land a man to whom the plaintiff has sold the landlord's share of the produce.

Lala Hargopal cites Sarbananda Basu, In the matter of (1) and argues that where the tenants attorn to a stranger the landlord has a right to ask the Court to proceed under section 145. But Lala Hargopal is unable to say that the tenants have so attorned; and the complaint itself says the defendant took the produce forcibly. If he did so this may, perhaps, have been criminal trespass, theft, robbery, extortion or some other offence, but I do not think it amounts to taking possession. The real dispute is as to whether the tenants are tenants of plaintiff or of defendant, or, to put it in other words, whether the land belongs to plaintiff or to defendant. This can only be settled by a Civil Court. Neither of the parties is in actual physical possession and I do not see how the Magistrate can decide which party is in constructive possession without going into the question of title.

This application for revision is dismissed.

Despite the entry in the school certificate which is founded on a statement made by Vishnusa's brother, there is no reasonable doubt that Vishnusa is over 18 years of age. The vital statistics book of Mehkar from 1902 to 1905, where Vishnusa was born, was in Court and the register shows that a son was born to Gangaramsa on the 13th March 1903, Janki Bai, the wife of Gangaramsa, dying on the 15th October 1904. Vishnusa is admittedly the last son of Gangaramsa and there is nothing on the record to show that this entry of the 13th March 1903 can refer to anybody but Vishnusa. This being so, I am of opinion that the Magistrate was wrong in granting him maintenance because the boy is of age and, therefore, capable of earning his own livelihood. It would be, of course, better for him if he studied for the next few years but that question has nothing to do with the one Petition, under section 526, Criminal Procedure Code, for transfer of the case from the Court of the Magistrate, First Class, Hoshiarpur, to some other competent Court.

Mr. Abdul Aziz, for the Petitioner.

Lala Jagan Nath, for the Respondent.

ORDER.—This is an application under section 526, Criminal Procedure Code, for the transfer of a criminal complaint, Gokal Chand v. Siri Kishen, etc., pending for decision in the Court of Nawabzada Izaz ud-Din Ahmad, Magistrate, First Class, Hoshiarpur, to any other Court in the same place. As mentioned in the note dated the 12th July 1921 admitting this application, there is no allegation that the learned Magistrate has any bias in favour or against any party in this case but the ground on which the transfer is sought is that the learned Magistrate had two cross complaints before him in this very case and, instead of deciding both of them together, he has dismissed the complaint lodged by the petitioner against Gokal Chand and has framed charges against the petitioner in the cross-case. It is urged that he has used the expression "jurm sabit hai," while framing the charges and has thus made up his mind against the petitioner or has at least expressed his opinion. Mr. Jagan Nath appears for the respondent and contends that this application should not be granted as the word sabit (i. e. proved) has been inadvertently used and should be taken to stand for the opinion that there is a prima facie case against the persons accused by Gokal Chand. He relies on Rajani Kanta Dutta v. Emperor (1) as showing that an expression of opinion by a Magistrate against the accused "in another case and on other evidence" is not by itself a sufficient ground for transferring a case from his Court. The view of the law taken in the above ruling is, no doubt, correct but the present case is somewhat different. The opinion expressed here was not in another case nor on other evidence, and I think the petitioner can reasonably ask in this case that a transfer to another Court would be in the interests of justice. Counsel for the petitioner undertakes that no further delay in the disposal of this case, which is an old one, will be caused by the order of transfer being passed as his client does not want de novo proceedings before the Court to which the case may be transferred. I, therefore, grant this application and direct that this case may be transferred from the Court of Nawabzada Izaz ud-Din Ahmad to that of any other Magistrate of competent jurisdiction in Hoshiarpur to whom the case may be sent for disposal by the District Magistrate.

Criminal application for revision from conviction and sentence passed by the Acting Third Presidency Magistrate, Bombay.

Mr. O'Gorman (with him, Messrs. Little & Co.), for the Applicant.

Mr. Bahadurji, Acting Advocate-General, (with him Mr. J. C. Bowen, Public Prosecutor), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—The applicant in this case was charged with having caused his motor car to be driven along the Queen's Road on the 27th May 1921, without having re registered the same for the year 1921, in contravention of rule 6 (1) (b) of the Bombay Motor Vehicle Rules, 1915, as amended by the Rules published on the 18th December 1918. The applicant contended that the said rule, as amended, was and is ultra vires of the powers conferred on the Local Government by sections 10 and 11 of the Indian Motor Vehicles Act, 1914, and that the same was invalid and of no effect. The Third Presidency Magistrate, however, convicted the applicant under the said amended rule and sentenced him to pay a fine of one rupee. The applicant has applied to us under our revisional powers to set aside the conviction and sentence. The learned Magistrate has given no reasons for his decision.

Section 10 of the Act provides that (1) the owner of every motor vehicle shall cause it to be registered in the prescribed manner, and (2) that such registration shall be valid in such area as may be specified in the certificate of registration; and by section 11, the Local Government, subject to the condition of previous publication, shall make rules for the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of the Act and of regulating, in the whole or any part of the territories under its administration, the use of motor vehicles or any class of motor vehicles in public places. By sub-section (2) in particular, and without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing powers, the Local Government may make rules for all or any of the following purposes, which are detailed in the headings (a) to (i). Under (a) rules may be made providing for the registration of motor vehicles, and the conditions subject to which such vehicles may be registered, the fees payable in respect of and incidental to registration, the issue of certificates of registration, the notification of any changes of ownership, and (subject to the provisions of section 10) the area in which certificates of registration shall be valid.

Rule 6 of the Bombay Motor Vehicles Rules, 1915, framed by the Local Government under its powers given by section 11 of the Act, provided that subject to the provisions contained in sub-rule (2) of rule 13, no motor vehicle should be used unless it had been first registered by the registering authority, and any motor vehicle which had already been registered under the Act did not need to be re registered.

Rule 73 provided that every registration certificate granted under section 10 of the Act should be in the form of Schedule D and should be available for the whole of British India.

It will be noted that the rule did not provide for any limit of time during which the certificate should be valid.

On the 18th December 1918, the Local Government published amendments to the Bombay Motor Vehicles Rules, 1915.

The following rule was substituted for the existing rule 6:—

(1) No motor vehicle shall be used (save in accordance with rule 14 or for the purpose of procuring registration)—

(a) unless it has been registered by the registering authority, and

(b) unless the registration certificate granted in respect of it is in force.

(2) Registration certificates granted in accordance with rule 73 and Schedule D shall expire on the 31st December in the year in which they are granted but shall be renewable

(3) Registration certificates granted before the 18th December 1918, shall expire on the 28th February 1919.

(4) Notwithstanding anything in this rule any registration certificate granted under any enactment for the time being in force in any part of British India other than the Presidency of Bombay or in any State in India included in Schedule N shall be valid in the Presidency of Bombay until the date of its expiry.

Then, in rule 7 for the word "provided" the following was substituted:—

"Provided that no fee shall be charged for the renewal of a registration certificate in any case where the application for renewal is made before the expiry of the certificate."

Various changes were made in Schedule D, the important one for the purpose of this case being that immediately below "Registration Certificate" the words "Valid for the year ending the 31st December 19" were to be inserted.

The result of the amendment of the rules was, that owners of motor vehicles who had registration certificates granted before the 18th December 1918 had to renew their certificates before the 28th February 1919, and that every certificate granted after the 18th December 1918 was only valid up to the 31st December 1919. If, then, an owner neglected to renew his certificate before the expiry of the period for which it was valid, he was treated by the authorities as a person who had not caused his motor vehicle to be registered in the prescribed manner, and in order to come within the provisions of section 10 of the Act he was liable to be charged with a fresh fee before he could get his certificate renewed.

Now, it is contended by the applicant that the amendment of the rules by the Local Government limiting the duration of time for which a certificate was to be valid was ultra vires as no power was given by section 11 to make rules for that purpose. Special reference was made to heading (d) of section 11, sub-section (2), which enabled the Local Government to make rules prescribing the authority by which, and the conditions subject to which, drivers of motor vehicles or any class of such drivers might be licensed, the fees payable in respect of such licenses, and (subject to the provisions of section 9) the area within which, and the duration for which, licenses should be valid. Where it was intended to give the power to make rules prescribing a time limit it was expressly given to that effect, and, in our opinion, heading (a) of section 11, sub-section (2), does not by implication give a power to the Local Government to prescribe by rule the duration of time during which a certificate of registration shall be valid.

It has been contended that the Local Government could make rules providing for the conditions subject to which the motor vehicles might be registered, and the duration of time was one of the conditions of registration. But we do not think there is any force in that argument, as, although the same words appear in heading (d), it was expressly provided that the duration of time during which licenses should be valid should be prescribed by rule.

Lastly, it was argued that the rule was made under the general powers given by sub-section (1), but such a provision must be strictly construed and when the rules which can be made relating to the registration of motor vehicles are defined by section (2) (a) it is clear that the Legislature intended that any rules relating to registration must come within that definition.

We think, therefore, that the contention of the applicant must prevail, and that the amendment of the rules which were made on the 18th December 1918, so far as they provided that registration certificates should expire on the 31st December in the year in which they were granted, was ultra vires of the Local Government. It would also follow that the corresponding amendment of the form in Schedule D was ultra vires, and that the certificates of registration granted according to the amended form should be considered as if the words "valid for the year ending the 31st December 19 " were not added. Therefore, as the applicant had a certificate, he had complied with the provisions of section 10 of the Act and the conviction under section 16 of the Act must be set aside and the fine, if paid, refunded.

Aroras are Kirars, though they may not be pleased to be called so. [p. 636, col. 1.]

The word kirar may sometimes have a somewhat contemptuous signification [p. 636, col. 1.]

Where an Arora is called a "kirar" on provocation, the incident is of too trivial a nature to be brought before a Court, and no offence under section 504 of the Penal Code is committed. [p. 636, col. 2.]

Case reported by the Sessions Judge, Ferozepur, with his No. 90 of 1921.

FACTS.—On 5th March 1921 Punjab Mal filed a complaint under section 504 of the Indian Penal Code against Muhammad Bakhsh and Fateh Din. It was alleged that the parties were before the Assistant Manager of the Jalalabad Estate and Punjab Mal alluded to Fateh Din as Fatta or Fatti. This annoyed the accused who thereupon, according to the Assistant Manager, said: "O kirar you were our weighman only yesterday, to-day you do not call him even by his full name which is Fateh Din." It was alleged in the complaint that other offensive and insulting expressions were used. The complainant produced four witnesses and the accused produced two witnesses in their defence. The Magistrate convicted the accused under section 504, Indian Penal Code, and sentenced each of the accused to 15 days' rigorous imprisonment.

GROUNDS.—Haji Muhammad Bakhsh and his son, Fateh Din, have been convicted of defaming Punjab Mal, Arora, under section 504, Indian Penal Code, and sentenced to 15 days' rigorous imprisonment each by Faqir Sayad Said-ud-Din, exercising the powers of a Magistrate of the First Class in the Ferozepore District. The Magistrate has found that the accused defamed the complainant by calling him a kirar. The parties were before the Assistant Manager of the Jalalabad Estate and Punjab Mal alluded to Fateh Din as "Fattu or Fatti." This annoyed the accused, who thereupon, according to the Assistant Manager, said: "O kirar you were our weighman only yesterday, to-day you do not call him even by his full name which is Fateh Din." This is the defamation upon which the Magistrate has founded his conviction of the accused. It is, indeed, alleged that other offensive and insulting expressions were used but the Magistrate does not appear to have found (nor, I think, would he have been justified in finding) that the use of such expressions was proved. It is remarkable that both the accused appear to have been convicted of uttering exactly the same words to the complainant. Apart from the question whether there was sufficient justification for the accused retaliating upon the complainant, I am of opinion that the use of the word kirar by itself in the circumstances could not reasonably be held to constitute defamation. In some parts of the Province certainly an Arora might be slightingly addressed as a kirar and this would not be looked upon as a serious insult. In the Punjabi Dictionary, prepared by Munshi Gulab Singh and Sons, compiled and edited by Bhai Maya Singh, a member of the Khalsa College Council, and revised by Dr. H. M. Clarke of Amritsar in behalf of the Punjab Text Book Committee, the word "kirar" or kirari is defined on page 616, but in that definition there is no mention of any insulting connotation. On the other hand, on page 557 of the same work, the word kirar is defined as the name of the Arora caste and it is added that the word is used contemptuously. The Counsel for Punjab Mal has stated that kirar is a term of great abuse and he connects it with the word kira meaning a worm, or, as he translates it, "vermin." He can produce no authority for this proposition and it would seem to be etymologically incorrect, the "r" occurring in kira being a different one to the middle 'r' in kirar, I consider that, in these circumstances, the Court was wrong in registering a conviction, but in any case I am quite clear upon one point, and that is that the sentences passed were inappropriate in the case of persons of the status and position of the accused. In respect to this point I have given fuller reasons in my order passed in the revision case of Muhammad Bakhsh v. Emperor (1). A sentence of fine would have amply met the case, and I recommend that, even if the convictions be upheld, the sentences of imprisonment be quashed and sentence of fine substituted. Chet Singh v. Emperor (2).

Messrs. O. Bevan Petman and Zafrullah Khan, for the Petitioners.

The Additional Government Advocate, for the Crown.

Mr. B. N. Kapur, for Punjab Mal, Complainant-Respondent.

ORDER.—Haji Muhammad Bakhsh and his son Fateh Din have been convicted in this case under section 504, Indian Penal Code, and sentenced to 15 days' rigorous imprisonment. The case has been reported by the learned Sessions Judge.

The facts are, that Punjab Mal, Octroi contractor in the Mamdot State, had complained to Ezad Bakhsh, the Assistant Manager of the State, that Haji Muhammad Bakhsh had not paid Octroi. The Assistant Manager sent for the parties, when Haji Muhammad Bakhsh stated the Punjab Mal had refused to receive the Octroi. Punjab Mal then made some angry reply speaking of Fateh Din as Fatti or Fattu. Haji Muhammad Bakhsh and his son then replied angrily, saying, "Oh, kirar, only yesterday you were our weighman and now you cannot call Fateh Din by his full name." Some witnesses state that further abuse was uttered but the Assistant Manager, who is apparently the most reliable and disinterested of the witnesses, states positively that nothing more was said on either side. The word kirar may sometimes no doubt have a somewhat contemptuous signification. Aroras are kirars, though no doubt they may not be pleased to be called so, but the provocation was first given by Punjab Mal who spoke of Fateh Din without giving him his full name. The whole affair is a most trivial one and should never have been brought before the Court.

I set aside the conviction and sentence and acquit the petitioners.

In conclusion, I note that both in this and in the connected case Criminal Revision No. 1307 of 1921 [Muhammad Bakhsh v. Emperor (1) in which Haji Muhammad Bakhsh and two of his sons were convicted by the same Magistrate of an offence under section 447, Indian Penal Code, the circumstances are such that even if offences were held to have been committed, sentences of fine would have amply met the cases, and to sentence a man of wealth and position and his son to undergo rigorous imprisonment was utterly uncalled for.

Further, as pointed out in the order of reference in the section 447 case, when evidence and arguments were completed on Wednesday, 10th August 1921, the delaying of judgment till 4 o'clock on the afternoon of Saturday the 13th August 1921, is certainly a matter which suggests that the Magistrate had in view the fact that the convicts would find difficulty in applying promptly for bail—the 14th, 15th and 16th August being holidays. Copy of this judgment will be sent to the District Magistrate who should ask the Magistrate to report whether there is any explanation forthcoming for the delay in pronouncing judgment in these two petty cases from the 10th till the 13th August. I would also call the attention of the District Magistrate to the fact that the Crown was represented at the hearing of the two cases in this Court, though they certainly were not cases in which the Crown should have been represented and I feel sure that it could not have been the intention of the District Magistrate that the Crown should be represented.

Criminal application for revision from an order passed by the First Class Magistrate, at Ahmednagar.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—The complainant in this case charged the accused with the commission of the offense of criminal breach of trust punishable under section 409 of the Indian Penal Code. The complaint was lodged in the Court of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, First Class, Ahmednagar. After a charge had been framed and after the accused had re-called some of the prosecution witnesses for cross-examination and cited witnesses in his own defense, an objection was taken that the Court had no jurisdiction to try the case. The Magistrate held that the objection could not be sustained, as section 179 of the Criminal Procedure Code applied. The accused has applied to this Court in revision to set aside this order of the Magistrate. Section 179 says :—

"When a person is accused of the commission of any offense by reason of anything which has been done, and of any consequence which has ensued, such offense may be inquired into or tried by a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction any such thing has been done, or any such consequence has ensued."

In this case the complainant had sent cotton from Ahmednagar to Bombay to the accused for sale as his commission agent. The charge that has been framed against him is under section 409 of the Indian Penal Code which deals with criminal breach of trust by a public servant or by a banker, merchant or agent. Now, it seems clear that one of the consequences of criminal breach of trust, if committed by an agent, would be loss to the person to whom the property entrusted to the agent belonged, and, therefore, as the complainant would be entitled to get the proceeds of the cotton sent to Bombay paid to him in Ahmednagar, if the proceeds were not paid to him, loss would be incurred at Ahmednagarand, therefore, the Court at Ahmednagar would have jurisdiction. Reliance is placed on section 181 (2) of the Criminal Procedure Code, but that section in no way restricts the provisions of section 179, since it merely provides that—

"The offense of criminal misappropriation or of criminal breach of trust may be inquired into or tried by a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction any part of the property which is the subject of the offense was received or retained by the accused person, or the offense was committed."

There is nothing, therefore, in that section which prevents a Court, within whose local limits any consequence of an offense has ensued, having jurisdiction to try the offense.

Counsel for the accused relied on the case of Simhachalam v. Rati Kanta Laha (Emperor) (1). The important paragraph of the judgment in that case is at the bottom of page 915* :—

"Now, for the application of section 179 it is essential that the offense should depend on an act done and on a consequence

(1) 41 Ind. Cas. 138; 44 C. 912; 21 C. W. N. 573; 25 C. L. J. 451; 18 Cr. L. J. 762.

which has ensued. But loss to one person, though a normal result of an act of misappopriation by another, is not an essential ingredient of the offense of criminal misappropriation. The offense is complete if the conversion is done with the intention of causing wrongful gain to the offender irrespective of any loss which may ensue to any other person. The offence does not depend on the consequense which has ensued but only on the act which has been done. Section 179, therefore, does not in terms apply."

In Rambilas, In re (2) the learned Judges said :—

"The offense of criminal breach of trust is completed (assuming a preliminary trust) by the misappropriation or conversion of the property (in this case the cash proceeds of the hundis) dishonestly, i. e., with the intention of causing wrongful gain or wrongful loss. It is only the intention which is essential. Whether wrongful gain or loss actually results is immaterial, it is a consequense, but no essential part of the offence and a person is not accused of the offence by reason of it."

A contrary view was taken in Queen-Empress v. O'Brien (3). Edge, C. J. said :—

"The case against the applicant is one of an offence alleged to have been committed by him under section 403 of the Indian Penal Code. The contention on his behalf is that, if he committed any offence, it was committed in Lower Bengal and not within the Magistrate's jurisdiction at Cawnpore. Of course, I express no opinion whatever as to whether the applicant committed an offence at all. That matter has yet to be decided. If, however, he parted with goods of his employers in Lower Bengal and did not remit the price of those goods, as he was bound to do, to his employers in Cawnpore, it appears to me that the case comes within section 179 of the Code of Criminal Procedure ; that the consequense of the applicant having made away with, for his own purposes, goods of his employers in Lower Bengal, or the price of them, if he did so, was that a loss of the value of those goods ensued to his employers in Cawnpore. It might be very difficult to prove where the actual offence of breach of trust was committed. Of course, the applicant denies he has committed any. At one time he said the goods were on their way to Cawnpore. Another time he said the goods were at Lucknow. The goods have disappeared. The applicant went to Cawnpore and failed to account. The matter can be inquired into at Cawnpore, and the Magistrate at Cawnpore has jurisdiction in the case."

In my opinion, the argument of the learned Chief Justice should be preferred to the arguments of the learned Judges in Simhachalam v. Rati Kanta Laha (Emperor) (1) and Rambilas, In re (2). The decision in Queen-Empress v. O'Brien (3) was followed by the Allahabad High Court in George Langridge v. Grace Atkins (4). The whole question seems to me to depend on whether we must give to the word "consequense" in section 179 its ordinary grammatical meaning or whether we are bound to restrict it to meaning a consequence which is a necessary ingredient of the offence. I see no justification for holding that the ordinary meaning should not be given to the word "consequense" in section 179, and the argument in Queen-Empress v. O'Brien (3) seems clearly pertinent in reference to this point. For instance, an agent might be given goods by his employer to sell at various places, and if he performed the trust imposed upon him he would be bound to pay the proceeds of the goods which had been sold to his employer. If he did not, and if his employer charged him with criminal misappropriation, it would be exceedingly difficult to prove at what place he had sold any part of the goods and misappropriated the proceeds. It seems to me that section 179 was intended to apply to such cases so as to enable an employer to file his complaint in the Court within whose jurisdiction the loss was alleged to have been incurred. In my opinion, therefore, the decisions of the Allahabad High Court should be followed and there is no reason to admit this application for revision of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate's order.

Madras City Police Act (III of 1888), s. 71 (xi), scope of—Applicability of section to obstruction caused otherwise than by vehicles and animals—Intention, proof of, when necessary.

Clause (xi) of section 71 of the Madras City Police Act covers a case of obstructing a thoroughfare in any manner and is not limited to obstruction caused by vehicles and animals. In the case of obstruction by vehicles and animals there is no question of intention. The act and obstruction caused by the act are sufficient. In other cases intention is necessary to be proved in addition to the obstruction.

Case referred for the orders of the High Court, under section 432, Criminal Procedure Code, by the President of the Honorary Magistrate's Court, Egmore, Madras, in his order, dated 16th June 1921.

Mr. K. P. M. Menon, Crown Prosecutor, for the Crown.

ORDER.—I think clause xi of section 71 of the City Police Act covers a case of obstructing a thoroughfare in any manner and is not limited to obstruction caused by vehicles and animals. There is no reason to suppose that the Legislature intended to permit all other kinds of obstructions and punish only obstruction by vehicles or animals. There is a semi-colon before the sentence "or in any way wilfully obstructs, etc." In the case of obstruction by vehicles and animals there is no question of intention —the act and the obstruction caused by the act are sufficient. In other cases intention is necessary to be proved in addition to the obstruction. These are questions of fact to be determined by the Magistrate. The fact that Act III of 1889 contains clause (6) to section 3 which deals with exposing goods for sale so as to cause obstruction which follows clause (5) which is similar in terms to clause xi of the City Police Act affords no guide to the interpretation of the City Police Act. Probably, the Legislature intended to place the matter beyond all doubt.

I am of opinion that the accused will be guilty of an offence under clause xi of section 71 of the City Police Act if the requisite intention and the fact of obstructions are proved.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 107—Security to keep peace—Accused willing to give security—Sufficient ground.

The mere statement of a person that he is willing to give security is not sufficient ground for taking security from him for keeping the peace. [p. 640, col. 1.]

Case reported by the District Magistrate, Jhang, with his No. 933 of the 23rd August 1921.

FACTS.—Maula Dad of village Potoki lodged an application under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, against twenty-five persons. The Magistrate sent it to a Naib-Tahsildar for local investigation who reported that the parties were at quarrel over a piece of land, and that there was a danger of breach of peace by them. The Magistrate issued necessary notices under section 107, Criminal Procedure Code, against all. Karm, Ahmad, etc. twelve in all, (present appellants) did not offer any defence, and were bound over on their own statement. The others defended themselves, out of whom seven were discharged, and six put on security. Karam, etc., apply for revision.

GROUNDS.—There is only one general section in the Criminal Procedure Code under which complaints can be referred to other persons for local enquiry, i.e., 202. But it relates to complaints only. An application under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, is not a complaint and hence it cannot be sent to another person for local investigation under that section. Section 148 allows it but a First Class Magistrate has no power under it, DANAPPA NARSAPPA, In re.

Hence the Magistrate's order for local investigation was without authority and consequently irregular.

Moreover, the appellants' statements on which they have been bound over runs as follows:—"There is no danger of breach of peace by me, nor do I create disturbance. I am ready to furnish security for satisfaction of the Court. I offer no defence." This surely does not amount to an admission that the accused was likely to commit a breach of the peace, and there is no other proof against them. They could not be legally put on security, Emperor v. Sheolan (1) and Prem Singh v. Emperor (2) are rulings on the point. The Magistrate's order being irregular, I submit the case to the High Court for its cancellation, and order a fresh enquiry in accordance with law.

Mr. B D. Qureshi, for the Petitioners.

ORDER.—The rulings quoted by the learned District Magistrate, who has referred this case, viz., Emperor v. Sheodan (1) and Prem Singh v. Emperor (2), are clear authorities that the mere statement of a person that he is willing to give security is not sufficient ground for taking security from him for keeping the peace

I, therefore, cancel the order of the Magistrate calling on the twelve persons concerned to give security. The District Magistrate recommends "a fresh enquiry in accordance with law." I need only remark that the period for which the petitioners were ordered to give security has already expired. If now or at any future time it should be shown that there is still reason to apprehend a breach of the peace fresh proceedings can, of course, be started.

Sanction to prosecute ought not to be given unless the Court giving sanction has satisfied itself that there are very favourable chances of obtaining a conviction

When sanction is given to prosecute a witness for giving false evidence, the actual statements which are alleged to be false should be mentioned in the sanction.

Criminal appeal from an order passed by the Sessions Judge, Bijapur.

Mr. P. B. Shingne, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. S. Patkar, Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The two applicants gave evidence in the case in which the opponents were charged with murder and were acquitted. The opponents then asked the Court to sanction the prosecution of the applicants for giving false evidence. Notice to show cause why sanction should not be given was issued on the applicants, but for some reason or other they did not appear. The Sessions Judge gave sanction to prosecute without giving any reasons. It may be that the evidence given by the applicants was false, or it may be that the Trying Judge was justified in merely holding that he did not believe it. But sanction ought not to be given unless the Court giving sanction has satisfied itself that there are very favourable chances of obtaining a conviction. Having considered the evidence given by the applicants, we do not consider it by any means certain that the prosecution could prove that the applicants had given false evidence under the provisions of section 193, Indian Penal Code. In these circumstances, it is not advisable that sanction should be given. It may be noted that it is not the Government which are asking for sanction, but the accused in the case, who were acquitted, and who were thus influenced by embittered feelings against these witnesses for the prosecution Therefore, the sanction given to prosecute the applicants will be set aside. It is desirable to add that when sanction is given to prosecute for giving false evidence, the actual statements which are alleged to be false should be mentioned in the sanction.

Under the Muhammadan Law of pre-emption, it is necessary that the demands should be made immediately after the pre-emptor knows of the sale. Where it is in evidence that the plaintiff knew of the transfer two or three months before the demands were made, the demands were not made as required by law and he could not claim pre-emption.

First appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Moradabad, dated the 8th May 1919.

Messrs. O'Conor and M. Ishaq Khan, for the Appellant.

Dr. S. M. Sulaiman and Mr. Abu Ali, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The parties to this appeal are related to each other. The plaintiff-appellant, Abdul Rahman, is the uncle of Abdul Hai, defendant respondent No. 2. Musammat Rifaqtulnissa, respondent No. 1, is the wife of Abdul Hai. It appears that before the ceremony of marriage took place between the defendants-respondents, one of the conditions of the marriage was that Abdul Hai should transfer a portion of his property of the value of Rs. 15,000 to his fiancé. Accordingly, on the 5th of January 1918, Abdul Hai executed a sale deed in favour of Musammat Rifaqtulnissa in respect of property the value of which was mentioned in the deed to be Rs. 15,000. The deed was registered on the 8th of January 1918. On the same day Abdul Hai was married to Rifaqtulnissa. On the 7th of January 1919 Abdul Rahman, the plaintiff, brought the suit out of which this appeal has arisen for possession of the property conveyed by the deed of the 5th of January 1918 on the ground of pre-emption. He stated in his plaint that he was unaware of the transfer by Abdul Hai to defendant-respondent No. 1 until three or four months prior to his giving evidence in the Court below. As soon as he heard of the sale he made the first demand at his own house where the news was received, and the second demand at a field called "Anrwala" which is part of the property sought to be pre empted. He also went to Moradabad to the residence of the father of Musammat Rifaqtulnissa and made a demand as a pre-emptor at her father's house. Finding that his demands were not complied with he filed the present suit.

For the defence the claim was resisted on various grounds. It was urged on behalf of the respondents that the demands were not made by the plaintiff according to law and within time nor did they satisfy the formalities laid down by the Muhammadan Law. Moreover, the transfer in favour of Rifaqtulnissa was in lieu of her prompt dower and such a transfer was not, under the Muhammadan Law, liable to pre-emption. Both parties gave evidence and the learned Subordinate Judge, after carefully considering the evidence in the case, found against the plaintiff and dismissed his claim. We have heard the learned Counsel in support of the appeal and we have examined the evidence on the record. We are of opinion that the appeal must fail. It is in evidence on behalf of the plaintiff that he knew of the transfer of the 5th of January 1918, three months at least prior to his having made his demand according to Muhammadan Law. One of his witnesses is Bunyad Beg, and the latter says that for two or three months before the demands were made the plaintiff had an intention of bringing a suit for pre-emption in respect of the sale-deed. He made up his mind to bring a suit when he claimed pre emption. He said so also when he fulfilled the conditions of pre emption. From the statement of Bunyad Beg it is obvious that the demands required by the Muhammadan Law were not made immediately after learning of the sale in question by the plaintiff. He, therefore, cannot succeed in his present claim. It would serve no useful purpose to discuss and dispose of other points raised in the appeal. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs including fees in this Court on the higher scale.

Mortgage, usufructuary—Subsequent mortgage—Stipulation that second mortgage to be redeemed along with first—Redemption—Amount payable—Limitation.

Certain property was mortgaged to the defendant with possession and the agreement was that the mortgage should be redeemable on payment of the principal amount, the profits of the land being set off against the interest Subsequently, a further charge was created on the same land in favour of the defendant. In this second mortgage-deed it was stipulated that the monies due thereunder would be paid at the time of the redemption of the first mortgage. More than twelve years after this mortgage the plaintiff sued for redemption:

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to redeem the land only on payment of the amount due under both the mortgages.

Kesar Kunwar v. Kashi Ram, 30 Ind. Cas. 777; 37 A. 634; 13 A. L. J. 889, dissented from.

Appeal from an order of the District Judge, at Karnal, dated the 29th October 1917, confirming that of the Senior Sub-Judge, Rohtak.

Dr. Nand Lal, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—In this suit the plaintiffs sought to obtain possession of 6 bighas 15 biswas of land from the defendants. As originally framed, the suit was for possession without the payment of any monies but subsequently the claim was altered into one for redemption of a mortgage on payment of Rs. 1,125, the mort gage deed being dated the 23rd January 1892. The property was in the possession of the defendants as mortgagees under this mortgage, the same being redeemable on payment of the principal amount, the profits of the land being set off against the interest. Subsequent to this mortgage, a further charge was created on the same land under a mortgage deed dated the 7th November 1896. The sum due under this mortgage was Rs. 200 together with compound interest at 2 per cent. In this second mortgage-deed it was stipulated that the monies due thereunder would be paid at the time of the redemption of the first mortgage. The Courts below have granted the plaintiffs a decree for redemption on the payment of Rs. 1,12[illegible], the monies due under the second mortgage being disallowed on the authority of Kesar Kunwar v. Kashi Ram (1). The Trial Court held, on apparently very insufficient grounds, that the second mortgage had been executed under undue influence. The Appellate Court, however, bases its decision solely on the Allahabad authority referred to above.

The mortgagees have preferred this second appeal through Dr. Nand Lal and in it they take exception to the rejection of the charge created by the second mortgage. Dr. Nand Lal has contended that the law propounded in Kesar Kunwar v. Kashi Ram (1) is not correct, and has also endeavoured to distinguish that authority from the present case. In the Allahabad case, as in the present one, there was an original mortgage followed by a second mortgage. There, however, in the second mortgage which was for a sum of Rs. 95, it was stipulated that the second mortgage was to be first paid off and after that the original mortgage was to be redeemed. The mortgagor sued to redeem the original mortgage and the mortgagee pleaded the stipulation contained in the second mortgage alleging that the second mortgage had not been paid off. The learned Judges of the Allahabad High Court considered that on the date on which this plea was raised any remedy the mortgagee might have had under the second mortgage was barred, and on that ground decreed the mortgagor's claim to redeem his mortgage without payment of the amount due under the second deed. With all deference to their Lordships, we are unable to accept the proposition of law enunciated by them. The mortgagee was in possession and time could not run against him as a defendant in a redemption suit though it might have run against him had he brought a suit for foreclosure on the second mortgage. The right subsisted although the remedy may have come to an end. We are supported in this view by the authorities cited by Rustomjee in his Law of Limitation at page 20 and Starling on Limitation, page 144.

The present case is also distinguishable from the Allahabad case in that the second mortgage was redeemable at the same time as the original mortgage, a circumstance that the Courts below appear to have lost sight of. In the Allahabad case a suit by the mortgagees on their second mortgage was maintainable at any time within the period of limitation whereas in the present case no suit by the mortgagee on the second mortgage could be maintained until the first mortgage had been paid off.

(1) 30 Ind. Cas. 777; 37 A. 634; 13 A. L. J. 889.

In these circumstances, we allow this appeal and modify the decree by directing that the mortgagors shall pay a further sum of Rs. 200 before the land can be redeemed.

We may note that the appellants originally claimed a very large sum by way of interest on the second mortgage but they have confined their appeal to this Court to the principal amount, i. e., Rs. 200.

The appellants will get his costs throughout.

Easements Act (V of 1882), s. 43—Permanent change—Additional burden on servient tenement—Easement, extinction of.

A owned two houses, one a bigger one and the other a smaller one. He had the prescriptive right to flow the dirty water of the drain of the smaller house on to the house of the defendant. He, however, constructed a privy on his bigger house and connected its drain with the older drain of the smaller house and began to flow the water of both on to the defendant's house. The defendant blocked up the drain completely, thus stopping the flow of water of both houses. A sued to have the drain opened:

Held, that the plaintiff did not lose his entire right under section 43 of the Easements Act, as the additional burden could easily be reduced to its original limits by cutting up or blocking the connection between the new privy and the earlier drain, and that, therefore, he was entitled to a decree conditional on his severing the connection between them [p. 644, col. 1]

Letters Patent Appeal against a decree of Mr. Justice Walsh, dated the 5th August 1920.

The Hon'ble Syed Raza Ali, for the Appellant.

Mr Harnandan Prasad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—We are of opinion that the decree of the lower Appellate Court must be affirmed, because we are unable to see upon what principle it has been decided that the statutory right which the plaintiff has as owner of house No. 2 to discharge his water into the drain of the defendant's house No. 3 has been extinguished. It is true that the plaintiff was a wrong-doer when, having built on house No. 2, a new privy he connected that up with the drain which had hitherto carried water from one privy alone in house No. 2 to house No. 3. The method by which he connected up the new privy with the old drain was in one sense permanent and in another sense not permanent, because it was capable of being blocked or cut away in a very short time. It is clear law that if a man has, for instance, a right to walk across a certain field, he does not lose that right of walking across that field merely because he commences to drive across it in a carriage, that is, he is not penalised and deprived of his right of using the land by walking over it because he has asserted and wrongfully exercised the right to pass over it in a carriage.

The remedy open to the owner of the servient tenement is to proceed against the person who claims the wrongful enlarged user and on his refusal to desist from his conduct to take proceedings for an injunction. At one time it was thought that the right to ancient light could be lost by pulling down a building which had acquired a right to lights and that the newly erected building did not have the privilege attaching to the ancient lights in the previous building. That, however, is not law to day, and indeed on this question of abandonment of ancient rights there have been several recent cases mainly relating to light and air. The case of Harris v. Flower & Son (1) is a case in point on the question of abandonment.

Reliance has been placed upon section 43 of the Indian Easements Act, but we question whether the permanent change referred to in this section does not mean such a change as, for instance, the construction of a building with 12 or 14 large windows in place of three or four smaller ones. That is a permanent change in the dominant heritage and the owner of the servient tenement cannot reduce the burden without interfering with what undoubtedly was prior rights of the owner of the building, namely, to have light and air to the smaller number of buildings. If, therefore, whatever steps the servient tenement can take must necessarily interfere with the lawful enjoyment of the original arrangement and the additional burden cannot be reduced, then his easement is extinguished. Here, however, the burden can be reduced without difficulty to its original limits. The connection between the new privy and the drain from No. 2 that passes into No. 3 can be blocked up or cut away and the parties will, in all respects, be reverted to their original position as it was before the plaintiff wrongfully connected up the new privy with the old drain. We, therefore, think that the decree made by the Court of first instance which was affirmed by the lower Appellate Court was a proper decree and this appeal must be allowed. We accordingly set aside the decree of the learned Judge of this Court and restore that of the lower Appellate Court. We direct the parties to bear their own costs.

Messrs. Sunil Madhab Mullick and Narendra Nath Sen, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Abani Bhusan Mukherji, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff brought a suit under section 9 of the Specific Relief Act for recovery of possession of a plot of land on the allegation that it belonged to him and one Haladhar, his uncle; but that he alone had been in possession thereof and that he had been dispossessed by the defendant.

The defense was that Haladhar's half of the land had been given by him to his daughter under whom the defendant holds. The Munsif dismissed the suit.

It is clear on the admission of the defense that the plaintiff is entitled to possession of the eastern portion of the land in suit. It is objected that no decree can be given for recovery of possession because on the admission of the defendant there is no cause of action. The question whether there is a cause of action or not does not depend on the admission of the defendant The plaint discloses a cause of action and there is no finding that there is no cause of action.

Another objection taken is, that difficulties will arise in executing the decree. These difficulties may be left to be encountered when they do arise; but on the pleadings of the plaintiff and on the admission of the defendant it is clear that the plaintiff is entitled to a decree for recovery of possession of the eastern portion of the land in suit as admitted by the defense. The possession of the defendant over the western half of the land will be maintained. This application is, therefore, allowed with costs, the decree of the Munsif is set aside and a decree in the above form is passed. Hearing fee one gold mohur. Pensions Act (XXIII of 1871), ss. 11, 12—"Pension", meaning of—Pension given in recognition of past services, whether transferable.

The word "pension" in section 11 of the Pensions Act is used in the sense of a periodical allowance or stipend granted, not in respect of any right, privilege, perquisite or office, but on account of past services or particular merits or as compensation to dethroned princes, their families and dependents. [p. 645, col. 2.]

Secretary of State v. Khemchand Jeychand, 4 B. 432; 2 Ind Dec. (N. S) 794, followed.

An endowment consisting of the revenue of a number of villages was made by Emperor Akbar for the preservation of the tomb of a saint, Salim Chisti at Fatehpur Sikri, for the maintenance of certain religious services and for the allowance of the descendants of the said saint. In 1846 the Government took over the revenue of the villages and made arrangements for the preservation of the tomb and the performance of the religious ceremonies and set aside a specified sum to be applied in the maintenance of the saint's descendants who were declared to be pensioners of the Government entitled to draw their pensions in perpetuity from the Treasury:

Held, that inasmuch as the grant was made either in recognition of the past services of the saint or in acknowledgment of his particular merits the continuance of the pensions to the descendants was based on political considerations and as such any assignment of this pension was null and void as provided by section 12 of the Act. [p. 646, col. 2.]

Second appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Agra, dated the 25th February 1920.

Dr. Surendra Nath Sen and Mr. Narain Prasad Asthana, for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble Syed Raza Ali, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The question we have to decide in this second appeal is, whether an allowance of Rs. 60 payable every six months to the first defendant-respondent Musammat Faiyazi Begam is capable of assignment.

The allowance has been hypothecated twice to the plaintiff appellant, Harnam Das, under two deeds of the 18th June 1906 and the 23rd April 1907, respectively. The first of these deeds was executed by the lady alone; the second by herself, her husband and her son.

The claim was for Rs. 1,418-5-0 and the plaintiff mortgagee asked for a decree enabling him to recover the debt by sale of the hypothecated property. Admittedly, the question before us has to be decided with reference to the language of sections 11 and 12 of the Pensions Act (Act XXIII of 1871).

Section 11 lays down that no pension granted or continued by Government on political considerations, or on account of past services or present infirmities or as a compassionate allowance is liable to seizure, attachment, or sequestration by process of any Court in British India, at the instance of a creditor, for any demand against the pensioner, or in satisfaction of a decree or order of any such Court. And section 12 enacts that assignment of pensions mentioned in section 11 are null and void.

The allowance in dispute is obviously a "pension" in the sense that it respresents money payable periodically otherwise than in respect of a right, privilege, perquisite or office. The history of the fund out of which this allowance is paid and to which we shall presently refer makes this quite clear.

But the question remains whether it is a pension of any of the kinds mentioned in section 11 of the Act.

The Courts below have differed on this point, the First Court holding that the allowance did not fall within the scope of section 11, the lower Appellate Court being of opinion that it did. In the well-known case of Secretary of State v. Khemchand Jeychand (1) the Bombay High Court gave a definition of the pensions described in section 11 which has been accepted by other High Courts including our own. The case is reported in Secretary of State v. Khem-Chand Jeychand (1) and at page 436 the learned Judges say as follows:—

"In our opinion, the word 'pension' in section 11 is used in its ordinary and well-known sense viz., that of a periodical allowance or stipend granted, not in respect of any right, privilege, perquisite or office, but on account of past services or particular merits or as compensation to dethroned princes, their families and dependants". The history of the grant in this case is that it was made by the Emperor Akbar for the support of the descendants of Sheikh (or Shah) Salim Chishti, the famous saint whose mausoleum at Fatehpur Sikri is one of the most renowned buildings in Northern India. It appears that in the year 1569 Akbar visited the saint who was then living at the place called Sikri. It is said that Akbar, who was childless at the time, besought the prayers of the saint and in consequence of a suggestion made by the latter, sent his wife to reside at Sikri wherein the following year she gave birth to a son Salim, who was afterwards known as the Emperor Jahangir.

This event led Akbar to found a new city on the spot, Fatehpur Sikri, where he resided for a considerable period. It was here that Akbar, after the death of Salim Chishti, caused the famous cenotaph to be erected and in order to provide for its maintenance he made an endowment consisting of the revenue of a number of villages. This fund was to be devoted not only to the preservation of the tomb but also to the maintenance of certain religious services and the provision of an allowance for the saint's descendants of whom the defendant, Faiyazi Begam, is admittedly one.

In the year 1846 the British Government of the day passed certain orders regarding the manner in which the endowment fund should be administered ; these are contained in a letter from the Secretary to Government, N. W. P., to the Officiating Secretary to the Sadr Board of Revenue, No. 3246 of 1846, dated the 14th August 1846, a copy of which is on the record. From this it would appear that prior to that date the persons charged with the administration of the fund had been exercising a right of management over the villages the revenue of which had been assigned for the endowment.

It was decided that this arrangement should not continue as settlement had been made by the Government with the proprietors and it was directed that in future the revenue should be paid into the Government Treasury and the fund applied under the supervision of the Collector in accordance with the instructions contained in the letter. In this letter it was declared that the tomb of the Saint was a national architectural monument which it was the duty of the Government to keep in repair, and a portion of the fund was definitely allotted for that purpose.

Instructions were next given for the disbursement of a definite portion of the fund to meet the cost of the religious ceremonies for which the Emperor had provided.

And, lastly, a specified amount was set aside to be applied in the maintenance of the saint's descendants regarding whom it was declared that they were pensioners of the Government entitled to draw their pensions in perpetuity from the Treasury. It was laid down that they were to be registered and treated as such, and we understand that this arrangement continues to the present day and that the pension to which Faiyazi Begam is entitled, as one of Salim Chishti's descendants, is paid out as directed in the letter to which we have just referred.

On this statement of the facts it is not to be doubted that the Government in 1846 came to the decision that it was just and politic to continue the grant of the land revenue which Akbar had assigned for the purposes indicated above, and we agree with the learned District Judge that the continuance of the pensions to the descendants of the saints was based upon what may fairly be called political considerations. This being so, the pension now in dispute is one of those mentioned in section 11, and is clearly within the definition laid down by the Bombay High Court for the grant was, without doubt, originally made either in recognition of the past services of Sheikh Salim Chishti or in acknowledgment of his particular merits.

It follows, therefore, that the assignments of the pension to the plaintiff-appellant upon which he founds his claim in the present suit are null and void as provided by section 12 of the Act. The only other plea taken in the memorandum of appeal, viz., that in any case the plaintiff should have been given a simple money-decree is unsustainable. Such a claim is barred by limitation.

We dismiss the appeal with costs to the respondent including fees in this Court on the higher scale.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 120—Wakf—Alienation—Suit for declaration—Cause of action—Appeal, second—Finding of fact.

Certain land which formed part of a graveyard was brought under cultivation from time to time, and eventually defendants purchased certain portions of it. In 1915 the defendants prevented certain masons who wanted to repair some old tombs standing on the land from going on to the land. In 1919, the plaintiffs, on behalf of the Muhammadan community, brought a suit for a declaration that the land was wakf and also prayed for an injunction prohibiting the defendants from interfering with the plaintiffs' user of the land as a graveyard. It was contended that the suit was barred by time:

Held, that, in spite of the fact, that portions of the land in dispute had been brought under cultivation there had been no active interference with the plaintiffs' user of the land till 1915, and that, therefore, the suit was within time.

A finding that certain land is a graveyard is one of fact, and cannot be challenged in second appeal.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Jhang at Sargodha, dated the 29th March 1920, affirming that of the Munsif, First class, Chiniot, District Jhang, dated the 29th November 1919.

Pandit Sheo Narain, R B, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Aziz Ahmad, Zafarulla Khan, and Nice Ali, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The lower Courts have given plaintiffs a decree declaring that the land in suit, 33 kanals, 2 marlas in area, is a graveyard and wakf. They also directed that a perpetual injunction should issue against defendants Nos. 1 and 2 that they should not interfere with the plaintiffs' user of the land in suit as a graveyard. From this decree defendants Nos. 1 and 2 have filed a second appeal to this Court.

Pandit Sheo Narain, on behalf of defendants Nos. 1 and 2, has addressed elaborate arguments to the Court with the object of showing that the lower Courts finding that the land in dispute is a graveyard is erroneous, He has referred in detail to the entries in various settlements regarding the land and has pointed out that on one occasion the whole of it was entered as a graveyard and on another only 8 kanals, 7 marlas, the rest of the land being shown as banjar kadim. Subsequently, 8 kanals, 7 marlas were shown as a graveyard, part of the remaining land as banjar and a small area of 5 kanals, 7 marlas as under cultivation. It is clear that the land has been differently described at different Settlements as also in the jamabandis; but these entries have been taken into consideration by the lower Courts. There was also a local enquiry and human bones were dug up from various places in the land in dispute, and there are admittedly three old tombs standing. Considering the entries in the papers and the presence of human bones and of tombs in the land as well as the oral evidence, the lower Courts have concurred in holding that the whole of the land in dispute is a graveyard. The finding is one of fact, and, however erroneous or perverse this finding may be, this Court cannot interfere on second appeal. I, therefore, hold that the finding that the land in dispute is a graveyard is conclusive.

The only other point argued by Pandit Sheo Narain was, that the suit was barred by time. He expressly gave up the argument that it was barred by the rule of res judicata. His contention that the suit is barred by time is based upon the facts that portions of the land have, from time to time, been under cultivation and that in the Settlement of 1904-05 no part of the land is shown as a graveyard, 6 kanals, 18 marlas being entered as cultivated and the remainder 26 kanals, 4 marlas as banjar kadim. He says that the cultivation of part of the land in this way was an infringement of the plaintiffs' right and that time began to run against them at all events at the Settlement. Now, there can be no doubt that the whole of the land has not in recent years or for many years past been used as a graveyard. It is also clear that parts have from time to time been cultivated. The plaintiffs might very well have disregarded the fact that parts of the land were cultivated so long as their rights were not actively interfered with. There was an active interference in 1915 when it appears from the judgment of the lower Appellate Court that certain masons entered upon the land in order to repair the old tombs and were interfered with by the defendants. This was an overt act which interfered with the plaintiffs' right of user, but there is no evidence to show that their rights were actively interfered with before that occasion. In my opinion time did not begin to run against the plaintiffs until 1915, and the action of the defendants in that year or in the following year, when the previous suit was compromised, gave them a cause of action to bring the present suit. I hold accordingly that the present suit is not barred by time and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Where a Lambardar makes collections to the extent of 76 per cent. of the gross rental, and for the rest brings suits and obtains decrees against defaulting tenants, he acts like a prudent Lambardar, and the mere fact that some of the decrees cannot be realised, cannot constitute negligence on his part, and in such a case the co-sharers are entitled to their shares on the basis of actual collections. In a suit for profits interest at 12 per cent. is a proper rate to be allowed and it should run up to the date of realisation. [p. 649, cols. 1 & 2.]

First appeal from a decree of the Assistant Collector, First Class, Meerut, dated the 10th of January 1919.

Mr. Nihal Chand and Dr. Kailash Nath Katju, for the Appellant.

Dr. Surendra Nath Sen and Mr. Kailash Chandra Mital, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The two Appeals Nos. 166 and 172 of 1919 are connected and arise out of a suit brought by Musammat Srimati Kirpa Devi against Lala Ramchandra Sarup for the recovery of her share of the profits for the years 1320 to 1322 Fasli. The suit was instituted in the Court of the Assistant Collector of Meerut on the 31st July 1916 and it was alleged by her that the defendant Ramchandra Sarup was the Lambardar of the village Khadela and had been negligent in collecting the rents and, therefore, she was entitled to recover her share of the profits on the gross rental and not on actual realisation. She claimed Rs. 7,146.0.4 which sum included interest also. The claim was resisted on various pleas. It was urged on behalf of the defence that there was a written agreement executed between the parties on the 31st December 1914 under which all disputes outstanding between them were to be decided by one Babu Madusudan Dayal, and that as the greater portion of the claim relates to a period antecedent to the 31st December 1914 the claim of the plaintiff fails. It was further urged that, as a matter of fact, Ramchandra Sarup had referred not only the question of the amount of the share of profits due to the plaintiff, but other matters outstanding between her and himself to the arbitrator, who was considering the points in dispute when the plaintiff rushed into Court with the present suit. The defendant claimed a large amount on account of village expenses and stated that, under the agreement of the 31st December 1914, no interest was to be charged by either party on any account. The learned Assistant Collector, accepting the plea of the defence based upon the agreement of the 31st December 1914, referred the dispute to Babu Madusudan Dayal. For some reason the arbitrator did not decide the case and sent back the file to the Court. The case was tried and evidence was recorded. The lower Court passed a decree in favour of Kirpa Devi for Rs. 5,018-13-9, allowing her interest at the rate of 12 per cent. per mensem up to the date of the institution of the suit and 6 per cent. per annum pendente lite and after the decree until such time as the decree was realised.

Both parties have come up in appeal before us. The appeal of Ramchandra Sarup is No. 166 of 1919 and that of Kirpa Devi

No. 177 of 1919. We shall dispose of both the appeals by this judgment.

It is contended on behalf of Ramchandra Sarup that the lower Court was in error in decreeing the claim of the plaintiff on gross rental and not on actual collections. It appears from the evidence on the record that Ramchandra Sarup made all attempts that a careful Lambardar could make to realise rents. The amount of the actual collections shows that he realised 76 per cent. With regard to the rest he brought suits and obtained decrees against defaulting tenants.

It is urged on behalf of Kirpa Devi that the suits were brought too late and that hardly anything or nothing at all has been realised on the decrees.

We have examined some of the decrees on the record and we find that the charge of delay against Ramchandra Sarup is without any foundation. As to the realisation of the decrees, we find from the report of the kurk Amin that he once proceeded to execute the decrees but found several judgment-debtors absent, and in some cases there was nothing to attach. The fact that some of the decree cannot be realised is no fault of the Lambardar nor can it be said to constitute negligence. We are, therefore, of opinion that no negligence of the Lambardar in the collection of rents has been proved by Kirpa Devi and that the decree in her favour should proceed on the basis of actual collections.

The next point urged by the learned Counsel for Ramchandra Sarup is, that his client was not a Lambardar for 1320 Fasli and that he collected rents of that year to the extent of his share only. He should not, therefore, be made to pay anything on account of the share of Kirpa Devi. There is no force in this argument as his own principal witness, Phundan Lal, deposes that Ramchandra Sarup made collections in the entire village for the year 1320 Fasli.

The next objection to the decree of the Court below is directed to interest. The objection is taken on the basis of the agreement of the 31st December 1914. There is no force in the objection. That agreement is no more in force between the parties.

There is also an objection with regard to interest on behalf of Kirpa Devi in her Appeal No. 177 of 1919. She contends that 12 per cent. per annum should have been allowed to her till the date of the realisation of the decretal amount. We find that that is the proper rate in a case like the present and that her objection must prevail.

For Ramchandra Sarup it is further contended that he should have been allowed costs of the repairs of a well and of a haveli and other items of village expenses detailed by him in his written statement. We find that the items in question have not been proved by any reliable evidence. In our opinion he should be allowed Lambardari dues and 5 per cent. on the actual collections for village expenses.

There is one more objection to be noticed and that is on behalf of Kirpa Devi in her appeal. She says that her share of the profits for 1317-1319 Fasli should also be decreed to her on the ground that it was collected in 1320 Fasli. As we are going to decree her claim on the basis of actual collections, this objection has no force.

The result of our findings is that the plaintiff, Musammat Kirpa Devi, should get a decree for her share of profits on the basis of actual collections for the years in suit together with 12 per cent. per annum interest from the date that each instalment fell due to her up to the date of the realisation of the amount. The defendant, Ramchandra Sarup, will get Lambardari dues and 5 per cent. for village expenses on the actual collections. The account, therefore, stands thus. We take the statement prepared by the patwari as the basis of actual collections. Taking that paper as our basis, we find that the following sums are due to Kirpa Davi, namely,

for 1320 Fasli	...	Rs. 1,292-3-10
„ 1322 Fasli	...	„ 1,370-0-0

There are the net amounts. We have deducted the Lambardari dues and the village expenses. The total of these amounts comes to Rs. 3,240-11-10. We, therefore, modify the decree of the Court below and decree the claim for the plaintiff, Kirpa Devi, for Rs. 3,240 11 10 with interest at 2 per cent. per annum from the date of each kist up to the date of the realisation of the amount.

Costs are allowed to parties of both the Courts in proportion to failure and success including fees in this Court on the higher scale.

PURNA CHANDRA alias JONESWAR PODDAR AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—OPPOSITE PARTIES—RESPONDENTS.

Attachment of decree before formally drawn up, validity of—Date of decree—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 908), O XX, r. 7, O. XXI, r. 53.

When a decree is signed it relates back to the date of the judgment. It is in existence on the date of the judgment except for certain purposes (such as the computation of the period of limitation prescribed for an appeal). [p. 652, cols. 1 & 2.]

Mungniram Marwari v. Gursahai Nand, 17 C. 347; 16 I. A. 195; 13 Ind Jur. 449; 5 Sar. P. C. J. 463; 8 Ind Dec. (N' s.) 770 (P. C.), referred to.

Under a judgment passed in a suit for partition, one M. obtained certain immoveable properties in his share and was held entitled to certain sums of money (as owelty money from certain persons. Before the decree was drawn up and signed a creditor of M. applied for attachment of the money portion of the decree, and on the day following the Court sent the notice of attachment attaching the decree. Objection was made (1) that there was no decree which could have been attached and (2) that at any rate the attachment being of the decree (i.e., the whole decree) was bad as the decree related in part to immoveable property, the procedure prescribed for attachment of which had not been followed:

Held, (1) that there was a decree in favour of M. in the ordering portion of the judgment though the formal decree was not drawn up and signed; and [p. 652, col. 2.]

(2) that the notice, in so far as it directed the attachment of the other portion of the decree no doubt must be treated as ineffectual, but that did not affect the attachment of the decree in so far as it awarded a certain sum of money. [p. 652, col. 2.]

Appeal against an order of the Officiating Subordinate Judge, Second Court, Dacca, dated the 12th May 1919.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Dr. Sarat Chandra Basak (with him, Babu Debendra Chandra Pal), for the Appellants—The facts of the case shortly are these. One Mathuranath Poddar brought a suit for partition against his co-sharers and obtained certain immoveable properties and sums of money which fell in his share and for which a preliminary decree was passed. The judgment in the suit was passed on the 18th December 1917 and the decree was drawn up on the 9th December 1918. After judgment was passed, the respondents sought to attach the money decreed in Mathuranath's favour. The notice of attachment was issued on 2nd October 1918 but it was returned as the decree was not yet drawn up. They again applied for attachment of the decree on 25th November 1918 and the notice was kept filed in Court. On 27th November 1918 Mathuranath assigned all his interest in the subject-matter of the suit to the present appellants. We then applied for substitution The respondents also applied for being substituted as attaching creditors and claimed preference over us. They also questioned the bona fides of the assignment in our favour. Their application has been granted and their objections have also been upheld by the Court below. We then appealed to this Court and the case was remanded. It has been found by the Court below on remand that our assignment was valid and bona fide. My submission is, that at the time of the assignment in our favour by Mathuranath there was no subsisting decree. The decree was passed on 9th December 1918. The assignment was effected on 27th November 1918. There was no decree at that time. There was only the judgment in the suit and so long as the decree is not drawn up nothing could be attached. Refers to section 60, and Order XXI, rule 53 of the Code of Civil Procedure. My next contention is, that there was no proper attachment at all. The decree obtained by our assignor was for immoveable properties as well as for certain sums of money. They sought to attach the entire decree. I submit that is bad in law because the procedure for attachment of the decree other than for money or a mortgage-decree is different and was not followed in this case. Therefore, the notice, in so far as it directed the attachment of the other portion of the decree excepting the money, is ineffectual and, therefore, the notice was not legal and there could be no lawful attachment under the same. Under the circumstances, there having been no decree at all at the time of the assignment and the attachment not having been obtained according to the procedure prescribed by law, I submit the respondents cannot have the properties which have been found to have been assigned bona fide and validly to us.

Babu Gunada Charan Sen (with him Babu Sarat Chandra Dutt), for the Respondents.—As regards the first question raised as to whether there was a decree at the time of the assignment I submit there was a decree. The final judgment was passed on 19th December 1917. In accordance with that judgment Mathura Nath became entitled to certain properties and certain sums of money. A decree is nothing but the formal expression of an adjudication which, so far as regards the Court expressing it, conclusively determines the rights of the parties with regard to all matters in controversy in the suit. Refers to the definition of "decree," section 2 (2) of the Code of Civil Procedure. Therefore, I submit the decree was there in the judgment though not in a formal way. Refers to Mungniram Marwari v. Gursahai Nand (1). Order XX, rule 7, Civil Procedure Code. As regards the second point, I submit the notice, in so far as it relates to attachment of the money, is perfectly legal and effective. I submit the Court below was right in the judgment he has arrived at.

Dr. Sarat Chandra Basak, replied briefly.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is against an order directing the respondents to be substituted as attaching decree-holders under the following circumtances.

It appears that one Mathura Nath Poddar obtained a preliminary decree in a suit brought by him for partition against his co-sharers. Under the judgment in that case, the plaintiff, Mothura Nath, obtained certain immoveable properties in his share, and was held entitled to certain sums of money (as owelty money) from five persons. This judgment was passed on the 18th December 1917. There was considerable delay in drawing up the decree. As a matter of fact, the decree was not drawn up and signed until the 9th December 1918. After the judgment had been delivered, the respondents applied for attachment of the money portion of the decree, and notice of attachment was issued on the 2nd October 1918. It was returned on the ground that the decree had not been prepared at that time. An application was made again on the 25th November 1918 by the respondents for attachment of the decree. On the next day, the 26th November, the Court sent the notice of attachment and this time the notice was kept on the file in order that the decree might be attached after it was made. On the next day, 27th November, the judgment-debtor, Mathura Nath, assigned all his interest in the subject-matter of the suit, including the moneys which Mathura Nath was to get from his five co-sharers, to Ram Kanai Pal and others, the appellants before us. The decree was not prepared and signed until the 9th December 1918.

The assignees, Ram Kanai Pal and others, applied for being substituted in the place of Mathura Nath. The respondents, Sananda Chandra Pal and others, also applied for being substituted as attaching creditors and they contended that, as attaching creditors, they were entitled to have preference over the assignees. They also impugned the assignment itself as not being bona fide.

The Court below held that the attachment was valid and directed the respondents to be substituted as attaching decree-holders. The assignees appealed to this Court, and the case was remanded to the Court below for a finding as to the bona fides of the assignment in favour of Ram Kanai Pal and others. The Court below has come to the finding that the assignment was a bona fide one.

The first question for consideration, therefore, is, whether there was a valid attachment of the decree prior to the assignment in favour of Ram Kanai Pal and others. It is contended on behalf of the appellant that, under section 60 of the Civil Procedure Code, it is only saleable property (with certain exceptions) which can be attached, that Order XXI, rule 53 says that where the property to be attached is a decree, it shall be attached in a particular manner, that the ordering portion of a judgment merely states the conclusion at which the Court arrives and is not a decree, and that so long as the decree is not drawn up and signed there is no decree which can be attached. But the final judgment in the partition suit was passed on the 18th December 1917, under that judgment Mathura Nath became entitled to certain properties and to certain sums of money (as owelty money) from the defendants; the judgment not only gave the conclusions arrived at by the

(1) 17 C. 847; 16 I. A. 195; 13 Ind. Jur 449; 5 Sar. P. C. J. 468; 8 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 770 (P. C.).

Court, but also gave directions. He, therefore, obtained the decree on that day though the formal decree was drawn up and signed later on.

In the case of Mungniram Marwari v. Gursahai Nand (1) certain proceedings taken by the guardian of a minor were sought to be set aside on the ground that the minor had not been properly represented by the guardian as the certificate of guardianship had not been issued to him though the Court had appointed him guardian. The Judicial Committee observed (See pages 356. 357) "their Lordships are of opinion that when the Court makes that inquiry, and comes to a decision that the application should be allowed, that is doing all that is substantially necessary in the matter; and when the order is made that the applicant shall have his certificate, the applicant really then obtains his certificate. All is done at that time which is necessary to show that he is the person who should have the certificate. He, then, by getting that order, substantially obtains the certificate, although the officer of the Court, whose duty it would be to draw up the certificate, and prepare it for the signature of the Judge, or the seal of the Court to be attached to it, may not do that for some time afterwards, on account of the course of business or the party not applying to him for it. When a man obtains an order for a certificate he does in substance comply with the terms of this Act, in the same way as when a person has the judgment of the Court that he shall have a decree in his suit it may be said that he then obtains his decree. The decree, when it is drawn up afterwards, relates back to that time; and so would the certificate in this case relate back; and the terms of the Act that he shall have obtained such certificate are complied with." We think the observations may be applied to this case.

Under Order XX, rule 7 of the Civil Procedure Code the decree is to bear the date of judgment, though the decree may be signed subsequently. It is true that the decree-holder has to pay stamp duty under the Stamp Act before the decree can be drawn up But upon the payment of the stamp the decree is drawn up and signed. When it is signed it relates back to the date of the judgment. The decree, therefore, is in existence on the date of the judgment except for certain purposes (such as the computation of the period of limitation prescribed for an appeal which is to be computed from the date on which the decree is signed). We think, therefore, that there was a decree in favour of Mathura Nath in the ordering portion of the judgment though the formal decree was not drawn up and signed until the 9th December 1918 after the necessary stamp-duty was paid. It may be mentioned here that the conveyance obtained by the assignees themselves professed to transfer the decree, and the rights and interest of the judgment-debtor in the partition suit.

It is next contended on behalf of the appellants that the decree obtained by Mathura Nath was for immoveable properties as well as for certain sums of money, and the notice having directed attachment of the decree (i. e., the whole decree) and the attachment having been made accordingly, was bad because the procedure for attachment of a decree other than a decree for money or a mortgage decree, is different and was not followed. But the decree-holders applied for attachment only of the money portion of the decree, and they do not claim any right on the basis of attachment of any other portion of the decree. The notice, in so far as it directed the attachment of the other portion of the decree no doubt must be treated as ineffectual, but that does not affect the attachment of the decree in so far as it awarded certain sums of money to Mathura Nath.

The attaching decree-holders, however claimed the monies payable to Mathura Nath by three only out of the five judgment-debtors. The Court below was, therefore, wrong in directing the attaching decree-holders to be substituted in respect of the decree which directed the payment of monies by the judgment-debtors (meaning thereby all the judgment-debtors) to Mathura Nath. The order of the Court below will, therefore, be varied by ordering that the attaching decree-holders will be substituted in respect of the decree in so far as it directs payment of the sums by Gopal Chandra Poddar, Rai Mohan Poddar, and Kali Kumar Poddar, (now represented by Kamini Kumar Poddar and Akshoy Kumar Poddar) to Mathura Nath and that the assignees Ram Kanai Pal and others will be entitled to be substituted in respect of the rest of the decree. In other respects, the order of the Court below will be confirmed. No order as to costs.

Hindu Law—Gift—"Bahamah wajah," meaning of—Absolute estate.

A Hindu, who had only a widowed daughter-in-law and a widow of his deceased grandson, gifted his whole property to two persons A. and H. On his death A. and H. gifted a portion of the gifted property in favour of the daughter-in-law saying that they gave her the property "bahamah wajah":

Held, that the gift to the daughter-in-law was a gift of full proprietary rights and that the words "bahamah wajah" meant with all rights.

Second appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Meerut, dated 18th May 1920.

Mr. Mohanlal Sandal, for the Appellant.

Mr. Harnandan Parsad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Jawahra Gujar executed, on the 29th of May 1911, a deed of gift of his whole property in favour of Abhey Singh and Hardeo. Jawahra's son Nadar was dead. His grandson Munshi was dead. Nadar's widow, Musammat Mahro, and Munshi's widow, Musammat Hosheyari, were alive. Jawahra had no direct heirs. His property was property which he could transfer in his life-time as he wished. Mahro and Hosheyari could not prevent his transferring this property. Abhey Singh and Hardeo obtained complete proprietary title under the deed of gift, but after some protestations from Mahro they executed a deed of gift of 9/28ths of the property in her favour. They gave her this property "bahamah wajah", words which mean, literally, "with all causes," but which can only be taken to mean "with all rights". She obtained complete partition of her share. The question in appeal is, whether Mahro had absolute proprietary title in the 9/28ths or only a life interest. The learned District Judge has found that she had complete proprietary title. Little is to be gained by examining what was decided in other cases of grants to women. The parties are Gujars. Their views as to the proper nature of a woman's title in land are not necessarily the same as the views of other castes. As I read the deed of gift of the 29th of July 1911, the interpretation can only be that the gift to Mahro was a gift of full proprietary rights. The words mean nothing else. It is to be noted that Mahro had no claim for maintenance against Abhey Singh and Hardeo and, further, that Mahro was in no position to contest the transfer by Jawahra to Abhey Singh and Hardeo. As she had no claim on her donors for maintenance and as she could not successfully assail their title, there was no reason for them to provide her with maintenance or to give her anything. For reasons which have not been established, they evidently desired to make a settlement upon her. It is to be noted they made no settlement upon Hosheyari. They were clearly acting under no compulsion and not because they were under an obligation to maintain Mahro. In these circumstances, I see no reason why the deed which effected the transfer should not be interpreted according to its literal meaning, and, when it says that they give property, why the words should not be taken to mean that they give full proprietary rights in the property. Taking this view, I dismiss this appeal with costs.

Mortgage—Simple mortgage—Mortgagee given possession subsequently to pay himself principal and interest out of usufruct—Original contract, whether changed—Right of redemption, whether lost.

In the case of a simple mortgage in which the mortgagee has a right to bring the property to sale and the mortgagor has a right to redeem, the mortgagor does not lose his right to redeem by the fact that the mortgagee is given additional security for his money by taking possession of land and pay himself the principal and interest out of the usufruct, as the original relations of a simple mortgagee and a simple mortgagor subsist.

Lingam Krishna Bhupati v. Manya Sultan [Maharaja of Vizianagram], 10 Ind. Cas. 272; 15 C. W. N. 441; 9 M. L. T. 445; 8 A. L. J. 594; 13 C. L. J. 584; 13 Bom. L. R. 447; (1911) 1 M. W. N. 429; 21 M. L. J. 1147 (P. C.), referred to.

Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, dated 29th April 1921, in Civil Appeal No. 26 of 1921.

Messrs R. Furanik and Fida Hussein, for the Appellant.

Mr. G L. Subhedar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The lower Appellate Court has decided that this mortgage cannot be redeemed since, at the present date, it is purely a usufructuary mortgage. The terms of the mortgage were that the mortgage-money including interest should be paid in two instalments. This was a covenant to pay. Failing the payment of any one instalment, the mortgagee was entitled to take possession of the property and pay himself the principal and interest out of the usufruct. The lower Appellate Court has held that whatever the mortgage may originally have been, it is now purely a usufructuary mortgage since by a suit the mortgagee has got possession of the land.

I have not been able to find a case exactly on all fours with the present. The nearest one I can find is that reported as Lingam Krishna Bhupati v. Manya Sultan [Maharaja of Vizianagram] (1) but the terms in that case were not identical with the terms here. After a careful consideration, I am of opinion that the mortgage undoubtedly started as a simple mortgage in which the mortgagee had a right to bring the property to sale and the mortgagor had a right to bring a suit for redemption. The mortgagee was not put in possession and there is a covenant to pay. I do not find that the mortgagor has lost his right of redemption by the fact that the mortgagee was given an additional security for his money by taking possession of the land; the original relations of a simple mortgagee and a simple mortgagor, I am of opinion, are still subsisting. For this reason, I am of opinion that the appellant mortgagor has a right to bring a suit for redemption. This is not a suit brought under section 62 of the Transfer of Property Act since the mortgagor admits that the money is still due. The suit should be treated as one for redemption and the appellant may redeem.

Other grounds of appeal were raised by the mortgagee in his appeal to the lower Appellate Court which have not been disposed of by the lower Appellate Court. I, therefore, remand the appeal for further trial, it being decided that the mortgagor is entitled to redeem. Costs will be costs in the suit. There will be a refund certificate.

Second appeal from a decision of the Second Additional District Judge, Aligarh, dated 25th of February 1920.

Mr. Pearylal Banerji, for the Appellant.

Mr. Panna Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT —The facts which have given rise to this second appeal are as follows:— On the 17th of August 1900 one Debi Das made a mortgage of his property to one Dao Karan Das. Debi Das' rights were sold at auction in execution of a simple money decree and purchased by Jwala Prasad, a son of the mortgagor. On the 30th of March 1911 Jwala Prasad got possession. On the 5th of May 1912 Jwala Prasad sold the property to his brother, Mathura Prasad, who had been adopted by an uncle of his. On the 25th of July 1912 Mathura Prasad sold the property to his wife, Musammat Rampia. The plaintiff is the son of the original mortgagee, Dao Karan Das. During his minority a suit was brought by his next friend and uncle, Chiranji Lal, on the 21st of September 1912 to enforce the above mortgage. To this suit neither Mathura Prasad nor Musammat Rampia, the transferees of the property, were impleaded. The then plaintiff got a decree for sale, put the property to sale and purchased it himself on the 2nd of June 1917. When he went to take possession of the property he was resisted by Musammat Rampia, defendant No. 1, who took an objection saying that she was the owner of the property and that she not having been a party to the decree was not bound by it. That objection was allowed and the plaintiff failed to obtain possession of the property. The plaintiff has now brought this suit for setting aside the order of the Execution Court passed on the 23rd of April 1918 disallowing his application for being put into possession and in the alternative he sues for sale on the mortgage. The amount which he claims is the amount mentioned in the final decree for sale. Several defences were taken to this suit. The one which has been pressed before us is that a second suit did not lie on the mortgage. The Trial Court repelled this contention and gave the defendant an opportunity to redeem on payment of the amount due under the mortgage. The lower Appellate Court has confirmed that decision. The defendant comes here in second appeal. We think the Courts below have come to a correct conclusion in holding that, in the circumstances, the second suit lay on the mortgage. We are of opinion that there is no force in the grounds of appeal objecting to the present suit on the ground that a second suit on the mortgage did not lie. The result of the plaintiff not impleading the present defendant in the previous suit was that she was not given an opportunity which she ought to have been given of redeeming the plaintiff's mortgage That opportunity was the only right which she could claim. The mere fact that she purchased the property would not do away with the mortgage. The opportunity has been given to her by the Courts below and in our opinion she is not entitled to any further right. There is no force in this appeal and we dismiss it with costs including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

There is one point on which we wish to amend the decree of the First Court confirmed by the Second Court and it is this, that the plaintiff will be entitled to a decree for sale of the property in case the defendant does not pay the amount due to him within six months from this date. In case of the defendant's failure to do so, the property will be sold by auction. As the mortgage on which the suit was brought was a simple mortgage no decree for foreclosure could be passed. The decree will be prepared under Order XXXIV, rule 4. The plaintiff-respondent is entitled to his costs of this appeal including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

ISHAN CHANDRA DIASI v. RAM PROSAD AICH.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

CIVIL RULES NOS. 215 TO 219 OF 1921.

July 18, 1921.

Present:—Sir Lancelot Sanderson, KT., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Richardson.

ISHAN CHANDRA DIASI AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—PETITIONERS

RAM PROSAD AICH AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—OPPOSITE PARTIES.

Landlord and tenant—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), ss. 35, 105—Settlement of fair rent—Enhancement of rent, when inequitable.

Section 35 of the Bengal Tenancy Act means, that the Court, when considering an application for the settlement of fair rents under section 105 of the Act, has to take into consideration all the facts of the particular case and has to take into consideration the rules which are set out in the Act relating to the particular application, and then, before it allows an enhancement, the Court must be satisfied that, under the circumstances of the case, the enhancement is fair and equitable.

Guru Charan Nandi v. Sarab Ali, 52 Ind. Cas. 79; 30 C. L. J. 9; 23 C. W. N. 1041, explained.

The effect of section 35 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is not that a Court is bound to allow some enhancement of rent even though it finds that the lands are periodically flooded by water and that the rents are already too high.

Rule against an order of the Second Additional Special Judge, Midnapur.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Nagendra Nath Ghose, for the Petitioners.—The defendants are the petitioners. These applications arise out of proceedings under section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act for settlement of fair rents. The Revenue Officer found that the defendants were occupancy raiyats but refused to enhance the rents inasmuch as that the existing rents were already high and that the defendants suffer damages of crops on account of inundations of the river Cossaye. On appeal the Special Judge, however, allowed enhancement at the rate of one anna in the rupee. I submit the learned Judge has taken a wrong view of the law as laid down in seciton 35 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Reads section 35, Bengal Tenancy Act. The case of Guru Charan Nandi v. Sarab Ali (1) is distinguishable. The learned Judge has found in our favour as to the facts that we suffer damages from inundation and that the existing rate of rents is high but he seems to labour under the erroneous impression that he is bound to enhance the rent under section 35 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. I submit that is clearly against the intention of the Legislature. The case in Guru Charan Nandi v. Sarab Ali (1) has been misapplied.

Babu Monmatha Nath Ray (with him Babu Sitaram Banerjee), for the Opposite Parties.—I submit the learned Judge has taken a correct view of the law. Refers to sections 30—35 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Section 35 is a gerenal section. In the present case the learned Judge has taken into consideration all the facts and circumstances and was satisfied that the enhancement allowed by him was reasonable and fair. The enhancement allowed by the law is 4 annas in the rupee but in the present case the learned Judge, after carefully considering the facts of the case, has enhanced at the rate of one anna in the rupee. Under the circumstances, I think, the other side has not made out any case for your interference.

Babu Nagendra Nath Ghose replied in brief.

JUDGMENT.

SANDERSON, C. J.—This is a Rule calling upon the opposite party to show cause why the judgment and decree of the Special Judge of Midnapore complained of should not be set aside, or why such other or further order should not be made as to this Court might seem fit and proper.

The matter arose in respect of certain applications which were made by the landlords for the settlement of fair rents under section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

The Revenue Officer found that the defendants in these cases were ordinary occupancy raiyats. He also found on a comparison of the prices of staple food crops that the maximum enhancement under section 32 (b) was 4 annas in the rupee. He, however, refused to allow the landlords any enchancement on the ground that the lands were subject to inundation as there was no embankment on the river Cossaye and that the crops were damaged and the rents were already high.

The Special Judge who heard the appeal, after reciting what the Revenue Officer had found went on to say this: "There are, however, no grounds for refusing to allow the enhancement wholly, in view of section 35, Bengal Tenancy Act, and the decision in the case of Guru Charan Nandi v. Sarab Ali (1), and the appellants are entitled to some enhancement. In the circumstances, I allow enhancement at one anna in the rupee."

The learned Vakil who supported this Rule, has urged that the learned Special Judge has put a wrong interpretation upon section 35 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and the case to which the learned Judge referred: and he has asked this Court to interpret the Special Judge's judgment as meaning that, although the Revenue Officer had come to the conclusion that the landlords were entitled to no enhancement by reason of the lands being inundated and rents bei g already high, he, the Special Judge, was bound to allow some enhancement by reason of section 35 and the decision of this Court in Guru Charan Nandi v. Sarab Ali (1). In my judgment, that is not the proper interpretation to put upon the learned Judge's judgment. In fact, in my judgment, it is impossible for him to have meant that; in the first place, when one looks at the words of the section it is quite clear what section 35 means. The section is as follows: "Notwithstanding anything in the foregoing sections, the Court shall not in any case decree any enhancement which is under the circumstances of the case unfair or inequitable." The 'foregoing sections' which are referred to in section 35 obviously are, amongst others, section 30 which sets out the conditions under which the landlord may ask for enhancement of rent. The conditions are set out in the headings (a), (b), (c) and (d); (b) is the one which applies to this case, "that there has been a rise in the average local prices of staple food crops during the currency of the present rent." Then, section 31 deals with the rules as to enhancement on the ground of the prevailing rate. Sections 31A and 31B deal with the same matter. Then we come to section 32 which sets out the rule as to enhancement on the ground of the rise in prices. Section 33 sets out the rules as to enhancement on the ground of the landlord's improvement. Section 34 sets out the rules as to enhancement on the ground of increase in productive powers due to fluvial action. Those sections deal with the four sets of conditions which are enumerated in section 30 and, then comes section 35, which I have already read, which is a section of a general nature and the meaning of which, to my mind, is plain. It means, that the learned Special Judge when considering these cases has to take into consideration all the facts of the particular case and has to take into consideration the rules which are set out in the Bengal Tenancy Act relating to the particular application, and then, before he allows an enhancement, he must be satisfied that, under the circumstances of the case, the enhancement is fair and equitable. The provision, no doubt, is inserted for the protection of the tenant, because it says: "notwithstanding anything in the foregoing sections, the Court shall not in any case decree any enhancement which is under the circumstances of the case unfair or inequitable." In the face of such a provision, it seems to me impossible that the learned Special Judge has interepreted the decision to which he has referred as meaning that, in spite of the findings of the Revenue Officer with regard to the flooding and the rents being high already, he must allow some enhancement of rent. The passage which is referred to is in the case of Guru Charan Nandi v. Sarab Ali (1), and the passage is at page 13* viz, "Much stress was laid by the learned Pleader for the respondent on the concluding portion of the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge where he says that the plaintiffs are not entitled equitably to enchancement of rent. The only ground upon which the learned Subordinate Judge so held is the position of the land by the side of a river and there being no crops grown on it. We do not think that that is what is contemplated by section 35 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. That section, we think, relates to the amount of assessment and does not refer to the grounds upon which a Court has to determine whether enhancement should be allowed or not." I confess I am not quite clear what the learned Judges had in their minds when they said what I have just read in their judgment, but I am quite clear that they did not decide that the effect of section 35 was that the learned Special Judge was bound to allow some enhancement of rent even though the Revenue Officer had found that the lands were flooded by the water from the river periodically and that the rents were already high. In my judgment, the question which the learned Special Judge had to decide was one of fact. As I read his judgment, he decided that question of fact after taking into consideration the findings at which the First Court had arrived and the rules which are laid down in the Bengal Tenancy Act for enhancement of rent in this particular case. I understand the learned Judge to have decided that, although the enhancement would ordinarily be 4 annas in the rupee yet, having regard to the other facts in the case, namely, that the lands were subject to inundation and that the present rents were already high, taking all these facts into consideration, in his judgment, it would not be fair or equitable to allow an enhancement to the extent of 4 annas. Consequently, taking all the facts of the case into consideration, the learned Judge came to the conclusion that it would be fair and equitable to allow an enchancement at one anna in the rupee: and that was the result of his judgment.

For these reasons, in my judgment, this Rule must be discharged. We make no order as to costs.

This judgment will apply to the other Rules which are accordingly discharged without costs.

Appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Betul, dated the 18th January 1921, in Civil Suit No. 23 of 1919.

Messrs. M. R. Dixit and Atmaram Bhagwant, for the Appellants.

Sir Bepin Krishna Bose and Mr. K. K. Gandhe, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit on a mortgage, dated 14th June 1902, executed in favour of the plaintiffs' father, Punjaji, by the defendant No. 1, Venkat Rao, for himself and as guardian of his younger minor brother, Narayan Rao, the defendant No. 2. The consideration for the mortgage was Rs. 500 advanced in cash and it was to carry compound interest at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum. The plaintiffs claimed foreclosure of the mortgaged property in lieu of Rs. 6,122 6-0 said to be due on the mortgage.

2. One of the points taken in defence, and which proved successful in the lower Court, was that the mortgage-deed in suit was not validly attested. It is urged for the appellants that the evidence adduced in the case was not properly appreciated. The writer of the mortgage deed is dead and the two attesting witnesses who were examined as plaintiffs' witnesses Nos. 2 and 3 denied that they had actually seen the executant execute and sign the mortgage deed in suit and said that they signed it as attesting witnesses after it had already been executed. The other witnesses examined on the point were the plaintiff, Jairam, and the defendant No. 1, Venkat Rao. The latter who had himself raised the plea of the want of a valid attestation was not expected to state that it was validly attested and that the two attesting witnesses had witnessed the actual execution of the deed by the executant. On the other hand, the plaintiff, Jairam, was interested in supporting his own claim and to show the valid attestation of the mortgage. Under these circumstances, the evidence of the two attesting witnesses would have undoubtedly carried a great deal of weight, had they been independent and disinterested persons. They are both relations of the defendants and have a strong motive in supporting the defence. Vithal Rao (P. W. No. 3) had an additional motive to depose against the plaintiffs and to see their suit dismissed. The plaintiffs' father, Panjaji, had brought a suit against the sons of this witness and in that case both this witness and the defendant No. 1, Venkat Rao, had appeared as witnesses for them. Saya Bai (P.W. No. 2) was another attesting witness. She has proved herself totally unreliable, as she denied that she had identified the executant at the time of the registration, though the Registrar's endorsement is to the contrary effect. This will show that the evidence of the two attesting witnesses cannot at all be believed. I am satisfied that they told deliberate lies in order to help the defendants. I, therefore, do not attach any weight to their evidence. It no doubt lay upon the plaintiffs to prove the valid attestation of the mortgage, but in the present case the attesting witnesses, who were the defendants' relations, turned hostile and did not state the truth. The other witnesses, the plaintiff No. 1 and the defendant No. 1, were equally interested in supporting their respective cases. In this state of evidence the maxim 'omnia præsumuntur rite et solenniter esse acta donec,' would have an application. The evidence on both the sides is equally interested and it must, therefore, be presumed that everything was rightly and duly performed. There was no inherent improbability in the account given by the plaintiff, Jairam (P. W. No. 1). There was nothing improbable in his being present, when the mortgage-deed was executed and registered. I have, therefore, to differ from the lower Court and to hold that the valid attestation of the mortgage-deed in suit should, in the present case, be accepted.

3. The next point taken in defence was, that there was no legal necessity for the mortgage in suit and that it was not, therefore, binding on the defendant No. 2 and on his share in the mortgage property. It was the plaintiffs' case that the money was borrowed in order to pay off Saya Bai on account of arrears of a certain annual allowance which the family had to pay to her. The defendants' case was, that the money was advanced to Saya Bai in order to enable her to pay off her debts. In this connection, it is important to note that the mortgage-deed does not make any mention of arrears of allowance payable to Saya Bai. On the other hand, the recitals support the defendants' version. That the money borrowed under the mortgage was paid to Saya Bai towards the arrears of her allowance is deposed to only by the plaintiff, Jairam, examined as P. W. No. 1. The lower Court rightly declined to accept his uncorroborated evidence. If the amount was really paid to Saya Bai for the arrears of the allowance, we should have expected a mention being made of it in the mortgage. It recites that the money was required for paying off the debts due by Saya Bai to certain creditors. This would show that the amount was advanced to Saya Bai as a loan. This was not certainly a legal necessity, nor was it for the benefit of the minor brother of the executant. It could not, therefore, be binding on the share of the defendant No. 2 in the mortgage property. I agree with the lower Court in its finding that the money borrowed was not required for any legal necessity and that the loan did not in any way benefit either the family or the minor. The share of the defendant No. 2 in the mortgage property shall have, therefore, to be excluded. Those who deal with a person who has only a limited interest in property and who professes to dispose of a larger interest are prima facie bound to make out the facts which authorise such an alienation. That proof is in the present case wanting.

4. The defendants Nos. 3, 4 and 5 are the sons of the defendant No. 1 and were born after the mortgage in suit was executed. Their father could, therefore, validly transfer the family estate and their subsequent birth did not operate retrospectively. They took the family property as it existed at their birth, and they cannot impeach any previous alienation. The defendant No. 1 had, however, a son, by name Gajanan, who was born before the mortgage and was living at that time. He has recently died. It is, therefore, contended for the defendants Nos. 3 to 5 that as the mortgage in suit could be challenged by Gajanan, they have, as his representatives, got the same right of challenging it after his death. Their reasoning is something like this. The mortgage was not for legal nesessity and could not, therefore, bind Gajanan's share which at that time amounted to one-fourth of the property covered by mortgage By his death that share of his has gone to his father and to his three brothers. Thus, the mortgage would be binding only to the extent of five annas share and would not be binding on the remaining three annas. In this connection, it is necessary to observe that this right of challenging an alienation made by the family manager is personal and is not inherited by the surviving members. In the case of Moti v. Kanhya (1) the following observations occur:—

"For, when this mortgage was created, they were not in existence and their father could, therefore, validly transfer the entire family estate, so far as they are concerned. Their subsequent birth does not operate retrospectively so as to give them a right to question its validity. It seems there were then in existence two other sons, both of whom have since died. But their right to challenge the transaction has not passed to the plaintiffs. It died with them."

The surviving brothers could not be Gajanan's legal representatives. So far as they were concerned, Gajanan simply passed out of the family and the only effect of his death was, that their shares in the family property were proportionately increased. The right which Gajanan possessed of challenging the alienation made by his father died with him and was not inherited by his brothers. Thus, the validity of the mortgage in suit cannot be questioned by the defendants Nos. 3 to 5. When they were born, the family estate was already subject to the mortgage and they got it as it then existed.

5. The other grounds taken in defence were decided by the lower Court against the defendants and it is, therefore, unnecessary to refer to them here. The agreements set up by the defendants were held as not established and I hold that the findings of the lower Court are quite correct. For the purposes of this mortgage in suit it is, therefore, unnecessary to go into any village accounts.

6. The last ground is that the lower Court was wrong in assessing the Pleader's fees separately for the defendant No. 1 and for the defendants Nos. 2 to 5. The defence of these two sets of defendants was different and separate Pleader's fees for them were, therefore, rightly assessed. Rupees 100 were, under the orders of the lower Court, paid by the plaintiffs for conducting the case on behalf of the minor defendants. The plaintiffs' complaint that this amount has not been allowed to him is reasonable. This amount was spent for the defence of the minor defendants and their defence failed. They are, therefore, bound to re pay it to the plaintiffs.

7. The result is, that the appeal is partially allowed and it is declared that the plaintiffs are entitled to get a preliminary foreclosure decree to the extent of one-half of the property covered by the mortgage. To the amount claimed shall be added interest from the date of the suit to 30th April 1922, which I fix for the payment of the mortgage-money. Interest on Rs. 6,122-6-0 from 9th May 1919 to 30th April 1922 comes to Rs. 2,142-10-0 the total being Rs. 8,265. To this shall be added the plaintiffs' costs of both the Courts. The plaintiffs shall pay the costs of the defendant No. 2 in both the Courts. The defendant No. 1 shall bear his own costs. The defendants Nos. 3 to 5 shall pay to the plaintiffs Rs. 100 paid by them for their defence.

When books relating to a partnership, the business of which is carried on at several places, are ordered to be produced, it is an extreme measure to penalise the failure of the defendant to produce one out of many books by striking his defence out. [p. 664, col 1.]

The provisions of rule 21, Order XI, Civil Procedure Code, are applicable to the case of an omission to produce any document under rule 14 of Order XI of the said Code.

Semble:—The omission of the word "production" which appears in rule 14 in rule 21 of Order XI of the Civil Procedure Code, is due to the fact that it is redundant there.

Miscellaneous first appeal from an order of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Ferozepore, dated the 9th April 1921.

Kanwar Dalip Singh, Bakhshi Tek Chand and Mr. Sant Lal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—On the 17th of November 1919 one Parabhu Dayal instituted a suit against Ram Nath and Gopi Nath, proprietors of the firm of Kidari Parshad-Chhedi Lal. He alleged that he had entered into a partnership with the defendants and, claiming rendition of accounts, prayed for a decree for such sum as may be found due to him after the accounts had been rendered. He claimed to be interested in the partnership to the extent of 1/8th share. On the same date he filed an application under Order XI, rule 14, asking the Court to order the production by the defendants, upon oath, of certain account books, kachi rokars, pakki rokars and khatas from 1913 to 1919 relating to the matter in question in the suit. On the 18th of November 1919 notice was ordered to issue as prayed. This notice was addressed to Ram Nath and called upon him to show cause against the production and filing of all the documents referred to reference being made to rule 14 of Order XI. The reason given by the plaintiff for the adoption of this course was that the defendants had made false and fictitious entries in their bahis and that there was a danger of further alterations being made as soon as they discovered that the suit had been filed. The 21st November 1919 was fixed for compliance with the order and on that date Ram Nath appeared with his Counsel and filed objections to the production of the bahis. At the same time, he filed a list of certain account-books accompanied by an affidavit, saying that these were all he had with him and that those that were at Allahabad would be produced as soon as possible. It was also stated that some account-books had been lost or stolen from him about a fortnight or so previously while travelling by train from Allahabad to Ferozepore. It was pointed out by the defendants that the action of the plaintiff amounted to a "sort of fishing enquiry" without his having established any right to the production of the books called for. Ram Nath was given till the 27th of November 1919 for production of the other books and on that date he produced 11 more which he filed with an affidavit, at the same time, saying that he had up to then been unable to procure three others. On the 16th of January 1920 the plaintiff again applied to the Court pointing out that the defendants had not yet produced the remainder of the books. Notice was accordingly issued to Ram Nath for their production and he produced them on the 27th of January 1920. It should be noted that the Court below appears to be wrong in saying that on the 27th of January 1920 Ram Nath stated that he had no other books in his possession. This is how the matter stands so far as rule 14 of Order XI is concerned.

On the 6th of January 1920 the plaintiff took action under rule 15 of Order XI and asked for an order for inspection of all the account-books, etc., mentioned in the affidavits of the 21st and 27th of November 1919 and all the bahis which refer to the partnership from the 8th of December 1913 to June 1919. A notice was issued accordingly directing the defendants to allow inspection of all the books and documents referred to in their written statement of the 2nd of January 1920 and the affidavits of the 21st and 27th of November 1919. In this notice there were 19 entries, Nos. 1—18 specified account-books that had actually been produced. Entry No. 19 was couched in general terms and under it inspection was directed to be given of all the documents generally, from the 8th of December 1913 to June 1919, which related to the partnership dealings. On the 28th of January 1920 the plaintiff applied for the production and inspection of vouchers, invoices, etc., and the defendants were directed to give inspection thereof. The order allowing inspection, however, was not passed till the 19th of March 1920 and is couched in the following terms:—

"I, therefore, direct that the defendants allow the plaintiff or his Counsel to inspect the bahis and documents called for. Notice to issue accordingly. The inspection should take place in Court."

On the 20th of March 1920 the 22nd of March was fixed for the purpose of inspection. Inspection took place accordingly and on the 25th of March 1920 the plaintiff filed a receipt or statement in which he detailed the documents he had inspected.

On the 10th of April 1920 the plaintiff filed an application in Court, in which he alleged that his examination of the account-books had disclosed that the documents shown by the defendants were fictitious and forged ones; further, that all the vouchers had not been given inspection of. It was prayed that as the defendants had disobeyed the orders of the Court directing the inspection action should be taken under rule 21, Order XI, and the defendant's defence struck out and proceedings against them taken ex parte. Notice was issued to Ram Nath to appear on the 19th of April 1920 in answer to this application. On the 19th of April 1920 Ram Nath did not appear in person, and the case was adjourned to the 14th of May 1920, as the learned Subordinate Judge considered it desirable to examine Ram Nath on oath. On the 14th of May 1920 Ram Nath appeared and his statement was recorded in brief, as was that of Parabh Dayal. The Court then settled certain issues as to the proceedings under Order XI, rule 21, and the case was adjourned to the 27th of July 1920, on which date certain witnesses for the plaintiff were examined and the case taken up on the 28th, when further witnesses for the plaintiff were examined and the case adjourned to the 25th/26th October 1920 for the completion of the plaintiffs' evidence. On that date nothing was done and the case was adjourned to the 25th of November 1920. On the 25th of November 1920 the record shows that the defendant produced a bahi, which he called "a kachi rokar." Plaintiffs' Counsel objected to the production of this bahi at that stage and the Court signed the first page of the account-book and placed it on the record. The matter then proceeded and, finally, on the 9th of April 1921 the Court passed an order under rule 21, Order XI, Civil Procedure Code, striking out the defence of the defendants and directing that the suit should proceed ex parte. Against this order an appeal has been filed to this Court under Order XLIII, rule 1, clause (f), Civil Procedure Code, by the defendants and I have heard Mr. Moti Sagar on their behalf while Mr. Tek Chand has addressed me on behalf of the plaintiff respondent.

For the appellant it has been urged that rule 21 no longer applied to a breach of an order passed under rule 14, inasmuch as the words "or production" which appeared under the former section 136 have now been omitted. It was also urged that the proper procedure for the plaintiff was to have first called for an affidavit of documents under rule 12, and then apply for inspection or for an order under rule 14 if the conduct of the defendants justified such a proceeding. On the other hand, Mr. Tek Chand urged that the omission of the words "or production" in rule 21 was due to the fact that they were redundant. The direction to a party to allow inspection included an order for production. It was also urged that as the plaintiff was aware that the defendants were in possession of all the documents that he desired to inspect, the application under rule 14 was in order. Before proceeding further, it is necessary to point out that action has been taken under rule 21, Order XI, as the Court had found that a kachi rokar relating to the business of the partnership beginning from the 18th of November 1918 to June 1919 had been contumaciously withheld by the defendants. This kachi rokar relates to the Allahabad branch of the business and was produced by the defendants in a criminal case brought against the plaintiff by one Mohar Singh under section 406, Indian Penal Code, in Calcutta. This account-book appears to have been produced in the Calcutta Court some time in July 1920. I may say at once that the allegations made by the plaintiff in his application of the 10th of April 1920 would scarcely have warranted an order under rule 21 such as has been passed, and this appears to be the view taken by the learned Counsel for the respondent, who has confined himself to the non-production of this particular kachi rokar. Now, as to this, Mr. Moti Sagar contended that it was the current kachi rokar and only contained six months or so of the accounts towards the end of the partnership operations, that as it was a current account, and as the book was in daily use, the defendants forgot that it contained any account relating to the partnership, and that the failure to produce this book was, therefore, purely accidental, and in no way contumacious or wilful. He urged that the mere fact that this account-book was produced in Calcutta in a proceeding against the plaintiff himself evidenced the good faith of his clients, for at that time proceedings under rule 2 were actually pending at Ferozepore, and if the account-book had been deliberately kept back for some sinister purpose the defendants would scarcely have filed it in the Calcutta Court in a proceeding to which the plaintiff was a party. Mr. Tek Chand, on the other hand, contended that the case in Calcutta had been instigated by the defendants themselves, and that they were forced to produce this account book as an act of desperation, hoping thereby to secure the conviction of the plaintiff, and thus bring pressure to bear on him to drop the civil proceedings at Ferozepore. I must confess that it seems to me a little improbable that the defendants would have produced this book in Calcutta, had they intentionally withheld it when ordered to produce all the account-books by the Ferozepore Court, for it has to be borne in mind that the proceedings under rule 21 were then pending, and they must have been well aware that the plaintiff was straining every nerve to prove that they had disobeyed the orders of the Court which rendered them liable to the penalty of having their defence struck out.

Again, Mr. Moti Sagar contended that, as a matter of fact, this particular account-book had never been called for under rule 14 nor included in the order for inspection. In this connection, he referred me to the application and notice of the 17th of November 1919, and the order and notice of the 19th of March 1920 for inspection, and contended that nowhere is this account-book specifically referred to. He further pointed out that neither in the receipt filed on the 25th of March 1920 by the plaintiff showing what documents they had inspected, nor in the application of the 10th of April 1920 was this account-book particularly referred to. Mr. Tek Chand urged that the general description given was sufficient to cover this account-book, and further that it had been specifically asked for as included in item No. 19 of the notice directing inspection, which called for all the account-books from the 8th of December 1913 to June 1919. He explained that this book was not specifically referred to in the receipt of the 25th of March 1920, or in the application of the 10th of April 1920, because the plaintiff thought that it had been lost. This question is not free from difficulty, for it seems to me that the general order for the production of all documents relating to the partnership of the business could be held to include the book in question. At the same time, where books relating to a partnership, the business of which was carried on in four different places, namely, Ferozepore, Allahabad, Naroval, and Meerut, are ordered to be produced, to penalize the failure for non-production of one out of many books by striking the defence out, as has been done in this case, seems somewhat an extreme measure. Moti Sagar drew my attention to Hans Raj v. Jhanda Mal (1), Jaisukh v. Dina Nath (2), Sham Kishore Mundle v. Shoshibhooshun Biswas (3), Khajah Assenoollah Joo v. Khajah Abdool Aziz (4), Kishan Lal v. Sultan Singh (5), Rameshwar Narayan Singh v. Rikhanath Koeri (6), Dhapi v. Ram Pershad (7), Jwala Pershad Sahu v. Bigalram Mandwari (8). These authorities do not afford any assistance in the decision of the actual facts in this case, but in all of them it has been laid down that the penalty provided in rule 21 should only be imposed in extreme cases and as a last resort. Banshi Singh v. Palit Singh (9) and Haigh v. Haigh (10), relied on by Mr. Tek Chand are to the same effect. I have given very careful consideration to this matter, and have come to the conclusion that the present is not a case in which this penalty should be enforced, I am inclined to the view that the omission of the words "or production" in rule 21 is due to the fact that they are redundant, although there is something to be said for the opposite view. It seems to me also that, in an order for the production or for the inspection of books and documents, a general description would be sufficient so long as that description would suffice for the identification of the document or book sought to be produced or inspected. In the present case it seems to me that the general description given in the order and notices relating to the production and inspection of the documents required by the plaintiff would be sufficient to include this kachi rokar. At the same time, I find it difficult to believe that the conduct of the defendants was deliberately and intentionally contumacious, they produced a large number of books, and the explanation given by Mr. Moti Sagar for the failure to produce this particular book does not seem to me at all far-fetched. The defendants' plea in the case was that a settlement had been arrived at between them and the plaintiff after an examination and statement of accounts. It is not only possible but quite probable that when they were called upon to produce all the account books relating to the partnership dealings they overlooked this particular account-book which was in daily use and which contained accounts relating to the partnership for a period of about six months. It seems to me that they did not wilfully withhold this book, and I would, therefore, accept this appeal and set aside the order of the Court below.

I would note that Mr. Moti Sagar contended that notice to Ram Nath was not notice to the defendants. The defendants, however, were sued as a firm and notice to Ram Nath, therefore, would be sufficient [Haji Jakaria v. Hari Qasim (11)]. I, therefore, accept this appeal and setting aside the order striking out the defendants' defence return the case to the Trial Court for completion of the trial of the case itself. In the circumstances, I pass no orders as to costs.

I have not discussed the circumstances in which certain account books are said to have been lost by theft, as I am un-Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts 29, 36 —Standing crops — Immoveable property — Illegal attachment—Suit for compensation—Limitation.

Standing crops are, for the purposes of the Limitation Act, immoveable property and an illegal attachment of such crops amounts to a trespass on immoveable property. [p. 665, col 2.]

A suit for compensation for illegal attachment of standing crops is governed by Article 29 of the Limitation Act, which specially provides for suits for compensation for such trespass, and not by Article 36 which provides for suits for compensation for torts not provided for elsewhere. [p. 665, col. 1.]

Appeal against a decree of the First Additional District Judge, Akola, decided on 12th July 1919, in Civil Appeal No. 94 of 1919.

Mr. G. G. Hatwalne, for the Appellant.

Mr. G. L. Subhedar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff respondent sued for damages for the wrongful attachment of his share of the standing crops by the defendant-appellant in execution of a decree for money against his bataidar. The attachment was made on the 12th December 1915. The plaintiff's objection was allowed on the 12th July 1916. By that time the crops which were still ungathered were spoiled by the rains and had become valueless. The suit was filed on the 10th December 1918. The plaintiff's claim was decreed by the first Court and the lower Appellate Court has confirmed the decree. The defendant appeals. The first point urged on his behalf is that the plaintiff's suit was barred under Article 36, 1st Schedule, Limitation Act.

Standing crops are, for the purposes of the Limitation Act, immoveable property. The illegal attachment of the standing crops was a trespass on immoveable property. Article 29 specially provides for suits for compensation for such trespass and Article 36 which provides for suits for compensation for torts not provided for elsewhere cannot, therefore, be regarded as applicable: Nagoba v. Madholala Kalar (1).

The defendant relies on Hari Charan Fadikar v. Hari Kar (2) and Jadu Nath Dandput v. Hari Kar (3). In Hari Charan Fadikar v. Hari Kar (2) the lower Court had applied Article 29 and it was held that that Article had no application as standing crops were immoveable property. It was, no doubt, held that Article 36 applied but the question whether Article 36 applied or Article 39 did not specifically arise in that case. As Jenkins, C. J., observed in Jadu Nath Dandupat v. Hari Kar (4) it was enough for the purpose of that case to apply Article 36 because that afforded an answer to the plea of limitation.

Jadu Nath Dandput v. Hari Kar (3) was a case of illegal distress and cutting and taking away of crops. Rampini, C. J., held that Article 36 was applicable while Dose, J., was of opinion that, so far as the trespass was concerned, Article 39 applied and, so far as the conversion was concerned, Article 49 applied. It seems to me that, even according to Rampini, C. J.'s view, Article 39 would apply because the present case is one for compensation for trespass only and not for trespass and conversion.

(4) 18 Ind. Cas. 253; 17 C. W. N. 303; 17 C. L. J. 208.

The view that I have taken above finds support in Kotagiri Venkataramanujam v. Patibanda Basavayya (5).

It is next urged that the lower Courts should have determined the value of the crops which were still standing and available to the plaintiff after the objection was decided in his favour and given him a decree for the amount of the value of the total crops less the value of the crops still standing. No pleas were raised on this point. The plaintiff claimed on the basis that the crops standing in July 1915 were of no value. The defendant alleged that the crops were not damaged at all. The First Court found in favour of the plaintiff, and the ground now urged was not taken in the lower Appellate Court; under these circumstances, it cannot be maintained in this Court.

A new plea is now sought to be urged to the effect that the plaintiff contributed to the loss by his conduct in not applying to the Court to have proper care taken of the crops. No such plea was raised in the pleadings and it is too late now to urge it. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.

COUTTS, J.—This is an appeal against a decision of the District Judge of Saran dismissing an appeal against the order of the Subordinate Judge of Saran partially decreeing a suit which was brought on a zarpeshgi deed and a simple mortgage-bond. The so-called zarpeshgi deed is dated the 21st of September 1905 and was for a sum of Rs. 1,850. The simple mortgage-bond is dated the 7th of June 1911 and was for a sum of Rs. 400 advanced on a security of the same property as was mortgaged by the previous deed of the 21st of September 1905. The deeds were both executed by one Kanehan Singh, the husband of the defendant No. 1, Musammat Ram Sakhi Kuer, in favour of the plaintiff No. 1, Jag Sah, and Ram Sahai Sah, ancestor of the other plaintiffs. The defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4 purchased the mortgaged property from the defendant No. 1 on the 7th of November 1914, the arrangement being that out of the consideration money the sum of Rs. 652 was to be kept for payment of the mortgage-debt due on the bond of the 7th of June 1911 and the sum of Rs. 1,850 for the payment of the debt due on the deed of the 21st September 1905. The defendants' case was that at the time they purchased the mortgaged property they tendered the sum of Rs. 652 to the plaintiff No. 1 in payment of the mortgage-debt, but the plaintiff refused to accept the money and claimed a right of pre emption in the property. The defendants then waited for a year until a suit for pre emption would be barred and deposited the amount in Court. On these allegations the defendants contended that the plaintiffs' mortgage-debt had been satisfied by the amount Rs. 652 which was deposited by them and they further contended that as the plaintiffs were in possession of the property mortgaged by the deed of the 21st of September 1905, they were not entitled to sue for sale of the property as they had done in this suit.

In the Court of first instance it was decided that the plaintiffs, on the allegations of the defendants which were accepted, could claim no interest beyond what was included in the Rs. 652, and with regard to the claim to sell the property to satisfy the debt of Rs. 1,850 a curious order was passed by which the suit was decreed in the plaintiffs' favour, "only so far as, if he has been really dispossessed, he can take possession." What this may mean I do not know. On appeal to the District Judge the decision of the first Court in regard to interest was upheld and in regard to the claim on the deed of the 21st of September 1905 for sale of the mortgaged property, the learned District Judge held that as the plaintiffs had not been dispossessed they were not entitled to sue for sale of the mortgaged property. In the result, the whole suit was dismissed. The plaintiffs have appealed to this Court.

Three points are urged before us. The first is, that the tender of Rs. 652 was less than the total amount due and that, consequently, it was not a valid tender and the plaintiffs were (not?) bound to accept it. The second point urged is that assuming that a valid tender had been made still the defendants must establish that the amount tendered had been kept always available for payment and they not having established this the tender was not a valid tender. The third point urged is, that the so-called sarpeshgi deed of the 21st of September 1905 was not a pure usufructuary mortgage inasmuch as a due date for payment had been fixed in the bond, it was an anomalous mortgage and that in such a case the plaintiffs were entitled to sue for sale of the mortgaged property.

With regard to the first of these points, it was never suggested either in the Court of first instance or before the lower Appellate Court that the sum tendered, Rs. 652, was insufficient at the time of tender and it is impossible at this stage, without going into the evidence, to say whether the amount was sufficient or not. This is a second appeal and the question of sufficiency or insufficiency cannot be gone into at this stage. With regard to the second point urged, here again the contention must fail because it was never suggested that the money was not kept available by the defendants although it is necessary that a mortgagor should after tender keep the money ready for payment. It is a matter which involves a consideration of the evidence whether in fact the money was kept ready or not and both the Courts below, having assumed that all the provisions of the law in respect of the tender had been complied with, we cannot allow this point to be taken at this stage. The third point urged is, that a due date having been fixed for payment of the mortgage money under the deed of the 21st of September 1905, the mortgage was not a pure usufructuary mortgage and, therefore, the plaintiffs were entitled to sell immediately after the due date was passed even though he still remained in possession of the property. In support of this proposition the decisions in Pargan Pandey v. Mahtam Mahto (1), Pitambar Parkait v. Madhu Sudan Mandal (2) and Dattambhat Rambhat v. Krishnabhat (3) are relied on and it seems to me that this is the correct view of the law. The question was very fully discussed in Pitambar Parkait v. Madhu Sudan Mandal (2) in which the mortgage was one in exactly the same terms as the mortgage in the case with which we are at present concerned, and in that case the learned Judges said: "It is well settled that when an instrument of mortgage gives a right to possession and also contains a covenant to pay, thus presenting a combination of a usufructuary and a simple mortgage, the two rights are independent and the mortgagee may sue for sale although he may have given up possession" and the right accrues immediately after the due date is passed. The same view was taken in the other cases to which I have already referred and, as I have already said, this, in my opinion, is the correct view of the law.

(1) 6 C. L. J. 143.

In the result, then, I would modify the decree of the lower Appellate Court. The parties are agreed that the sum due is Rs. 1,675. I would accordingly direct that the plaintiffs be allowed to sell the mortgaged property for this sum, the defendants being allowed six months' time to pay the amount. Costs in proportion to the success of the parties.

It is not the business of the lender to determine the amount which the manager should expend in his defence. If the family is a wealthy and important one, it is not too much for the manager to raise a loan of Rs. 32,000 in order to defend himself. [p. 669, col. 1.]

Appeal against a decree of the Additional District Judge, Akola, in Civil Suit No. 9 of 1919, dated the 20th January 1920.

Mr. M. R. Dixit, for the Appellants.

Mr. G. L. Subhedar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Plaintiff sued to recover Rs. 38,153-7-6 from defendants Nos. 1 to 4 on account of advances made to a trading firm of which defendants are the owners. The claim includes interest. A sum of Rs. 32,000 out of the debt was advanced to enable the first defendant to engage Counsel to defend himself against a murder charge, a case in which he was subsequently convicted and sentenced to transportation for life; Rs. 3,750 was the amount claimed as an advance for the purchase of war bonds; the balance represents money advances made, it is said, for business purposes to this trading family.

The case was proceeded ex parte against the first defendant; defendants Nos. 2 to 4, his brothers, represented by their maternal uncle, Mahadeo Bajirao, denied all knowledge of the debts in suit, and it was further denied that these sums were borrowed for family purposes or for the benefit of the family.

The case went to trial on the following issues:—

"(1) Whether the debt in suit was incurred by the defendant No. 1, and was it for the purposes mentioned by the plaintiff?

(2) Whether defendants Nos. 2 to 4 are liable for the debt incurred?

(3) Whether the plaintiff is entitled to claim interest, and, if so, at what rate?

(4) To what relief is the plaintiff entitled and against which of the defendants?"

The lower Court finds that the sum of Rs. 32,000 was advanced to meet the expenses of defending the first defendant at the murder trial and that such an advance was a pressing necessity. Defendants Nos. 2 to 4 were also found liable to pay the amount advanced for war bonds and for family purposes.

It is not here denied that the sums claimed were advanced and, in view of the decisions in Beni Ram v. Man Singh (1), and Hanumat Mahton v. Sonadhari Singh (2), we have no hesitation in finding that debts incurred by the manager in defending himself against a criminal charge are payable by the family. It is established that defendant No. 1, until his arrest, was the karta or the manager of the family; but it is argued that it lay on the plaintiff to show that such a large sum as Rs. 32,000 was required for the defence of Dhanraj. The payments of Rs. 24,470 to Mr. Das, Bar-at-Law, Calcutta, Rs. 500 to Mr. Hosali, Bar-at-Law, Rs. 500 to Mr. Malak Khan, Pleader, Rs. 1,500 to Mr. Khaparde, and Rs. 1,000 to Mr. Nargundkar, are proved from defendants' account-books. These account for no less than Rs. 27,970. It is established that Mr. Das was engaged in the Magistrate's Court and that Mr. Khaparde appeared for Dhanraj in this Court. The expenses in the Committing Magistrate's Court and the High Court easily account for the balance. We do not think it was the plaintiff's business to determine the amount Dhanraj chose to expend in his defence. The family is a wealthy one and are said to pay Rs. 10,000 to Rs. 12,000 a year as Government land revenue and to have dealings of one or two lakhs annually. The engagement of Mr. Das and other Counsel was thus justified by the importance of the family and as it is not denied that the sum of Rs. 32,000 was received in order to defend Dhanraj, we think plaintiff has been rightly given a decree as regards this amount.

(1) 11 Ind. Cas. 663; 34 A. 4; 8 A. L. J. 1015.

It is equally clear that money was advanced for the purchase of war bonds to the defendants' family; these war bonds belong to defendants' family. Some patriotic people purchased these bonds when they could ill afford them. But defendants were assuring themselves of a fixed income by buying these bonds and the purchase can, therefore, be said to be for the family benefit.

The other items claimed are unquestionably on account of business purposes, debts incurred by the trading family, and we think that the decree as regards this portion of the claim is correct.

We note that the appeal is very generally worded. It is not denied that the money claimed reached the family and the law governing the re-payment of debts incurred for Dhanraj's defence is not challenged. We are of opinion that the case has been correctly decided. We, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs. The appellants will pay respondent's costs.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), ss. 104H, 111A —Claim under s. 104H barred by limitation—Suit under s. 111A, maintainability of.

A plaintiff is entitled to maintain a suit coming under section 111A of the Bengal Tenancy Act although his claim under section 104H of the Act may be barred by limitation. [p. 670, col. 2.]

Appeals against decrees of the District Judge of Noakhali, dated the 29th of January 1919, affirming those of the Additional Subordinate Judge of that District, dated the 17th of June 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Jatindra Kumar Sen Gupta, for the Appellants.—The thirteen appeals arise out of as many suits which have all been dismissed on a preliminary point. No evidence has been gone into. The lands are khas mahal lands. The Record of Rights were finally published on 27th March 1910. The present suits were brought on 27th March 1916. The lands are included within my zote. They have been wrongly recorded as being within the defendant's jote. Hence my suits. On 29th November 1916 the Secretary of State appeared. In the meantime, on 29th September 1916, the original plaintiff died and the present plaintiffs were substituted on 25th February 1917. On 18th June 1917 I applied for issue of a commission for local inspection. The Court thereafter took up preliminary issues for trial on that date. The Secretary of State then objected to the maintainability of the suit under section 104, Bengal Tenancy Act. On 19th June 1917 I prayed that the prayer of my plaint objected to might be expunged. My prayer was not granted and the suit was dismissed. On appeal that order was affirmed. I claimed two reliefs, one under section 104-H, and the other under section 111A. of the Bengal Tenancy Act. I may give up one of my claims. The defendant cannot be in any way prejudiced by that. I submit the learned Judge erred in dismissing the whole suit. Refers to Rajani Kanta Mookerjee v. Secretary of State for India (1). My next contention is that my application for amendment ought to have been granted as it could not have possibly prejudiced the Secretary of State. Refers to Promoda Nath Roy v. Asir-ud-din Mandal (2), Jogendra Nath Singh v. Secretary of State for India in Council (3).

Babu Surendranath Guha, (Junior) Government Pleader, for the Secretary of State.—The amendments cannot be allowed as the suits will fail for want of notice to the Secretary of State under section 18, Civil Procedure Code. Refers to Prasanna Kumar Adhikary v. Rachimuddin Howladar (4).

Babu Jatindra Kumar Sen Gupta replied in brief.

Babu Kam Ch. Mitter, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

In S. A. No. 815 of 1919.

The suit, in so far as the prayer kha is concerned, is barred by the provisions of section 104H of the Bengal Tenancy Act, inasmuch as it relates to an entry of rent settled under sections 104A to 104F. But the plaintiff applied for amendment of the plaint in the Court of first instance by striking out the prayer kha. The plaintiff also wanted to strike out the prayer for a declaration that the record in the names of defendants Nos. 2 to 5 in respect of the land of schedule (ka) was unjust and illegal. If these amendments were allowed, the only prayer left would be a declaration that the defendants Nos. 2 to 5 had no right to the land and that the land was included in the plaintiff's ryoti: that would be a suit within the purview of section 111A and we do not see why the plaintiff should not be allowed to proceed with the suit so framed. In the case of Rajani Kanta Mooker ee v. Secretary of State for India (1) it was held that the plaintiff is entitled to maintain a suit coming under section 111A although the claim under section 104H may be barred by limitation.

In the present case, the plaintiff expressly prayed for the amendments as stated above. We think that the reasons given by the Court below for refusing the amendment are not sound, and that the amendments may be allowed.

The Secretary of State will not be a necessary party to the suit so amended. But the plaintiff wants that the question of title as between the plaintiff and defendants Nos. 2 to 5 should be decided in the presence of the Secretary of State who may be kept on the record as a pro forma defendant.

We accordingly direct that the case be remitted to the Court of first instance in order that the amendments may be made and the suit tried according to law. The Secretary of State will be kept on the record as a pro forma defendant.

The plaintiff must pay full costs of the Secretary of State in the Court of first instance and half the costs in the lower Appellate Court, as only one half of the costs was allowed in that Court to the Secretary of State. The order as to costs in favour of the other defendants both in the Court of first instance and in the lower Appellate Court will be set aside. No order as to costs in this Court.

This judgment will govern the other appeals Nos. 915 to 927 of 1919.

JUDGMENT.—The following genealogical tree helps to explain the case:—

Pandu (died 1909)-wife Tapi Bai

- Jhumki (husband Sakharam)
  - Ramkrishna.
  - Doomi.
  - Sarji.
- Chinki.
- Mukti.

Doomi and Sarji sue to get possession of two fields and a house sold by Ramkrishna, their brother, to the defendants under two sale-deeds contending that they as the preferential heirs of Jhumki are entitled to the property and that Ramkrishna did not own the property and could not sell it. The defendants pleaded inter alia that they are Rewa Kunbis who migrated to Berar from Guzerath bringing their customary law, the Mayukha, with them and under that law the son would have a preferential claim. It was further contended that among this caste there is a custom by which the son succeeds in preference to the daughters. It was further pleaded that the plaintiffs' claim was time-barred and that there was a misjoinder of parties.

The first Court found that the parties were governed by the Mitakshara Law as prevailed in Berar and that the alleged custom had not been established : there was no misjoinder of parties or causes of action and that the plaintiffs' claim was not time-barred. In the lower Appellate Court these findings were confirmed.

There is no force in the first and second grounds of the memorandum of appeal to this Court and the contentions contained therein have not been pressed.

It has been found that the family of the parties migrated to Berar from Guzerath some five hundred years ago and as Nilkantha, the author of the Mayukha School of Law, did not come into existence until about 1700, the family could have hardly brought that law into this Province with them. There is a concurrent finding of fact that the custom set up has not been established and that concludes that matter. The fourth ground of appeal which deals with the question of adverse possession has not been argued and arguments in this Court have been confined to the question whether Ramkishna or his two sisters are the preferential heirs to the mother, Jhumki. It is admitted by both sides in this Court that Jhumki took an absolute estate. It is not contended that her sisters have or had any right to the estate now in suit.

On the findings come to it must be held that the parties are governed by the lex loci of Berar, namely, the Mitakshara as interpreted by the Mayukha : see Chandrabhaga v. Vishwanath (1). It is settled law that in Berar a Hindu daughter inheriting from her father takes an absolute estate: Dowlatrao v. Govindrao (2), and it has been held in Bombay, and the Maharashtra Law is followed in Bombay, that a daughter inheriting from a mother or a father takes an absolute estate which passes on her death to her own heirs and not to those of the preceding owner: Bhagirathibai v. Kahnujirav (3), but it is argued for the appellants that as it is under the Mayukha that the property reached the daughter, its further descent is governed by that Law and the son under it inherits in preference to his sisters. In support of this argument I am referred to paragraph 26, section, 10 of the Vyavahara Mayukha, which runs: "However the text of Yajnavalkya, 'Let sons divide equally both the effects and the debts after the death of their two parents,' relates to what is acquired by the act of partition and the like with the exception of that declared in the above texts as woman's property. From this it is clear that if there be daughters, the sons, or other heirs even succeed to the mother's estate other than that before described." I am also referred to page 446 of Bannerjee's "Marriage and Stridhan." The property is, it is argued, non-technical stridhan, and not being one of those kinds of stridhana for which express texts prescribe exceptional modes of descent would under the Mayukha go on the woman's death to her sons as if she were a male, and this notwithstanding her having daughters: paragraph 618 of Mayne's Hindu Law and Usage, and Trevelyan's Hindu Law, page 452.

The question before me is, whether property taken by a daughter from her father devolves on the son to the exclusion of the daughters or vice versa. The authorities quoted doubtless show that under the Mayukha in this case the son would succeed, but in Berar the Mayukha is not paramount, the lex loci being as already stated the Mitakshara interpreted by the Mayukha, and it is to this law, paramount also in the Mahratta country, the southern Konkan and northern Konkan, that we must turn for a solution. There is ample authority to show that under this law the property descends to the daughters to the exclusion of the sons. In Maharashtra and Berar where the Mitakshara is paramount and the Mayukha a secondary authority, the inheritance of this non-technical stridhan would devolve on

(1) Unmarried daughter,
(2) Married daughter who is "unprovided for."
(3) Married daughter who is "provided for."
(4) Daughter's daughter.
(5) Daughter's son,
(6) Son.
(7) Son's son.

Authority for the decision of the lower Appellate Court can be found: Jankibai v. Sundra (4), Gulappa Dominggappa v. Tayawa (5), Bhaskar Trimbak Acharya v. Mahadev Ramji (6), Bulakhidas v. Keshavlal (7) and Manilal Rewadat v. Bai Rewa (8). I am aware of the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Sheo Shankar Lal v. Debi Sahai (9) but that was a case under the Benares Law. The law as now settled in the Madras, Mithila and Bengal Schools, is that property inherited by a woman whether from a man or a woman does not constitute her stridhan but according to the Bombay School, which is followed in Berar, it does, except where the property is inherited by a female who enters the family of the deceased by marriage. As stated, there is ample authority for the proposition that in this case governed by the Mitakshara as interpreted in the Bombay Presidency the daughters exclude the son, Ramkrishna. The result is that this appeal fails and is dismissed with costs. The appellants will pay respondents' costs.

THE KUSUNDA NYADI COLLIERIES, LTD.—RESPONDENT.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 59—Mortgage—Test to determine whether transaction mortgage—Transaction in which no interest payable, whether mortgage—Royalty, whether immoveable property—Deed, construction of.

A test to apply to determine whether a transaction amounts to a mortgage or not is to see whether any interest is to run upon the sum of money that may be due by one party to another in consideration of which the transaction is entered into. [p. 674, col. 1.]

Where in a transaction no interest is payable by the debtor to the creditor and the document expressly states that the transaction is entered into for the purpose of paying off the sum due by the debtor to the creditor, the transaction is not a mortgage. [p. 674, col. 1.]

Royalty is the price paid for a portion of the soil the payment whereof is distributed over a number of years. Interest in the royalty is not an interest in immoveable property [p. 674, col. 2.]

In order to pay off a certain debt without interest, the borrower executed a Jat meadi in respect of a certain commission due to him in respect of a certain coal land of his, and contracted that the lender shall continue to satisfy the sum borrowed by realising the commission every month, from year to year, till that month, of that year until which the entire amount is paid up but that if the income from the commission stopped the lender was to get nothing:

Held, that such a contract did not amount to a mortgage and as such the deed was not one which required attestation in accordance with the provision of section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act. [p 673, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

DAS, J.—On the 6th February 1901 the defendant No. 2 and the predecessors in interest of defendants Nos. 3 6 gave a mining lease in respect of 100 bighas of coal land in Kusunda to one Mr. Phillips on certain terms as to payment of minimum royalty and commission which are set out in the document creating the title in favour of Mr. Phillips. Mr. Phillips has subsequently conveyed his interest to the Kusunda Nyadi Collieries Ltd., and the Company is now liable to pay the minimum royalty and commission in respect of the lease to defendants Nos. 2 6. Defendants Nos. 2-6 borrowed various sums of monies from Mr. Smith, who has been cited in the action as defendant No. 7, and on the 4th March 1908 the sum due and owing by defendants Nos. 2 6 to Mr. Smith amounted in all to Rs. 35,000. On the 24th March 1908, defendants Nos. 2-6 executed a document in favour of Mr. Smith which is the subject-matter of the dispute between the parties, The document is as follows:—"This Jat meadi tamasuk is executed to the following effect: that we have borrowed already Rs. 30,000 from you, as per items noted herein below, and borrow Rs. 5,000 this day, in all Rs. 35,000. In order to pay off this sum without interest, we executed Jat meadi in respect of half of the commission on the underground coal of the 100 bighas of land, as described in the boundaries given below, within 12 annas of the entire Mauza Kusunda, appertaining to Parganna Jharia and Katras. * * * * * * You shall continue to satisfy the sum borrowed, by realising the commission every month, from year to year from the ensuing month of April of the current year. You shall continue to realise half of the commission till that month of that year until which the entire amount is paid up, This Jat meadi commission shall continue to be realised by us directly from that month and that year on which your money will be paid up. You or your heirs or representatives shall not be competent to raise any claim, plea or objection to the same. If the income from the commission be stopped owing to the exhaustion of coal, or on any other ground, and if the entire amount due to you be not realised therefrom and something is left due, you shall not be competent to realise the same from our persons, or other properties. You shall remain bound to give up the same." The question which we have to determine is, whether this document operated as a mortgage of immovable property. If it did operate as a mortgage of immoveable property, it is unenforceable in law inasmuch as it was not attested in accordance with section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act. The plaintiff, who took a conveyance of the interest of Mr. Smith on the 28th March 1908, contends that the document operated as an assignment or as a mortgage of moveable property and that, accordingly, it was not necessary to have the document attested in the manner required by section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act.

In my opinion the document did not operate as a mortgage and certainly did not operate as a mortgage of immoveable property. A mortgage implies a debt and I am satisfied that the document extinguished the debt which was due by defendants Nos. 2-6 to Mr. Smith. The document expressly states that the transaction was entered into in order to pay off the sum of Rs. 35,000 due by the defendants Nos. 2-6 in favour of the plaintiff. A very important test to apply, whenever the question is raised whether a transaction amounts to a mortgage or not, is to see whether any interest is to run upon the sum of money that may be due by one party to another in consideration of which the transaction is entered into. If no interest is payable by the debtor to the creditor and if the document expressly states that the transaction is entered into for the purpose of paying off the sum due by the debtor to the creditor, it is difficult to understand how the transaction can be regarded as a mortgage. In the next place, it is important to take note of the condition which expressly provided that even if Mr. Smith failed to realise any commission owing to the exhaustion of coal or on any other ground the defendants Nos. 2-6 would not be liable for any sum of money that might be still due to Mr. Smith. In other words, the execution of this document put an end to the liability of defendants Nos. 2-6 to the plaintiff. No doubt, there are certain expressions used in the document to which the learned Subordinate Judge refers which, if read apart from the context, seem to suggest that the liability still continued, but the document must be read as a whole and, in my opinion, when it is read as a whole, it establishes that the liability of defendants Nos. 2-6 was at an end by the execution of the document.

In the next place, if it was a mortgage at all it was a mortgage of the commission which was due to the defendants Nos. 2-6 from the Company. Now, I cannot regard the interest which the defendants Nos. 2-6 had in the commission as an interest in immoveable property. It has been held in cases too numerous to mention that royalty is in reality the price paid for a portion of the soil the payment whereof is distributed over a number of years. If that be so, then the interest in the royalty cannot constitute an interest in immoveable property. In my opinion, the position is this: defendants Nos. 2-6 had a claim to a beneficial interest in the commission which was not in their possession either actual or constructive. That beneficial interest could not be regarded as an interest in immoveable property. Defendants Nos. 2-6 transferred their claim to that beneficial interest to Mr. Smith and Mr. Smith in his turn transferred it to the plaintiff. In my opinion, the transaction is not one which required attestation in accordance with the provision of section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act.

I would allow the appeal, set aside the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge, and remand the case to the learned Subordinate Judge for decision according to law. The plaintiffs are entitled to the costs of the appeal. The costs incurred in the Court below will abide the result and will be disposed of by the learned Subordinate Judge.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 26—Plaint, presentation of, at residence of Judge after Court hours—Jurisdiction to receive.

RAGHUBAR SINGH v. JETHU MAHTON.

The presentation of a plaint after the usual Court hours at the residence of the Judge is valid and a Judge has jurisdiction to receive it at his residence even after the Court hours, though he is not bound to do so.

Din Ram v. Hari Das, 14 Ind. Cas. 744; 34 A. 482; 9 A. L. J. 743, followed.

Appeal against a decree of the Additional District Judge, Batul, dated the 9th October 1920, in Civil Appeal No. 47 of 1920.

Mr. Atmaram Bhagwant, for the Applicant.

ORDER.—The only point urged in this case is, that the presentation of the plaint, which was made after the usual Court hours at the Munsif's residence, was not proper and that the plaint should have been rejected. The day on which the plaint was presented was the last day on which the limitation was to expire and the plaintiff's claim would have been barred by time the next day. This point was not raised in the First Court but was made a ground of appeal in the Court of the Additional District Judge. The case of Din Ram v. Hari Das (1) is an authority for holding that such a presentation is a valid presentation and that a Judge has jurisdiction to receive the plaint at his residence and after the Court hours, though he is not obliged to do so. The fact that that was a case of petition of appeal not of a plaint does not make any difference. The presentation of the plaint was not, therefore, improper and the plaintiff's claim could not be dismissed as time barred. There is no other ground pressed in this revision which is dismissed without notice to the other side.

In the matter of LETTERS PATENT APPEAL No. 3 OF 1921.

February 9, 1922.

RAGHUBAR SINGH AND OTHERS—APPELLANTS

versus

JETHU MAHTON—RESPONDENT.

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), s. 4—Letters Patent Appeal—Court-fee, whether leviable.

No Court-fee is leviable on a Letters Patent Appeal under the Court Fees Act.

Mr. Atul Krishna Roy, for the Appellants.

ORDER.—The question for decision is, whether Court fee is payable on a memorandum of appeal under section 10 of the Letters Patent. Up to now Court-fees have been levied, but it is contended that the only law under which Court-fees can be levied is section 4 of the Court Fees Act and that this section does not contemplate payment of Court-fee in the case of an appeal from the decision of a Single Judge of the High Court.

Section 4 of the Court Fees Act says: "No document of any of the kinds specified in the First or Second Schedule to this Act annexed, as chargeable with fees, shall be filed, exhibited or recorded in, or shall be received or furnished by, any of the said High Courts in any case coming before such Court in the exercise of its extraordinary original civil jurisdiction.....or in the exercise of its jurisdiction as regards appeals from the judgment of two or more Judges of the said Court, or of a Division Court..... .....unless in respect of such document there be paid a fee of an amount not less than that indicated by either of the said schedules as the proper fee for such document."

In this High Court, so far as I am aware, no Division Court has ever been constituted; and in any case, in my opinion, a Division Court must, under the law as it stands at present, consist of at least two Judges, for section 108 of the Government of India Act enacts that, "(1) Each High Court may by its own rules provide, as it thinks fit, for the exercise by one or more Judges or by Division Courts constituted by two or more Judges of the High Court, of the Original and Appellate Jurisdiction vested in the Court. (2) The Chief Justice of each High Court shall determine what Judge in each case is to sit alone, and what Judges of the Court, whether with or without the Chief Justice, are to constitute the several Division Courts."

Section 4 of the Court Fees Act, therefore, does not entitle the High Court to levy Court-fees on Letters Patent Appeals and there being no other law under which they can be levied such appeals must be accepted without Court-fees. I feel convinced, however, that it was never intended that Letters Patent Appeals should be filed without Court-fees and I would suggest that the matter be brought to the attention of the Legislature.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115, Sch. II, para. 15—Arbitration—Arbitrator getting private information but communicating it to other arbitrators—Award, validity of—Revision—High Court, power of.

A High Court will proceed very warily in allowing revision in the case of awards. [p. 676, col. 2.]

Ghulam Khan v. Muhammad Hassan, 29 C. 167; 6 C. W. N. 226; 29 I. A. 51; 12 M. L. J. 77; 4 Bom L. R. 161; 8 Sar. P. C. J. 154; 25 P. R. 1902 (P. C.), referred to.

Where in a case referred to arbitration one of the arbitrators gets private information about the case but takes care to communicate it to the other arbitrators in the presence of the parties and they have opportunity of checking the information or of contradicting it, the award is not vitiated. [p. 677, col. 1.]

Kanhaiya Lal v. Khairati Lal, 49 Ind. Cas. 308; 9 P. W. R. 1919 and Daya Kishen v. Dharam Das, 4 A. L. J. 159; A. W. N. (1907) 75, distinguished.

Petition, under section 115 of Act V of 1908, praying the High Court to revise a decree of the District Court, South Arcot, dated the 10th February 1918 in Civil Miscellaneous Appeal No. 6 of 1918, preferred against an order of the Additional District Munsif, Villupuram, dated the 30th November 1917, in Original Suit No. 223 of 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. V. Viswanatha Sastri, for the Appellant.—The award is vitiated by an illegality and the decree based on it should be set aside. It was the duty of abitrators to record evidence tendered by the parties and to base their judgment thereon. One of the arbitrators got private information and used his dealings with defendant to unfair advantage. He saw plaintiffs' accounts. The decree is liable to be set aside Ghulam Khan v. Muhammad Hussan (1), Kanhaiya Lal v. Khairati Lal (2) and Daya Kishen v. Dharam Das (3).

Mr. L. A. Govindaragava Iyer, for the Respondent—There has been no prejudice to defendant by the action of panchayatdar, Annusawmi. He no, doubt, examined defendant's accounts and detected the difference between it and the accounts produced before the panchayat. But defendant admitted the false entries. This knowledge obtained by Annusawmi was communicated to the other panchayatdars. The cases cited are not on all fours.

JUDGMENT.—The question here is, whether the Court should interfere in revision to set aside a decree passed in accordance with an award on the ground that the arbitration was vitiated by a material irregularity in that one of the arbitrators used knowledge obtained privately in coming to his decision as an arbitrator. Ghulam Khan v. Muhammad Hassan (1) is authority for saying that in the case of an award revision would be more objectionable than an appeal. It is, therefore, the rule that the Court proceeds very warily in allowing revision in awards. Two cases were referred to by the Vakil for the petitioner, one Kanhaiya Lal v. Khairati Lal (2) where an arbitrator made private enquiries from a person or persons unknown, behind the back of one of the parties—the plaintiff in the suit. It is there laid down that an arbitrator must come to his decision on evidence taken before both parties or after having given both parties an opportunity of being present at the enquiry and that the making of private enquiries vitiated the award. The other case is Daya Kishen v. Dharam Das (3) where the arbitrator made private and secret enquiries, the result of which was not recorded by him. It was held that it was legal misconduct to make private enquiries and make his award on information which he had privately obtained and which the parties had not got opportunities of checking.

In this case the evidence is that one of the panchayatdars used to have dealings with the defendant. He went to his shop and noticed a difference in the accounts of defendant with the plaintiff from the accounts before the panchayat. The panchayatdar (Annusami Chetty) communicated his knowledge to the other panchayatdars, both parties were present and the panchayat agreed with the opinion which he placed before them. The defendant actually admitted that some of the entries against plaintiff were false and fraudulent as suspected by Annusawmi Chetty. Farther, the other panchayatdars examined the accounts for themselves and there is no reason for thinking that they did not form an independent judgment thereon.

The information of Annusawmi Chetty may have been, in the first instance, privately obtained, but it was communicated to the other panchayatdars in the presence of the parties and they had opportunity of checking the information or of contradicting it. So, far from this, the defendant actually admitted the information was correct. This case clearly does not fall within the principles laid down in the authorities cited and the civil revision petition must be dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs in this case, the Japanese Cotton Trading Company, purchased, on the 29th July 1920, the remainder of a sub-lease of Gool Mansion, Mayo Road. The building comprises eight flats, of which one is in the occupation of the defendants as tenants. The plaintiffs purchased the building in order to provide residence for their Japanese staff, and the day after the purchase gave the defendants notice to quit on the 1st of October 1920. The defendants attorned to the plaintiffs and paid rent which was accepted up to the 1st of October, but as they pleaded the Bombay Rent Act and declined to quit, the plaintiffs have filed this suit.

The following issues were raised :—

(1) Whether the purchase of the property in suit by the plaintiffs is not ultra vires of the Company, and, if so, whether the plaintiffs are entitled to maintain this suit?

(2) Whether the plaintiffs require the premises in suit reasonably and bona fide for their own use and occupation within the meaning of section 9 (2) of the Rent Act?

(3) Whether there is satisfactory cause within the meaning of section 9 (2) of the Rent Act?

I disallowed the first issue, as the defendants having attorned the plaintiffs are estopped from denying the title of their landlord. Further, it can make no difference to them whether the suit is brought by the Company itself or by the purchasing directors.

As to the reasonableness and bona fides of plaintiffs' requirements, there can be no doubt. The Japanese staff consists of six married couples, ten children and twenty-nine bachelors. Of these five bachelors are on leave and twelve bachelors, one wife and five children are to arrive in a few months. The remainder of five married couples, five children and thirteen bachelors, are housed in a bungalow at Malabar Hill, a flat at Rafaya Manzil, and two temporarily in a boarding house. The occupants of Rafaya Manzil are under notice to quit. The Company, therefore, propose now to divide their staff between the Malabar Hill bungalow and Gool Mansion. The Managing Director for Bombay with his wife and five children and eight bachelors in the former, and the rest of the staff in the latter. This allotment is fully set out in Exhibit A, and the accommodation thus provided errs, if at all, on the side of economy of space.

It is faintly suggested that the allotment of one room in the flats to an "office" is a contravention of the head-lease from the Improvement Trust forbidding the use of any part of the premises without the consent of the Trust "for any business, trade or occupation or any purpose whatsoever other than a dwelling-house." But the so-called office is merely a room where the Code book is kept, where telegrams are received after office hours and de-coded, and where transactions thus made are recorded. No outsiders visit this room for business, and it is, therefore, no different to the room in a dwelling-house in which a Barrister reads his briefs at night. This use of the room is not inconsistent with its occupation as a dwelling-house, and in any case the only person who can raise the objection is the lessor or the sub-lessor.

The second issue raises the question whether the occupation of the servants of the Company is in law the occupation of the landlord. Under section 9 (2) of the Bombay Rent (War Restrictions) Act the landlord must show that the premises are required reasonably and bona fide "for his own occupation." Is the occupation of the Company's staff equivalent in law to the landlord's own occupation?

Now, the section only recognises two grounds founded on the occupation of the premises: (1) for the landlord's own occupation, and (2) for the occupation of any person for whose benefit the premises are held. The effect of the word "own" is no doubt to emphasize the personality of the subject, as, for instance, the phrase "every man is his own lawyer." Here it emphasizes the personality of the landlord. But I think this emphasis is used merely to contrast the occupation of the landlord with the occupation of the cestui que trust or beneficial owner. It is not intended to exclude the rule of law that the occupation of a servant is the occupation of the master. Optimus interpres rerum usus, and the section has always been so construed. In deciding on the requirements of landlords, it has always been the practise to consider the space required for the accommodation of servants.

Mr. Taleyarkhan relies upon the words "some other person in his employ" in the corresponding section of the English Act, and argues that their omission in the Indian Act shows that the Indian Legislature declined to recognise the occupation of a servant. But the occupation of a servant may be either qua servant that of his master or qua tenant of his master. The English section refers to the latter and does not touch the former. It allows the landlord to substitute another tenant if that tenant be in his employ; but it in no way affects the rule that the occupation of the servant qua servant is the occupation of the master.

The question then is, whether the staff were occupying the premises as servants of the landlord Company or as their tenants. The test is, whether this occupation is necessary to or ancillary to the performance of the servants' duties. In the case of Dobson v. Jones (1) a Surgeon who resided in a hospital so that he might be able more readily to perform the services required of him was held to occupy as a servant. Tindal, C. J., in that case said (page 120) :—

"The coachman who is placed in rooms of his master over the stable, the gardener who is put into a house in the garden, or the porter who occupies the lodge at a park gate, cannot be considered to occupy as tenants, but as servants merely whose possession and occupation is strictly and properly that of their masters"

So, also, in the case of Bent v. Roberts (2), a constable occupying quarters in the Police Station building was held to occupy as a servant.

But where the occupation is by way of remuneration or part payment for services, the servant occupies not as a servant but as a tenant. In Martin v. Assessment Committee of West Derby (3) a Police Superintendent was held to be a tenant of quarters which were at some distance from the Police Station.

The Company's staff will pay no rent for the premises they occupy, but that will make no difference if their occupation is part of their remuneration and not necessary and subservient to the performance of their services. This is illustrated by the case of Reg. v. Spurrell (4) where Cockburn, C J., said :—

"It may be that it happens to be convenient both to the master and to the servant, that the servant requiring some place of habitation shall, by agreement with the master, instead of receiving so much for his wages, out of which wages he would have to find himself a separate habitation, inhabit some premises of the master as part of the remuneration for his services; but it is only an equivalent for wages. He would be receiving in the one instance the whole amount of his wages, out of those wages he would have to find himself a habitation, for which he would have to pay rent; in the other he inhabits premises of his master, and instead of paying the master the rent the master deducts it from the wages."

Now, the Company's place of business is not at Mayo Road, and the residence of the staff in this building is not necessary to the performance of their services. Any other residence in Bombay would do equally well. In fact, some of the staff are residing at Malabar Hill. Further, it is clear that their occupation is by way of remuneration. The Company's Director produces the rules of the Company regulating its dealings with the emloyees. It is a compilation as comprehensive and far more lucid than the Civil Service Regulations. Rule 118 is as follows :—

"Persons, who are serving in the branches or agencies abroad, are to be provided with house accommodation and are also payable foreign service allowance within the limit of the following table."

The Japanese staff, when serving out of Japan, are entitled to foreign service allowance and house accommodation as part of their remuneration. Therefore, although they pay no rent, their occupation will be not as servants but as tenants.

I must, therefore, decide the second issue in the negative as the occupation of the staff will not be the occupation of the landlord Company.

But there is another ground on which the plaintiffs rely, and that is the general ground of any cause which may be deemed by the Court to be sufficient. This point arose last year in the case of the Hongkong & Shanghai Banking Corporation Ltd., v. Boyagis, Suits No. 582 and 583 of 1920, decided by my brother Marten, J. The case went off on other grounds, but Marten, J., though not called upon to decide it, referred to the recent English cases of Stovin v. Fairbrass (5) and Stephens v. Tatham (6). Stephens v. Tatham (6) merely follows the decision of the Court of Appeal in Stovin v. Fairbrass (5) and the latter is the only case that requires consideration. It was based upon the corresponding section of the English Act section 1 (3) of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (War Restrictions Act) 1915 (5 & 6 Geo. V, c. 97). In that section, there are three instances of grounds founded on the land.

lord's requirements in reference to occupation followed by the general words "some other ground which may be deemed satisfactory to the Court." This part of the section is as follows:—

"Or that the premises are reasonably required by the landlord for the occupation of himself or some other person in his employ, or in the employ of some tenant from him, or on some other ground which may be deemed satisfactory by the Court making such order."

The three instances founded on the landlord's requirements as to accommodation are (1) occupation by the landlord himself, (2) occupation by the employee, and (3) occupation by the tenants' employee, and then follow the general words as to satisfactory cause.

In Stovin v Fairbrass (5) the landlord required the premises in order to give vacant possession to his vendee. This was not one of the three specified cases and the Court held that it would not come under the general cause, because the exercise by the Court of its discretion in favour of the occupation of a person not so specified would be inconsistent with the particular specification of three cases of occupation. The Court held in effect that the general words "some other cause" are restricted to cases not sui generis with the three causes specified. Scrutton, L. J., differed on this point, and indeed the word "other" is usually construed to be either unrestricted in its generality or limited to cases sui generis with the particular words that precede it.

But it is not necessary to consider whether Stovin v. Fairbrass (5) was correctly decided, for the scheme of the section of the Indian Act is different. For the words "some other ground which may be deemed satisfactory by the Court" the words "any cause which may be deemed satisfactory by the Court" are substituted. The word "any" is as wide as possible: Beckett v. Sutton (7). The word "any" excludes limitation or qualification: Duck v. Bates (8). They place no limit on the discretion of the Court, and it seems to me, therefore, that the ratio decidendi of Stovin v. Fairbrass (5) is not applicable to the Indian section. Under the Indian Act the discretion of the Court in determining what is a satisfactory cause is unfetterrd. Then I have to ask myself the question whether the cause shown by the plaintiff Company regarding the accommodation of their staff is satisfactory, Under the English Act this is a specified ground. Does its omission in the Indian Act lead to an inference that it is not so in India? I think not. The particular cases of accommodation of an employee of a landlord or the employee of a tenant are omitted in the Indian Act, merely because they are superfluous in view of the very wide terms of the last clause. I think the accommodation of a staff of employees is sufficient cause under section 9 of the Bombay Rent Act. I am fortified in this opinion by the fact that express provision is made for such a case in the English Act.

The plaintiffs have spent four lacs in the purchase of the leasehold of the property in order to accommodate their staff, and it would be grossest injustice to prevent them from putting it to the use for which they purchased it. This would be tantamount to expropriation, and the object of the Bombay Rent Act is not the expropriation of the landlord but the prevention of profiteering.

Decree, therefore, that the defendants do deliver vacant possession to the plaintiffs on or before the 19th of July 1921, or in case an appeal is filed before that day on or before the 14th of September 1921. Defendants to pay plaintiffs compensation at the rate of Rs. 275 per mensem from 1st October 1920 to the date of delivery of possession and to pay plaintiffs' costs of this suit.

Appeal against a decree of the Additional District Judge, Bilaspur, dated the 7th February 1920, in Civil Appeal No. 196 of 1919.

Mr. G. L. Subhedar, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—The matter for decision in this appeal is, whether an application for execution of a decree made on the 14th of October 1919 is within time or not. The next previous application for execution was made on the 16th of September 1916 and on it a house was attached on the 12th of October 1916. On the 22th of that month the decree holder filed a receipt in Court acknowledging the payment of Rs. 100 by the judgment debtor towards satisfaction of the decree, whereupon the execution application was dismissed and the house was released from attachment. It was held in the First Court that the recording of the payment as certified was not a step-in-aid of execution of the decree and that the application to the Court to record it did not, therefore, give a new starting point for limitation under the fifth clause of Article 182 of the First Schedule of the Limitation Act.

2. On appeal the learned District Judge mentioned the dictum of Innes, J., in Kunhi Mannan v. Seshagiri Bhakthan (1), quoted with approval by Ismay, J. C., in Lachman Jat v. Hira Darzi (2), to the effect that the provisions of the Limitation Act should be construed as far as possible so as to prevent the defeat of bona fide endeavours to secure the fruits of a decree once obtained. Relying on these remarks more than on the decision of the case itself, in which the fresh start for limitation arose out of an application for payment to the decree-holder of the proceeds of a sale in execution, the learned Judge held that the recording of a payment as certified is a step in aid of execution, and set aside the order of the First Court dismissing the application as barred by time.

Against this judgment the judgment-debtors have appealed here on the ground that "the mere statement made by the decree-holders on 28th October 1916 that they had already received Rs. 100 out of Court, was not a step-in-aid of execution.' This arises out of a very common misreading of the provision with which we are concerned. It is not what the decree-holder does that has to be a step-in-aid of execution but what he asks the Court to do, and the date from which the period of limitation starts is the date on which he asks for that step to be taken, not that on which it is taken. Here, on the 28th of October 1916, the decree-holders made an application that the Court would record a part-payment of the decree which they certified to it. This recording of the payment was held to be a step in-aid of execution by the Calcutta High Court in Tarini Dass Bandyopadhya v. Bishtoo Lal Mukhopadaya (3) and the Allahabad High Court in Sujan Singh v. Hira Singh (4) and these rulings were followed in the former Court in Wasi Imam v. Poonit Singh (5) and Gopal Proshad Bhagat v. Rajendra

Lal Panja (6) and in the latter Court in Chotey Singh v. Eshwari (7).

The only possible objection to this view is, that a decree-holder might certify a payment in part satisfaction of an already time barred decree as there is no limitation for such certifying, and so get fresh starts for limitation absolutely indefinitely. This is met by the ruling of Piggott, J., in Bhajan Lall v. Ched. Lall (8) that the Court will refuse to record a payment towards a decree of which execution is already barred by time. It is also met by the practical consideration that, although a decree-holder might be able to certify with truth once or even twice that a payment had been made towards his decree after execution was barred by time, it is highly improbable that he would be in a position to do so a third time and quite certain that he would not be able to go on doing it indefinitely. I hold that the application to record the payment was an application to the Court to take a step in execution of the decree, and dismiss the appeal. As the respondents failed to appear, no order in respect of costs in necessary.

Mr. Munshi (with him Mr. M. V. Desai), for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Khan (with him Mr. Mirza), for the Defendant.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff has brought the present suit to recover from the defendants, as the result of certain transactions in Japanese camphor, the sum of Rs. 50,751-4 0 together with interest thereon at nine per cent, from 25th April 1919 together with costs and further interest on judgment at six per cent. per annum until payment.

The defendants have not denied the alleged transactions but have pleaded that they were wagering contracts and have asked that the suit be dismissed with costs.

The following issues were framed by Mr. Khan, the defendants' Counsel:—

1. Were the transactions in the suit wagering transactions?

2. Is the plaintiff entitled to any and, if so, what relief?

The facts of this interesting case are a little complicated and I shall go into them as fully as I can in order to help the reader to understand them.

There are three common forms of speculations in Bombay. They are known respectively as te i-mandi, teji, and mandi. The word teji means brightness, the word mandi means dulness. Thus, te,i is used to signify a rise in the market price of goods or stock, and mandi to signify a fall. In the te,i-mandi transactions, which have been very carefully examined by Beaman, J., in Jessiram v. Tulsidas (1) one party buys what is known as a double option. For this he pays a certain premium, say Rs. 20 per Rs. 1,000.

(1) 16 Ind. Cas, 576; 37 B. 264; 14 Bom. L. R, 617.

On the settling day the buyer has the right to declare himself either a seller or a buyer. If the market falls, he will declare himself a seller. If it rises, he will declare himself a buyer, e. g., if it be supposed that by the contract price a bar of silver or a bale of goods is worth Rs. 100, A buys the double option for Rs. 20. If the goods rise to Rs. 110 he will declare himself a buyer and will lose Rs. 10. If the goods fall to Rs. 90 he will declare himself a seller and will lose Rs. 10. But if the goods rise to Rs. 150 or fall to Rs. 50 he will declare himself a buyer and a seller respectively and in each case will make Rs. 30 profit. In other words, to use Beaman, J.'s phrase, "the party buying the double option (the te i-mandi) is backing the fluctuations of the market against its stability." Conversely, the party who sells the double option backs the stability of the market against its fluctuations.

The teji transaction is quite a different one. In it the buyer of the teji (lagadanaro or applier) pays the seller (khanaro or eater) a premium or teji over and above the contract price of the bar of silver or bale of goods. If the market rises the buyer of the teji who is also a buyer of the silver or the goods can ask the seller of the teji to give him the goods or their value at the market rate on settling day whatever it be. If the market falls, the buyer of the teji merely loses his premium, e. g., A buys Rs. 100 worth of bar silver from B and also buys teji by the payment of Rs. 20 premium. If the market rises to Rs. 150, A will make a profit of Rs. 50 minus his Rs 20. If the market falls to Rs. 50, A will lose his Rs. 20 premium or teji only. A thus insures himself against a big fall. B is not insured against a big rise.

The third kind of transaction is a mandi. It is the exact converse of the teji. The buyer of the mandi or premium is a seller of the goods and the mandi is the premium which he pays against a possible rise, e g, A sells Rs. 100 worth of bar silver to B and buys mandi by the payment of Rs. 20 premium. If the market falls to Rs. 50 A will make a profit of Rs. 50 minus his premium. If the market rises to Rs. 150 A will lose his Rs. 20 premium or mandi only.

The transactions with which we are concerned are teji transactions. On the 6th January 1919, the plaintiff bought from the defendant twenty five cases of Japanese camphor at the rate of Rs. 2-12-0 a tin for delivery on the 15th April 1919. On the 7th January 1919 the plaintiff paid the defendant Rs. 125 as teji at the rate of one anna on every Re. 2 12-0. On the 7th February 1919 the plaintiff bought for the same delivery one hundred cases of Japanese camphor at Rs. 2-13-0 a tin and on the 8th February paid Rs. 500 as teji at the rate of one anna on every Re. 2 13-0. On the 15th February 1919 the plaintiff bought one hundred and fifty cases of Japanese camphor for the same delivery at Rs. 2 15-0 a tin and on the same day paid the defendant Re. 750-0-0 as teji at the rate of one anna for every Rs. 2-15 0. Now, if the price of the camphor had fallen, no matter how little or how much, the plaintiff would have forfeited his teji. Unfortunately for the defendant, the price of camphor had risen by settling day to Re. 5-2-0 per tin. The plaintiff, on the 14th April 1919, wrote to the defendant an Attorney's letter saying that he would take delivery the next day (Exhibit A). On the 15th he went to the defendant's firm, tendered the contract price, and asked for delivery of the camphor. The defendant had no camphor to deliver. At the same time he wrote in reply to the plaintiff's letter that the plaintiff was not entitled to any delivery and that the transactions were invalid. After some correspondence the plaintiff filed the present suit for the difference between the rate at which he bought the camphor and its price on the settling day

Before discussing the arguments advanced by the learned Counsel, I wish to record my appreciation of the assistance which they have both given me in this difficult and intricate case.

Mr. Khan for the defendant has relied on the judgments of Beaman, J., in a series of te i-mandi suits. The first in order of time was Hariram v. Trikamdas, O. C. J. Suit No. 100 of 1908 (Unrep). Therein the learned Judge has observed:—

"While, therefore, I am now prepared to admit that it is open to any party suing upon a teji mandi transaction to satisfy the Court if he can that the particular instance was a genuine transaction in which the parties did intend, at the time of entering into it, that delivery should be given and taken, I still think that the presumption would be very strong against teji-mandi transactions as a class being genuine and lawful."

In Jessiram v. Tulsidas (1), Beaman, J., observed in regard to teji-mandi business (page 624*):—

"From the very nature of the transaction from the fact of a man being utterly indifferent whether he is going to buy or sell, there must arise a very strong presumption that he is not doing a genuine business and that the whole contract is really in the nature of a pure wager. I have already pointed out that that presumption may in special cases be rebutted; but as a rule, I think, it will be extremely difficult to do so."

Finally, in Basantlal v. Shivnarayan, O. C. J. Suit No. 665 of 1915, the learned Judge observed at the outset of his judgment:—

"I take this opportunity of re affirming emphatically, and now virtually stripped of any qualifications whatever, the opinion that in this market teji mandi transactions are all wagers. The more closely I look into the true character and intention of these transactions even when they are put forward as between Shroff and Shroff, the more evident it becomes that they are essentially by way of gaming and wagering."

On the strength of these authorities, Mr. Khan has strongly pressed on me to hold that the present transaction must be a wagering contract, until plaintiff has proved the contrary. But the learned Counsel has not realised the substantial difference between teji-mandi and teji transactions. With all deference to the eminent Judge who tried the three quoted cases, I am not sure that he did not go too far in his condemnation of teji mandi dealing. But whatever their character, there is no resemblance between them and the dealings in the present suit. The main ground on which Beaman, J., held teji mandi business to be wagering was the "utter indifference of one party whether he was going to buy or sell." That ground is absent in teji transactions. Therein the party who "applies" the teji is always a buyer.

Mr. Khan has next relied on two English cases: Universal Stock Exchange v. Strachan (2) and Gieve, In re, Trustee, Ex parte (3). In the former case the Jury found that the real meaning of the parties was that there should be merely a payment of differences. In the latter, the Judges found that "the conduct of the parties led almost necessarily to the inference that they only intended gambling transactions." These two cases have been the foundation of a number of decisions in the Bombay High Court of which the tenor has been much the same.

In Tod v. Lakhmidas Purshotamdas (4) Farran, J., observed (pages 415, 416):—

"Contracts are not wagering contracts, unless it be the intention of both contracting parties, at the time of entering into the contracts, under no circumstances to call for, or give delivery, from or to each other. There is no law against speculation, as there is against gambling."

In Sassoon v. Tokersey (5) Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C. J., remarked (page 621):—

"In cases of this description there is a danger of confounding speculation, or that which is popularly described as gambling, with agreements by way of wager, but the distinction in the legal result is vital....To make an agreement a wager there must be a common intention to bet."

In Mathuradas v. Narbadashankar (6) Beaman, J. observed (page 1004*):—

"I believe that before a Court can hold a contract, on the face of it genuine, or at any rate not clearly wagering as the contract in Gieve, In re, Trustee, Ex parte (3) was, to be a wagering contract, the Court must be satisfied that the intention of the parties was in no circumstances either to give or take delivery."

In Motilal Partabchand v. Govindram Jeychand (7) Batchelor, J., held a transaction to be a wagering contract because he held "it to be distinctly proved that in the contracts in suit neither party ever intended to give or receive delivery, but both parties intended to settle by the payment and receipt of differences."

In the earlier case, Hurmukhrai v. Narotamdass (8), Davar, J., laid down the following principle (page 138) :—

"If the Court is satisfied that when the parties entered into the agreements before it, both of them intended neither to take or give delivery, but merely intended to adjust the transactions on the due date or dates by the payment or receipt of differences, as the case may be,.....then the Court should have no hesitation in holding that the transactions were mere agreements by way of wagers and as such void in law."

Finally, in the recent decision of Manalal Raghunath v. Radhakison Ramjiwan (9) Macleod, C. J., observed (page 1032*) :—

"The defendants must prove that there was an understanding between them and plaintiffs, (1) that they were not only speculating but gambling, (2) that, if they ordered the plaintiffs to buy cotton, they would never call upon them to deliver it, and if they ordered them to sell, they would never themselves deliver it."

From these authorities the principle is clear. The defendant in this case has to prove that there was an agreement or understanding between him and the plaintiff that in case the market rose the plaintiff should not require the defendant to deliver to him any camphor. But such an agreement or understanding requires, in my opinion, strict proof. A defence that the contract was a wagering one is not one that an honourable man would advance on his own behalf. It is a dishonest man's defence, for if he won the defendant would never object to the wagering character of the contret, and such a defence should not be lightly allowed. In this connection, I would rely on the observations of Beaman, J., in Jessiram v. Tulsidas (1) (page 628†).

"Nor do I think the Courts ought lightly to favour gambling defences. My own leaning has always been very strongly against them...I think it is only too clear that if dishonest gamblers know that they can evade their liabilities upon every occasion without much trouble by merely pleading wagering, the worst class of gamblers will gamble more desperately and with a greater sense of impunity than they ever did before. The Courts by countenancing such gamblers in receiving their winnings when they win and refusing to pay when they lose, confident that they will not be compelled by process of law to pay, may indeed foster the evil which both the Legislature and the Courts would desire to see altogether suppressed."

I have, therefore, to see whether the defendant has adequately proved the existence of a definite understanding between him and the plaintiff that, in no circumstances whatever, was there to be any delivery. Beyond the defendant's own word he has led no evidence whatever. Both parties, however, tried to prove the existence or non existence of such an understanding by reference to a previous transaction between the defendant and plaintiff.

In January 1918 the plaintiff made a purchase of seventy five cases of camphor from the defendant. The contract rate per tin was Rs. 1-15-0 and the plaintiff paid teji at the rate of one anna per tin. The price of camphor rose, with the result that whereas the contract price of the seventy five cases of camphor was Rs. 11,595, it amounted on settling day to Rs. 13,840-5-0. According to the plaintiff he took delivery of the camphor. Unfortunately, his account shows a debit entry of Rs. 13,840-5-0 (Exhibit L) against the defendant and a subsequent entry of Rs. 2,244-6-0 (Exhibit M) to the defendant's credit. The plaintiff has explained that on the settling day he was in a great hurry and feared that unless he paid for the camphor before closing time the defendant would repudiate his contract. He did not know exactly what he owed him, he only knew the approximate amount. He, therefore, gave him a number of chittis or drafts on other firms. Afterwards he found that he had overpaid the defendant by Rs. 2,244-6-0 and the latter re-paid him this sum later. Now, it is most unlikely that a business man would overpay for camphor bought by him by Rs. 2,244-6-0. It is, moreover, absurd for the plaintiff to say that he only knew the approximate price of the camphor. That had been paid in Januray and the settling day was in April. The defendant's story is more credible. The defendant and Gopalji Gangji have deposed that as regards fifty cases Vithaldas Asharam sold them to Gopalji Gangji, Gopalji Gangji sold them to defendant, defendant sold them to plaintiff who re sold them to Vithaldas Asharam. As the price of camphor had risen considerably on the settling day the parties, instead of delivering camphor from one to the other, simply paid each other the differences. Vithaldas Asharam and the plaintiff settled with each other and defendant and Gopalji Gangji settled with each other. The last two settled at Rs. 2-6 0 a case. But, instead of defendant paying Gopalji Gangji and the latter paying the plaintiff, the defendant paid the plaintiff direct the difference between Rs 1-15 0 and Rs. 2-6-0 a case, i. e., 0-7-0 a tin. Each case has admittedly eighty tins. 50 multiplied by 80 is equal to 4000. 4000 multiplied by 7 is equal to 28000. 28000 annas are equal to Rs. 1,750. If from this rebate at one fourth per cent. (Rs. 4 6-0) be deducted the difference on fifty cases was Rs. 1,745- 0 0. As regards the remaining twenty-five cases the defendant sold them to the plaintiff who sold them to one Ramanlal and settled with him. The defendant settled with Ramanlal at Rs. 2 3-0. He, therefore, paid the plaintiff the difference between Rs. 2-3 0 and Rs. 1-15-0 equal to four annas. Now 25 multiplied by 80 is equal to 2000. 2000 multiplied by 4 is equal to 8000 annas equal to Rs. 500. If rebate be deducted the amount due was Rs. 498-12 0. If to Rs. 498-12 0 Rs. 1,745-10 0 be added the total comes to Rs. 2,244-6-0 the amount paid by the defendant to the plaintiff in Exhibit M. Therefore, I am forced to the conclusion that the plaintiff's story of dealing in this transaction is false and that the parties merely settled differences. The learned Counsel for the defendant has also laid great stress on the omission of the word teji from the contract and the plaint. But the plaintiff has explained that he worded the contract and the plaint in the way he did because he was afraid that if he inserted the word teji in the contract or the plaint the Courts could at once jump to the conclusion that the contract was a wagering one; and in view of the decisions of Beaman, J., in the teji mandi cases, this was not a wholly unreasonable point of view. And, although I agree with Mr. Khan that in the January transaction the parties settled differences I am not thereby forced to conclude that in the transaction before me the parties bound themselves not to make or take delivery. Before I could come to that conclusion I should have to feel certain that in no teji transaction is delivery ever given. But Dayal Lalji's Munim Nagindas Manickchand has deposed that his firm often gives delivery in teji transactions and similar evidence was given by Ali Mahomed Abdulla, a partner in the firm of Abdulla Maoji. In one of the cases mentioned by them the plaintiff had a teji contract with the firm of Dayal Lalji. They delivered to him one hundred and twenty five cases and he delivered them again on a vaida contract to Ali Mohamed Abdulla. Nor is there any thing strange in this. Behind all vaida and teji contracts there is a vast ganuine business. Camphor or other goods may be sold and re-sold a thousand times before they pass from A, the importer, to Z, the distributor. But in the end they reach their destination. There is no speculation in articles that are not imported into India. It has thus been rightly held that speculation in forward contracts is not necessarily wagering. Now what is the difference between ordinary vaida speculation and teji contract? Only this, that the teji contract is the less speculative of the two. For he who applies teji ensures himself by the payment of a teji or premium from a heavy fall in the price, I am thus of opinion that teji and vaida transactions are on exactly the same footing and that unless it can be positively proved that the parties agreed neither to ask for nor to give delivery the transactions are not wagering contracts. No such agreement has been proved here.

Since no such agreement has been proved and the transactions are not wagering contracts it remains for me to fix the rate of damages. The plaintiff has stated in his evidence that the rate of the camphor on settling day was Rs. 5-2-0 The parties agree to fix the rate at

GANGA RAM v. NANDA.

Rs. 5-1-0. The parties have also agreed that the teji was wrongly debited by the plaintiff to the defendant in the particulars. The plaintiff paid the te i by way of insurance and cannot ask for it back.

I award the plaintiff a decree for Rs. 48,000 with costs and interest on judgment accordingly.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 52—Punjab Loans Limitation Act (I of 1904)—Suit to recover price of articles sold.

A suit to recover a sum of money as representing the price of certain articles sold by the plaintiff to the defendant, is governed by Article 52 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act as extended by the Punjab Loans Limitation Act.

Application, under section 25 of Act IX of 1887, for revision of a decree of the Munsif, First Class, exercising powers of a Judge, Small Cause Court, Kangra, dated the 3rd/4th December, 1918.

Lala Mehr Chand Mahajan, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—The respondent has been served with notice of to-day's hearing, but has not appeared nor has he been represented at the hearing before me. I accordingly proceed to decide the petition ex-parte.

From the claim it is quite clear that the plaintiff is suing for a sum of money as representing the price of certain articles sold by him to the defendant, and to such a suit Article 52 of the Limitation Act is clearly applicable and not Article 115. The lower Court has found on the merits in favour of the plaintiff and as it dismissed his suit simply on the ground that it was barred under Article 115, whereas it is within time under Article 52 of the Limitation Act as extended by the Punjab Loans Limitation Act, I accept the petition and grant the plaintiff a decree for the amount claimed with costs.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Presumption—Separation—Actual partition not proved—Separation inferred from circumstances.

In the case of a Hindu Mitakshara family there is a presumption of jointness and any one who pleads disruption must prove it. [p. 688, col. 2.]

Where there is no direct evidence of disruption separation may be inferred from other circumstances [p. 689, col. 1.]

Separation may be proved by acts or declarations which show an agreement and intention to separate, such as cesser of commensality, separate occupation of portions of the property, separate enjoyment of distinct shares of the profits, separate definement of shares in the Revenue Records, agreement to divide the proceeds in definite shares or other acts which are inconsistent with the family remaining joint, such as separate transactions between themselves or with others Mere cesser of commensality or of co-worship, division of the income, definement of shares in the revenue or land registration records, separate occupation of portions of the property or separate collections of rents, or separate dealings, are not conclusive, unless there is an intention to separate. They are all evidence of separation, and may lead to the inference that there was a separation [p. 689, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

COUTTS, J.—This suit was brought for a declaration of the plaintiffs' title by survivorship to certain properties specified in the schedule to the plaint and for possession. The suit has been dismissed and the plaintiffs have appealed.

Both the plaintiffs and defendants are descendants of one Jugal Kishore Jha. Jugal Kishore had two sons, Tribani and Kali Prassad. Tribani married Maya Debi and by her had two daughters, Rama Debi and Bhagbatti Debi. Maya Debi, Rama Debi and Bhagbatti Debi are defendants in the suit. The second son of Jugal Kishore, Kali Prasad, had two sons, Tara Prasad and Baidya Nath Prasad. Baidya Nath died without issue but Tara Prasad had two sons, Som Nath and Tung Nath. Tara, Som Nath and Nung Nath are the plaintiffs There is some discrepancy in the evidence as to the dates on which Jugal Kishore, Tribeni and Kali Prasad died, but in opening his case the learned Vakil for the appellants stated that Jugal Kishore died in 1906, Tribeni in 1911 and Kali Prasad in 1904 and as these dates are not objected to by the other side I will accept them as correct.

It appears that about 25 years before the institution of the suit, when Jugal Kishore's wife died, he left his ancestral home and went and lived with a mistress; Tribeni, who was then some 12 or 15 years of age, went to live with his uncle Bipro Charan Duari; and Kali, who was an infant, went with his father and was looked after by the mistress. After living with Bipro Charan for a few years Tribeni went and lived with a married sister, he was married from her house and afterwards went and lived with his father-in-law. Kali Prasad, after being with his father for a few years, went to Bipro Charan's house and lived there until his marriage when he also went and stayed in his father-in law's house till his death in 1904. Tribeni after living in his father-in law's house for some time bought back the ancestral house which had been previously sold in execution of a decree against Jugal Kishore. On the death of Kali Prasad he took his two sons, Tara Prasad and Baidya Nath, who were children, into his house. He kept them there for a short time and then rented a house next door for them. Tara Prasad afterwards purchased this house and there he and his children have remained. Tribeni died in 1911 but before his death he executed a Will by which he bequeathed the properties in suit to his widow and his daughters. After his death they took possession of the properties and the plaintiffs' case is that the family was a joint family, the properties were joint family properties and consequently they were entitled to succeed by survivorship. The defendants, on the other hand, who, as I have already said, are widow and daughters of Tribeni, alleged that there was a disruption of the family after the death of Jugal Kishore's wife when he went to live with his mistress, that the properties in suit were self acquired properties of Tribeni and as such they were entitled to them under the Will.

The main questions for consideration in the case were, (1) whether the family was a joint family, and (2) whether the properties in suit were Tribeni's self-acquired properties or whether they were joint family properties; and these are the only points on which we have been addressed in this appeal. The learned Subordinate Judge has found against the plaintiffs on both points.

The first contention of the learned Vakil for the appellants is, that the learned Subordinate Judge has wrongly placed the onus on the plaintiffs. What he has said is, that "the presumption in Hindu Law of the jointness of a Hindu family must give way to the general principle that the one who makes a claim must prove it in a case like this where prima facie from the history of the family and the facts and circumstances that have been admitted the family was not a joint family." Now, there can be no doubt that there is in the case of a Hindu Mitakshara family a presumption of jointness and that any one who pleads disruption must prove it: and it might seem at first sight as if the learned Subordinate Judge had taken a wrong view of the case, but a consideration of the whole of his judgment makes it clear that this is not so. He has clearly realised that the presumption is in favour of jointness but he finds that the facts of this case show that the family was separate. I do not think, therefore, that the onus has been wrongly placed on the plaintiffs but the question remains whether separation has been proved. Now, at the outset it must be admitted that the defendants have not been able to establish exactly when disruption took place. In the plaint they put it at the time of the death of Jugal Kishore's wife when he went off to live with his mistress, but some of the witnesses have said that the separation took place at a later date. Very great stress has been laid on this point by the learned Vakil for the appellants and it has been urged that this of itself is sufficient to destroy the defendants' case. It is certainly a circumstance which must be taken into consideration, but in my opinion this fact is of itself not sufficient to show that the defendants' allegation that the family was separate is a false one. It may be and it often is difficult to say exactly at what point of time a family became separate and if the contention were correct it would be almost impossible to establish separation. We must examine the circumstances of the family. The circumstances from which separation may be deduced have been very clearly stated by Trevelyan, in his Hindu Law, at page 349—"Separation may be proved by acts or declarations which show an agreement and intention to separate, such as cesser of commensality, separate occupation of portions of the property, separate enjoyment of distinct shares of the profits, separate definement of shares in the Revenue Records, agreement to divide the proceeds in definite shares or other acts which are inconsistent with the family remaining joint, such as separate transactions between themselves or with others. Mere cesser of commensality or of co-worship, division of the income, definement of shares in the revenue or land registration records, separate occupation of portions of the property or separate collections of rents, or separate dealings, are not conclusive, unless there is an intention to separate. They are all evidence of separation, and may lead to the inference that there was a separation." Applying these principles to the present case we find, in the first place, that since the death of Jugal Kishore's wife and since he went to live with his mistress there has been no commensality in the family. Jugal Kishore lived with his mistress. Tribeni lived with his uncle, afterwards he lived in his father-in-law's house and subsequently by himself in the ancestral house after he had purchased it. Kali Prasad, when his mother died, was an infant, he lived for a short time with Jugal Kishore's mistress, afterwards he went to live with his uncle and after his marriage he lived in his father in law's house until his death. It is true that Tribeni, after the death of Kali Prasad, took his children, Tara Prasad and Baidaya Nath, into his own house and subsequently rented another house close by for them, he also appears to have invested them with the sacred thread and to have arranged their marriages, but this is not inconsistent with his position as a separate member, Deoki Singh v. Mussammat Anupa (1), and it is clear that there has been no commensality in the family since the death of Jugal Kishore's wife, nor does there appear to have been community of worship.

I now come to dealings by Tribeni and Tara Prasad: if the family had been a joint family Jugal Kishore would ordinarily have been the karta until his death. Now, as I have said, he died in 1906, yet in 1895 Tribeni purchased the ancestral house (Exhibit A): in 1896 he mortgaged a brick kiln which he describes as "my brick kiln" to one Udai Chand (Exhibit D); in 1899 he borrowed Rs. 50 from Parbati Charan Jha Duari for household expenses and the cost of building a pacca house (Exhibit F) and in 1900 he took the lease of a house from one Kalanand Barbai (Exhibit 4). All these transactions took place before the death of Jugal Kishore and they appear to indicate clearly that Jugal Kishore was not the karta of the family and, if this be so, they are very strong indications that the family was not a joint family. Subsequent to Jugal Kishore's death there are a number of transactions of Tribeni separately; namely, purchase of part of property No. 3 in the schedule to the plaint, in 1905 (Exhibit K); purchase of a portion of property No. 3 in 1905 (Exhibit C); purchase of lakheraj property in execution of a money-decree in 1908 (Exhibit S); purchase of property in execution of another money-decree in 1909 (Exhibit R) and, finally, the Will executed by Tribeni by virtue of which the defendants have taken possession of the properties. All these are, in my opinion, strong evidence that there had been separation and in support of this view I may refer to the case of Girja Bai v. Sadashiv Dhundiraj (2) where their Lordships of the Privy Council remarked: "The intention to separate may be evinced in different ways, either by explicit declaration or by conduct. If it is an inference derivable from conduct it will be for the Court to determine whether it was unequivocal and explicit. In Joy Narain Giri v. Girish Chunder Kyti (3) their Lordships regarded the conduct of one of the co-sharers who constituted the joint family 'when he left the joint residence and withdrew himself from commensality as indicating a fixed determination henceforward to live separately from his cousin,' and treated 'the fact of his borrowing money for his maintenance, as well as making a Will, as indicating, at all events, that he himself considered that a separation had taken place.' The conclusion was based on the inference of intention derivable from the acts and declarations of the member who, it was alleged, had separated himself, and not from the conduct or attitude of any other party." In addition to the separate transactions of Tribeni, we have also separate transactions by Tara Prasad. In 1906 he purchased a house, the house in which he subsequently lived. This would appear from the evidence of the plaintiffs' own witness, Bipro Charan Duari, who says: "Tara Prasad is in a separate house purchased separately;" and also from the evidence of the defendants' witness, No. 1 Sambhu Charan Jha, who says: "Tara Prasad purchased a house with his own money." Again, in 1911, a mortgage was executed in favour of Tara Prasad (Exhibit 10). It is clear then that Tara Prasad also had separate transactions. Another piece of evidence which tends to show separation is the fact that different members of the family are shown in the Revenue Records as holding separate shares (Exhibit B). This Exhibit is a certified copy of a Khewat which shows "Tribeni Panda, son of Jugal Kishore Panda, 1 share, Tara Panda and Bhayya Ram Panda, sons of Kalika Panda, 1 share in equal shares."

I now come to the matter of the division of the income. There was possibly a very small income from certain ancestral property but this is practically negligible. Jugal Kishore's income was derived from Jajmani. He was a priest and his income was from fees paid to him by Jajmans. It is contended that this was ancestral property and that it has never been divided. Now, the facts with regard to these Jajmans appear to be that Jugal Kishore and after him Tribeni attempted to keep all the fees paid by the Jajmans, but there is evidence, and it is not disputed, that on two occasions at least there was a dispute as to the division of these fees, which was settled by a Punchayat and the fees were divided. It is strongly urged that this indicates that there was no separation. I am unable to accept the contention. It appears to me rather to indicate that the family was separate and that the different members were quarrelling as to the division of these fees; but, apart from this, the fees were not, in my opinion, ancestral property. In Gour's Hindu Code, at page 472, in paragraph 1054, he says: "Both the Mitakshara and the Dayabhaga devote a chapter each to the subject of self acquisition. Their substance is to exempt all acquisitions made without detriment to the joint estate. The rest is merely illustrative and most of the illustrations refer to occupations now no longer pursued. Thus the Dayabhaga gives the following list as constituting the gains of science:"

"(3) Fee for officiating as a priest."

It may be that the Jajmans were ancestral in the sense that Jugal Kishore, and his father before him, had acted as priests for the Jajmans and their fathers, but the fees were not joint family property, they were the self-acquisition of the member of the family to whom they were paid.

We have, thus, in the present case no commensality, no co worship, separate transactions and separate definement of shares in Revenue Records and in my opinion the circumstances are such as to lead to the irresistible conclusion that the family was separate although there had been no regular partition.

I shall now deal with the different portions of property claimed in the plaint. The first of these is the ancestral house. Admittedly, this was purchased by Tribeni. It was, as I have already said, purchased in 1895 when Jugal Kishore was still alive, there was no joint fund out of which it could have been purchased and it was clearly Tribeni's self-acquisition. The next item is a pucca house in the town of Deoghar Jhasa Gari. This was apparently ancestral property and all that Tribeni was entitled to was his share. The plaintiffs are, therefore, entitled to a share of this property. The next items (3) and (4) are on the same footing; both are lakheraj properties in the town of Deoghar purchased by Tribeni. Here, again, there was no joint fund out of which they could have been purchased and the circumstances indicate clearly that the defendants' case, that these were Tribeni's self-acquisition, is true. The next item is a 10-pies share in Taluk Marwa. This was admittedly ancestral property and as such Tribeni could only be entitled to his own share. The next items of property are the Jajmans and with regard to these I have already said that, in my opinion, the fees are self acquired property. The plaintiffs are, therefore, not entitled to any share in these. The next item is a milkiat in Arrah, this is ancestral property and stands on the same footing as the Marwa property. The last item is a mango garden in village Ramgarh, Taluk Rohini, which was purchased by Tribeni himself and, for the reasons I have already given in respect of the other properties purchased by him, is his self-acquired property.

In the result, then, I see no reason to interfere with the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge except in regard to Jhasa Gari, Marwa and Arrah properties in which the plaintiffs are entitled to a declaration of their right to their own share. They can, however, get no separate possession because there has been no prayer for partition. The respondents are entitled to their costs of this appeal.

Diwan Mehr Chand, for the Appellant.

Mr. Kanwar Narain, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are given in the judgment of the learned Judge in Chambers. The learned Judge has held that the Article of Limitation applicable to this suit is either 115 or 120, and that in either case the suit is within time. He has, therefore, reversed the decision of the lower Courts, who dismissed the suit as time-barred, and has remanded the case for a decision on the merits.

The defendant urges that this decision is incorrect and that the suit is not within limitation. The prayer in the plaint is for the delivery of a certain amount of grain valued at a thousand rupees, but Counsel for the plaintiff frankly admits that his client seeks a money-decree. So that, there is really no distinction between this case and that published in Ganga Ram v. Nanda (1). In that ruling it was held that Article 52 applied to such cases. But Article 52 refers to suits for the price of goods sold and delivered, and when, as in the present case, grain is advanced on a contract that it should be re-paid in kind we are unable to hold that it is a case of goods being sold, for the words "goods being sold" we understand to refer to a case in which the contract is to pay for the price of the goods in money and not to return them in kind. In Mengha Ram v. Hassu (2), it is held that a claim like the present falls either under Article 65 or Article 115 of the Schedule, and this ruling seems to us correct. The defendant not having fulfilled the promise to return the grain in kind we can only regard the present claim as one for compensation for breach. Under both of these Articles the limitation is three years. Diwan Mehr Chand for the defendant admits that Article 115 applies, whereas Mr. Kanwar Narain for the plaintiff urges that the case is governed by Article 120. We cannot, however, apply Article 120 for that Article only applies when no other Article is applicable and we have already held that either Article 65 or 115 applies to the case. But the learned Judge in Chambers holds that the implied contract was broken only shortly before the suit. We are unable to discover on what grounds he so holds. The contract was to re-pay the grain with 50 per cent. interest (Hasab rasum Sahukara). Diwan Mehr Chand contends that this means that the grain was to be paid at the next wheat harvest and if this view be correct the suit is undoubtedly time-barred. Mr. Kanwar Narain, however, contends that the meaning of the phrase is that the grain was to be re-paid on demand. Both sides admit that demand has been made but Diwan Mehr Chand contends that it was more than three years prior to suit and that the suit is, therefore, time barred. On this point further enquiry must be made.

We so far accept the appeal as to hold that the case is governed either by Article 65 or 115. The order of remand to the First Court will stand good, but that Court will make further enquiry as to the meaning of the words, "Pirt Sahukara," and also, if necessary, as to when demand was made, and will then re decide the question of limitation in accordance with those enquiries.

Costs of this appeal will be costs in the cause.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 146, 148 to 152—Scandalous and insulting question, relevancy of.

Where in a dispute as to property the defendant alleges that he derived title thereto from a certain lady and she is examined as a witness on his behalf, a question put to her by the plaintiff as to whether she had become pregnant by a certain person is relevant, if the plaintiff's case is that she did not inherit the property of her husband by reason of her unchastity during her husband's lifetime, but if it is asked for impeaching her credit as a witness the Court has to consider the provisions of sections 146 and 148 to 152 of the Evidence Act before allowing it. [p. 693, col. 1.]

Rule against an order of the Sub-Judge, Second Court, Howrah.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. Avetoone (with him Babu Amarendra Nath Bose), for the Petitioner.—The defendant No. 6 is the petitioner. The facts shortly are these. A title suit was brought against myself and others by the plaintiff in the Subordinate Judge's Court at Howrah. I was contesting the case and examined in my behalf a female witness on commission issued by the Court. I derived my title to the property in suit from that witness of mine. While the witness was being examined, the plaintiff asked her a grossly scandalous question as to whether she had been living with one Haridas Ghosh and had been made pregnant by him. I objected to the question as being quite irrelevant. The learned Judge has overruled my objection. I submit, under provisions of the Evidence Act, the question was quite irrelevant and grossly improper and scandalous. It ought to have been disallowed as having nothing to do with the facts of the case. Refers to sections 146, 148—152 of the Indian Evidence Act.

Babu Rishindra Nath Sarcar, for the Opposite Party.—Our case was that the petitioner could not have derived title from the witness, inasmuch as she did not inherit the property by reason of her unchastity during the lifetime of her husband. It is on that ground that we opposed her being examined on commission. That is our case from the very beginning. I submit the question is perfectly relevant and the objection has been rightly disallowed.

Mr. Avetoone replied in brief.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner, who is the defendant No. 6 in a suit pending in the Subordinate Judge's Court at Howrah, examined a witness—Manada Dasi—from whom the petitioner claims to have derived title to the property in dispute. Manada was examined on commission and the opposite party, who is the plaintiff in the suit, put to her the question as to whether she was made pregnant by one Hari Das Ghose. Objection was taken to this question and the matter was brought before the Court. The learned Subordinate Judge held that it was a relevant question.

Against that order, the petitioner moved this Court and obtained this Rule.

It is stated that the question is insulting and scandalous. But the opposite party contends that it was put because the plaintiff's case was that the witness did not inherit the property by reason of her unchastity during the lifetime of her husband.

The form in which the question was asked does not show what period it referred to—whether the lifetime of the witness's husband, or after his death If the plaintiff's case was that she did not inherit the property of her husband by reason of her unchastity during his lifetime, then the question would be relevant. If, however, it was asked for impeaching her credit as a witness, the Court will have to consider the provisions of sections 146 and 148 to 152 of the Evidence Act.

It is contended on behalf of the opposite party that the statements made in the plaint, taken with those made in the petition opposing the issue of commission for examining the witness, go to show that his case was that the witness did not inherit the property by reason of her unchastity during her husband's lifetime, and as such the question was relevant. The learned Subordinate Judge, however, has not stated any reasons for holding that the question was relevant.

In the circumstances, we think that the case should go back to the learned Subordinate Judge. He will consider, having regard to the plaint, the petition, and the issues as framed, whether the question, as it stands, is relevant; and if not, whether the question is allowable, having regard to the provisions of the Evidence Act.

No order as to costs.

PANDU v. ABDUL KADAR.

JUDGMENT.—The following genealogical tree as given in the plaint shows the relationship of plaintiff No. 2 with Raoji, who died about 1882, leaving a widow Ahelai:—

The plaintiffs' story is that on the death of Ahelai, the widow of Raoji, the present plaintiff No. 2, Govinda, became the rightful claimant of all the immoveable property left by Raoji at the time of his death. He has sold a nine-anna seven-pie share in the six fields and an eight-anna share in the seven houses asked for in the plaint to plaintiff No. 1 for Rs. 3,000 by a deed of sale dated 25th May 1918. The property is claimed as having belonged to Raoji.

It was denied by the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 that plaintiff No. 2 is the reversioner of Raoji the correctness of the genealogical tree given in the plaint being disputed. Plaintiff No. 1's purchase was said to be without consideration and champertous and defendants pleaded that their father purchased fields Survey Numbers 5, 36 and 252 together with houses Nos. 1 to 4 in the plaint under a registered sale deed dated 30th March 1899 for Rs. 1,600 from Ahelai, the widow of Raoji, and purchased Survey No. 2 of Hasnapur for Rs. 600 orally from the same lady about 1905. The sale was in favour of their father, Narayan, and was said to be for legal necessity, as Ahelai wanted money for maintenance and cultivation expenses and also to pay off creditors. It was contended that their father and they themselves (defendants) have been accepted as tenants by the Jagirdar of the villages in which the fields in suit are situate and, therefore, plaintiffs cannot eject them.

Defendants Nos. 3 to 5 further contended that Survey Number 106 of Ladegaon was gifted by Ahelai to their father Sonaji, he having served her during her illness; and field Survey Number 25 of Vilegaon was orally sold by that lady to Sonaji in 1899 for Rs. 350. That sale was also for legal necessity as she wanted money for maintenance expenses. They also claimed houses Nos. 5, 6 and 7 stating that this was their ancestral property and never belonged to Ahelai or her husband.

Defendant No. 6, who is in possession of Survey Number 26, stated he got it in exchange from one Sheoram Madangopal some years ago who had purchased it from one Krishnaji Khandooji. It was denied that the field belonged to Ahelai or her husband.

The findings of the Trial Court may be summarised as follows. Plaintiffs had failed to prove the alleged relationship between plaintiff No. 2 and Raoji. The sale in favour of the first two defendants' father Narayan by Ahelai was held established. Rupees 1,050 of the consideration was found to be for legal necessity and the remaining Rs. 550 was found not to be for legal necessity. Narayan was held to have purchased field No. 2 of Hasnapur from Ahelai for Rs. 600 but that sale was not for legal necessity. Issue No. 3 dealing with the alleged gift of Survey Number 106 of Ladegaon and the oral sale of Survey No. 25 of Vilegaon was found in the negative. Field No. 26 was found to have formed part of Raoji's estate. Plaintiff No. 2's sale of a portion of the disputed property in favour of plaintiff No. 1 was held established and it was found that defendants had failed to prove any special tenure of the fields. The case was dismissed.

On appeal, the learned District Judge, Akola, a Judge of great experience, finds that the second plaintiff is the reversioner of Raoji and plaintiffs were given a decree for all the property mentioned in the plaint, except houses Nos. 3 to 7. Against that decision, the present appeal has been filed.

It has to be remembered that the findings on which the case has been decided are findings of fact; but it is contended that these findings cannot be accepted because the evidence on record does not sufficiently establish the relationship claimed by the plaintiff No. 2 with Raoji. It is frankly admitted that, apart from the plea of plaintiff No. 2 not being the next reversioner, appellants have no case and if this Court holds with the lower Appellate Court the property in suit must go to the plaintiffs.

The appellants' argument is that it is not sufficient for the second plaintiff to prove some relationship; that does not help him. He has to establish every link in the genealogical chain connecting him with Raoji and in this connection are quoted Kedarnauth Doss v. Protab Chunder Doss (1), Rama Row v. Kuttiya Gounden (2) and Mewa Singh v. Basant Singh (3). It seems to me, following the case reported in the Madras Law Journal Reports [Rama Row v. Kuttiya Gounden (2)] quoted, that "it is incumbent on a plaintiff seeking to succeed to property as a reversioner affirmatively to establish the particular relationship which he puts forward and he is also bound to satisfy the Court that, to the best of his knowledge, there are no nearer heirs, but he cannot be expected to do anything more and it is for those who claim that their kinship is nearer to prove that relationship." The lower Appellate Court here has gone on circumstances which certainly go a very long way towards establishing the justice of Govinda's case. The land is situate in a Izara village and it has apparently been customary on the death of a Khatadar by the officials to report to the Izardar such death. The Izardar then holds a formal enquiry and admits a new Khatadar. In fact, these mutation proceedings before the Izardar are exactly the same as those appertaining to the Revenue Courts in Berar. It is not here contended that the evidence of the mutation proceedings upon which the decision of this case rests was improperly admitted. It is clear that in the mutation proceedings of 1889 (Exhibit P-6) Abelai made a statement in which she admitted that Rama, son of Hambirji, was also an heir. She describes him as the nephew of the deceased. Rama was also examined in those proceedings, which, it has to be remembered, took place long before the disputes arose. He states:

"Kamaljabai, wife of Hiraji, was directly my Sakhha chulti (wife of paternal uncle)." He further states that he was separate. He performed the obsequies of Raoji and also Kamaljabai and mentioned that he had one son named Gondya and another by name Moti. The word "putanis," like the word "bhau," is indifferently used not only for real nephews and brothers but for cousins and first cousins, and it seems to me that Abelai's statement made in that former case has been rightly held to show that Rama, son of Hambirji Wankhede, was undoubtedly the father of Govinda, plaintiff No. 2, and was related to Raoji, and I see no reason to disbelieve that he was related in the manner given in the genealogical tree despite the want of direct evidence on the point. It seems to me that the present plaintiff No. 2 has sufficiently proved his pedigree. The fact that Rama performed the obsequies of Raoji shows that he was a fairly near relative. It has been held that the preferable right to perform the shradh, funeral oblation to the last owner, is a primary fact to be taken into consideration in determining the rule which is to govern the right of succession; see Soorendronath Roy v. Heeramonee Burmoneah (4). Rama was a cousin and the finding that he is the sole reversioner, (it is not contended that there was any other reversioner) is one of fact and cannot be challenged on the ground of insufficiency of evidence. The word "sakhha" in Rama's deposition means, closely related. There is evidence on record from which certain inferences are justly made and unless these inferences are shown to have been wrong, the appel-

The family names of Rama and Raoji were the same and Ahelai would not have mentioned him as her husband's relative unless he had been one. The result is that this appeal fails and is dismissed with costs. The appellants will pay the respondents' costs.

Rule against an order of the Court of the Additional District Judge, Chittagong.

Babu Charu Chandra Sen, for the Petitioner.—The defendant is the petitioner. Plaintiff brought a suit for recovery of money due on a hand note for an amount below Rs. 500. The defence was that there was no consideration for the bond and, therefore, defendant was not liable to pay anything. The learned Judge held that no evidence was admissible to show that there was no consideration having regard to the provisions of section 92 of the Indian Evidence Act. My submission is that the learned Judge has overlooked the provisions of proviso (1) to section 92. Evidence is admissible to prove want of consideration. I submit the Judge has failed to exercise jurisdiction vested in him by law. The judgment ought, therefore, to be set aside.

Babu Narendra Kumar Das, for the Opposite Party.—It is not open to this Court to interfere in a matter like this under section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The lower Court has jurisdiction to decide any matter be it rightly or wrongly. Refers to Amir Hassan Khan v. Sheo Baksh Singh (1), Kristamma Naidu v. Chapa Naidu (2), Ramgopal v. Joharmal (3), A mere error of law does not empower this Court to interfere in revision.

Babu Charu Chandra Sen, replied in brief.

JUDGMENT.—On the 18th July 1921 this Rule was issued at the instance of the defendant calling on the plaintiff to show cause why the decision of the Additional District Judge of Chittagong should not be set aside and that of the Munsif dated the 15th September 1919 restored. The suit was brought on a hand-note. The defence was that there was no consideration. The First Court held in favour of the defendant's contention, namely, that there was no consideration, and the suit was dismissed. The lower Appellate Court, while stating that the defendant's evidence that no money passed was stronger than the plaintiff's evidence, allowed the appeal on the ground that no evidence was admissible to show that there was no consideration, having regard to the terms of section 92 of the Evidence Act.

The learned Additional District Judge, it would appear, failed to take into account the provisions of proviso (1) to section 92 of the Evidence Act. In the circumstances, I am asked to interfere under the provisions of section 115, Code of Civil Procedure, on the ground that the Additional District Judge acted with material irregularity in excluding the evidence adduced by the defendant as to the lack of consideration. On behalf of the plaintiff it is said that, under the provisions of section 115, Code of Civil Procedure, it is not open to this Court to interfere and I have been referred to the cases of Amir Hassan Khan v. Sheo Baksh Singh (1), Kristamma Naidu v. Ohapa Naidu (2) and Ramgopal v. Joharmal (3) as deciding that under section 115 mere error of law does not give the Court jurisdiction to interfere. Now, it seems to me that the Additional District Judge has erred in law in this case in excluding the defendant's evidence. But, even so, I do not think that I have jurisdiction to interfere. I do not think, having regard to the decisions, that a mere error of law, as is the case here, justifies the Court in interfering under section 115, Code of Civil Procedure.

The result is the Rule is discharged with costs. Hearing fee one gold mohur.

The fact that such a mortgage contains a condition of foreclosure and not of sale does not make any difference in this connection. [p. 698, col. 2.]

Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Raipur, in Civil Appeal No. 44 of 1919, dated the 27th November 1919.

Mr. J. C. Ghosh, for the Appellants.

Mr. Atmaram Bhagwant, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit on a mortgage executed for a money-debt of Rs. 400 and a grain-debt of 60 khandis dhan. The bond provided that the money debt was to carry interest at 1 per cent. per annum and that the interest on the grain-debt was to be at the rate of 6 kottas per khandi per year. The money as well as the grain were to be re-paid with interest within 22 months and compound interest at the above rates was to be payable till satisfaction. There was a condition of foreclosure of the mortgaged property, in case the debts were not paid. The cause of action for the recovery of the money and grain-debts accrued on 15th April 1910 and the plaintiffs' suit for foreclosure in lieu of those debts brought on 23rd December 1918 was thus more than six years after the accrual of the cause of action. In the plaint, the plaintiffs calculated the value of the grain-debt found due on the date of the suit at the then prevailing rate.

The mortgagor's contention that the plaintiffs' claim in respect of the grain-debt was time-barred was accepted by both the Courts below and that portion of the claim was dismissed, it being held that Article 132, First Schedule, Limitation Act, was inapplicable to it. The correctness of this view is questioned for the plaintiffs-appellants who contend that Article 132 was applicable to the grain-debt, as well as to the money-debt, there being no difference between these two parts of their claim.

The Article runs thus :—

132—To enforce payment of money charged upon immoveable property.	Twelve years.	When the money sued for becomes due.

The term used in the Article is "money," and the argument of the defendant-respondent is that as "grain" is not "money" the Article could not possibly apply to the plaintiffs' claim in respect of the grain-debt. According to him, either Article 116 or Article 120 would be applicable and the claim would be governed by six years' limitation. This latter argument finds support from the case of Rash Bihari Das v. Kunjabihari Patra (1) in which it was heldthat such a suit could not be treated as one to enforce payment of "money" charged upon immoveable property and that Article 132 would not, therefore, apply. The judgment of the learned Chief Justice (Jenkins, C. J.) who decided the case is a very short one and proceeds apparently on the sole ground that "grain" could not be called "money". A different view had been taken by another Judge of the same High Court in Nilmoney Singh v. Hardhan Das (2) which was a very similar one, where Article 132 was held applicable. The learned Judge's judgment is not given in full, but a reference to it in Sripati Lal Dutt v. Sarat Chandra Mondal (3) would show that the case involved a money claim too. That would not, however, in my opinion, make any difference. It was also referred to and followed in the case of Jogendra Nath Singh v. Mohanlal Khan (4), the following observations being quoted with approval :—

"The substance of the transaction was that the land was made security for the value of the paddy, because upon failure to deliver the paddy, the mortgagee would be entitled not to claim specific paddy, but merely to recover the price thereof..... In my opinion, it is a reasonable construction of Article 132 to hold that in a case like this the interest which was the value of the paddy, though variable from time to time, was charged upon the mortgaged premises."

In this case no rate at which the grain was to be valued was given in the mortgage. In the case of Sripati Lal Dutt v. Sarat Chandra Mandal (3) and also Indra Narain Shao v. Dijabar Samanta (5) and Sridhar Chandra Maiti v. Ram Gobinda Jana (6) the case of Rash Bihari Das v. Kunjabihari Patra (1) was distinguished on the ground that in those cases the mortgage itself provided the rate at which the grain-debt was to be valued and the claim was, therefore, said to be really one for money. In Sridhar Chandra Maiti v. Ram Gobinda Jana (6) Teunon, J., in the course of his judgment observed as follows :—

"But I desire further to say that if the present case cannot be distinguished from the one to which I have just referred, I am not prepared to concur or follow the view taken in that case, that where a bond hypothecates property to secure payment of paddy, the suit brought upon that bond is not a suit to enforce payment of money charged upon immoveable property."

In such cases Article 132 would, in my opinion, be applicable, even though there be no specific condition in the mortgage-bond for determining the rate at which the grain-debt would be valued, in case it was not delivered as agreed. The mortgagee would, irrespective of any such condition, be entitled to claim the value of the grain-debt in case of its non-payment, though the rates would be different at different times. The mortgagee is not entitled to claim nor is the mortgagor bound to deliver grain. The mortgagor is entitled to pay its value in money instead. Under Order XX, rule 10, the Court is bound to state in a decree for delivery of moveable property the amount of money to be paid as an alternative, if delivery cannot be had. Thus, it is the money value of the grain debt that is really charged upon the mortgaged property. If it became necessary for the mortgagee to enforce the security, the land would be liable for the value of the grain due under the mortgage. The fact that the mortgage in suit contains a condition of foreclosure and not of sale, would not, in my opinion, make any difference.

The result is that the appeal is allowed and the plaintiffs' claim for the grain-debt is decreed. The amount of grain due on the date of the suit as given in the plaint is 428 khandis 18½ kattas. The rate of 3½ kattas per rupee as given in the plaint was not admitted by the defendant, nor was any evidence adduced by the plaintiffs to prove it; under the circumstances the rate of 5 kattas admitted by the defendant shall have to be accepted. The value of the grain at this rate comes to Rs. 1,715-12 0. The date fixed for payment is extended to 20th December 1921. An account of the grain and money-debts payable by that date is separately made. A preliminary foreclosure decree shall now be framed in lieu of the decree passed by the First Court. The amount payable to the plaintiffs shall include their proportionate costs in this Court as well as in the Courts below.

Evidence—Judgment not inter partes, admissibility of.

In a suit for recovery of possession of land a judgment in a previous suit for ejectment from the same land brought by the plaintiff against a third person in which the defendant's title was set up is admissible in evidence for the purpose of showing that that was a suit in which the title of the defendant was set up by a third person and the suit was decreed.

Appeals against decrees of the Subordinate Judge, Second Court, Pabna in Pabna and Bogra, dated the 30th May 1919, affirming that of the Munsif, First Court at Serajganj, dated the 22nd of February 1919.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Nishitha Nath Ghatak, for the Appellant.—The defendants are the appellants. The appeal arises out a suit for declaration of title and recovery of khas possession. The land in dispute is a non-transferable occupancy holding appertaining to the jote of one Naibulla. He mortgaged the entire holding to plaintiff's father Alimuddi. The latter purchased the same in execution of the mortgage-decree and took symbolical possession. My objection under section 335 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882 was rejected. The plaintiff's case is that they have been in possession ever since after obtaining settlement from the landlords. My case is that the landlord evicted Alimuddi and made a fresh settlement with me. The plaintiff then instituted criminal proceedings under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, which was decided in my favour. Hence the present suit by the plaintiff. His case is that he settled the lands with the heirs of the judgment-debtor. There was an ejectment suit to which I was not a party. That suit was decreed. The judgment and depositions in that case have been received in evidence against me. I submit, I being no party to that suit, the documents are not admissible in evidence. Then, there are two other documents of which secondary evidence has been given on the ground that the originals have been lost. I submit they must prove the loss first before the documents could be admitted.

Babu Nil Ratan Banerjee, for the Respondent, was not called upon to reply.

JUDGMENT.—The main ground urged in these appeals is that certain documents were improperly admitted in evidence.

Two of the documents were copies of judgments in a previous suit for ejectment brought by the respondent against one Jait-un-nissa Bibi, in which he obtained a decree. It is contended by the learned Pleader for the appellant that they were not admissible in evidence as the appellant was no party to that suit, and that the reasons contained in the judgment could not be used against him.

But the learned Subordinate Judge on appeal has not considered the reasons for the judgment and has merely referred to the fact that there was a suit in which the title of the present defendant was set up by Jait-un-nissa Bibi and that the suit was decreed. For this purpose the judgments were admissible in evidence.

KHAWAJ DIN v. NUR.

The criminal case has been referred to as showing that the defendant has all along been fighting with Alimuddin and on his death with his son, the present plaintiff, but has been mostly unsuccessful.

Objection is taken to the documents (Exhibits 18 and 28) on the ground that the originals had been proved by Enatulla and Sadek Khan (their depositions are marked as Exhibits 16 and 17) in the ejectment suit to which the defendant was no party.

But the loss of the original documents was proved by the plaintiff himself in the present suit and secondary evidence was adduced to prove these documents (likhans).

The learned Pleader for the appellants contends that the first with which these likhans were produced in the ejectment suit ought to have been proved. But the Pleader's clerk who swore to the handwriting was the person who wrote out the first. In these circumstances, we are unable to hold that the documents were inadmissible in evidence.

That being so, and the Courts below having found in favour of the plaintiffs on the merits the appeals must be dismissed with costs.

Oaths Act (X of 1873), s. 9—Offer to be bound by oath—Withdrawal before acceptance—Discretion of Court.

Where a party offers to be bound by the oath of the opposite party, the Court has full discretion to call upon the opposite party to accept or refuse the offer, and, subject to the exercise of that discretion, the offer once made cannot be withdrawn, and if the opposite party eventually accepts it, the party making the offer is bound by the result.

The principle that an offer can be withdrawn before it is accepted is true in the case of an ordinary contract, but does not apply to an offer made under the Oaths Act.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Jhelum, dated the 7th June 1917, affirming that of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Gujrat, dated the 2nd March 1917.

Dr. Nand Lal, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. A. Razaq, for the Defendant No. 1, Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff, Khawaj Din, brought this suit against his wife, Musammat Nur, and some of her relations, for restitution of conjugal rights. The suit was dismissed by both the lower Courts, and the plaintiff has presented this second appeal. At the hearing Musammat Nur alone appeared through her Counsel, Sheikh Abdul Razaq, who stated that she had returned to the plaintiff and was living with him. The appellant admits this to be correct and asks for costs against the remaining respondents only. He has failed to show any reason why these costs should be allowed, for he has not established that the finding of the lower Courts was not justified.

The facts are that the plaintiff agreed to abide by the oath of Musammat Nur and two other defendants to be taken in a certain shrine. The two other defendants at once agreed and subsequently took the oath. Musammat Nur was not present and before she could be asked whether she was also willing to take the oath, the plaintiff tried to resile from the position and said that he would not be bound by the oath if taken. He was not allowed to withdraw, and as Musammat Nur agreed to take the oath judgment was given in accordance with the statements made by the three defendants. Counsel contends that, wherever there is an offer, that offer can be subsequently withdrawn before it is accepted. That is true in an ordinary case of contract but does not apply to an offer made under the Oaths Act. The Court has full discretion to call upon the defendant to accept or refuse the offer; and, subject to the exercise of that discretion, the offer once made stands, and if the defendant eventually accepts it, the plaintiff is bound by the result. These being the facts, we see no reason why any costs should be allowed to the plaintiff-appellant, and we order that parties will bear their own costs in this Court. The appeal is dismissed.

Primarily, the party alleging that a person is a benamdar is bound to prove it. [p. 702, col. 1.]

Apart from custom, an under-raiyati as a general rule is not transferable. But an under-raiyat may, under certain circumstances, acquire a right of occupancy and if he so acquires it his right is transferable. [p. 702, col. 1.]

A plea that an under-raiyati interest is not transferable cannot be raised for the first time in second appeal. [p. 702, col. 1.]

Appeal against a decree of the Additional District Judge, Noakhali, dated the 13th January 1920, reversing that of the Munsif, Second Court, at Sudharam, dated the 29th June 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Mohendra Nath Roy (with him, Babu Asiranjan Chatterjee), for the Appellant.—The pure question of law is one of limitation. The suit is governed by the one year rule of limitation contained in Article 11A of the Schedule to the Limitation Act and not by the twelve years' rule. Then, on the question of benami the lower Appellate Court was wrong in throwing the onus upon the defendant: See Parbati Dasi v. Baikuntha Nath Das (1).

(1) 22 Ind. Cas. 51; 18 C. W. N. 428; 15 M. L. T. 66; (1914) M. W. N. 42; 12 A. L. J. 79; 19 C. L. J. 129; 16 Bom. L. R. 101; 26 M. L. J. 248 (P. C.).

My next contention is that the Court of Appeal below has erred in law in coming to a finding as to the under-raiyati title of the plaintiff. The interest of an under-raiyat is not transferable: See Aminunnisa v. Jinnat Ali (2). Lastly, the lower Appellate Court ought to have held that the title of the plaintiff had been destroyed by the suit for rent brought by the superior landlord which resulted in the sale of the holding in execution of the rent-decree.

Babu Dhirendra Lal Kastgir (with him, Babu Nripendra Chandra Das), for the Respondent.—Even if Article 11A of the Limitation Act is applicable, the suit is within time. The lower Appellate Court was quite correct in throwing the burden of proof of the benami on the defendant, for a party alleging that a transaction is not what it purports to be, is bound to prove it. The plea of transferability of the under-raiyati not having been raised in either of the Courts below, should not be allowed to be raised for the first time in second appeal, for if the point had been raised in the lower Courts a custom of transferability could have been established: See Akhil Chandra Biswas v. Hasan Ali Sadagar (3). As to the last point raised by my learned friend, my submission is that the finding that the rent-sale was a fraudulent transaction cannot be challenged in second appeal.

Babu Mohendra Nath Roy replied.

JUDGMENT.—In this suit the plaintiff sued for recovery of possession of 1 kani 14 gandas of land on declaration of his raiyati title to 6 annas 8 gandas share and of his under-raiyati title by purchase at a sale for arrears of rent due by the under-raiyat. The suit was dismissed in the First Court but has been decreed by the lower Appellate Court.

The plaintiff's cause of action arose on the defendant Tuka Meah succeeding in an application under Order XXI, rule 100, Code of Civil Procedure. The first point argued in this appeal is, that the suit is barred by limitation under Article 11A of the Schedule to the Limitation Act. Though on examination of the dates at first this objection appears to be sound, we now see that, allowing for the closing of the Court for Puja vacation and the time allowed to the plaintiff to file deficit Court-fee, the plaint was filed within time.

The second point relates to a question of fact on which the two Courts differed. The first Court held that Nayantara, from two of whose five sons the plaintiff purchased his raiyati right, was a benamdar of her husband Krishna Chandra. The lower Appellate Court held that she was not a benamdar. It is contended that in coming to this finding of fact the burden of proof was wrongly thrown on the defendant. Primarily, the party alleging that a person is a benamdar is bound to prove it, and that is what the Additional District Judge has stated. He has further considered the evidence in the case. It appears to us that he has committed no error of law in coming to this finding of fact.

It is also contended that the lower Appellate Court has erred in his finding as to the plaintiff's under-raiyati title. The first contention is that the under raiyati is not transferable. This is true as a general rule, as was held in the case of Amanunnisa v. Jinnat Ali (2), which was followed in the case of Biswambhar Mandal v. Nasarat Ali (4). But as was held in the case of Akhil Chandra Biswas v. Hasan Ali Sadagar (3) an under-raiyat may under certain circumstances acquire a right of occupancy and if he so acquires it his right is transferable. It appears that this plea that the under-raiyati interest was not transferable was not raised in either of the lower Courts. Had it been so raised, the plaintiff might have been in a position to prove a custom of transferability of under raiyati holding in this locality. It is too late to raise this plea for the first time in second appeal.

It is also said that the lower Appellate Court has not overruled the finding of the Munsif that the under-raiyati of Lakshmi was non-existent. This, in our opinion, is not correct. After setting out the plaintiff's case the learned Additional District Judge states that he has prima facie shown his title to the land in suit. That evidently means both his raiyati and under-raiyati title as claimed. He then goes on to state that the defendant contends that Nayantara was a benamdar and Lakshmi's Oudh raiyati was fraudulent and collusive. He then discusses the evidence principally, it is true, with reference to the question of benami. But he sums up by saying that the plaintiff has got title to the land in suit. The questions of Nayantara's benami and the genuineness of Lakshmi's Oudh raiyati are inter-dependent and the finding of the Munsif that the latter was fraudulent largely depended on the finding that Nayantara was a benamdar. Having upset the finding in respect of Nayantara it was not necessary to discuss at lenght the question of Lakshmi's Oudh raiyati, and we must hold that what has been written in the judgment is a distinct finding that the under-raiyati was genuine and in existence at the time of the plaintiff's purchase.

The last point urged is that the plaintiff's title has been destroyed by the rent-suit brought by the superior landlord who put the whole holding in which this land was comprised to sale in execution of the rent-decree. The finding that this sale is a fraudulent transaction is one of fact which cannot be overruled in second appeal.

We hold, therefore, that points raised on behalf of the appellant failed.

We dismiss this appeal with costs.

Appeal from a decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Unao, dated the 29th July 1920, confirming that of the Munsif, Safipur, dated the 29th January 1920.

Mr. Ishri Prasad, for the Appellant.

Mr. Hari Kishen Dhaon, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—Jhagru and Musammat Bitti, defendants Nos. 2 and 3, were muafidars of plot No. 2600 in Mahal Lokman in village Ugu. On the 10th of October 1918 they sold their rights in the suit plot to Gopi Charan, defendant No. 1. The plaintiffs, Durga Prasad and Chandika Prasad, who are the proprietors of Mahal Lokman, brought a suit for pre emption on the basis of the sale but their suit was resisted on the ground that the vendors were merely muafidars and no right of pre emption had accrued to the plaintiffs. The pre emption suit was dismissed on this ground and the plaintiffs thereupon brought the suit out of which this appeal arises against Gopi Charan, Jhagru and Musammat Bitti for a declaration that they (the plaintiffs) are not bound by the sale-deed executed by the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 in favour of the defendant No. 1 and for possession of the plot.

The suit was resisted on various grounds. Among other grounds, it was pleaded that the Civil Court had no jurisdiction to decide the suit and that the plaintiffs had no cause of action and were not entitled to possession.

The Court of first instance held that it had jurisdiction, that the transfer made by defendants Nos. 2 and 3 to defendant No. 1 was invalid, and that the defendant No. 1 was, therefore, a trespasser, and decreed the plaintiffs' suit. The lower Appellate Court has agreed with the findings of the Court of first instance and confirmed the decree of that Court.

In second appeal it is urged that the appellant, Gopi Charan, is not a trespasser and that the Civil Courts have no jurisdiction. The lower Courts have relied on the rulings, Gaya Prasad v. Tasadduk Husain (1) and Suraj Bakhsh Singh v. Baldeo Bihari (2), but it seems to me that neither of these rulings is applicable to the present case. In Gaya Prasad v. Tasadduk Husain (1) the Zamindar had obtained a declaration that the muafi grant was liable to resumption and it was held that as the grant was liable to resumption the muafidars had no permanent interest which he could assign. This ruling was followed in Suraj Bakhsh Singh v. Baldeo Bihari (2) where it was held that a muafidar holding a rent-free tenure liable to resumption had no higher position than that of a tenant entitled to hold the land rent free unless he is a grantee under other conditions. In the present case there is nothing whatsoever to show that the land in suit is liable to resumption. The muafi in the present suit is admittedly a muafi khairati and there is nothing whatsoever on the record to show under what conditions, if any, the muafi was granted. The present suit is in effect a suit for resumption of the muafi and such a suit is triable solely by the Revenue Courts under the provisions of clause (5A) of section 108 of the Oudh Rent Act. It may be that the muafidars have no interest which they can transfer and that the deed of sale in favour of the appellant, Gopi Charan, has in fact conveyed no interest to him. But even if this were so it would not follow that the appellant, Gopi Charan, was holding the land against the Zamindar as a trespasser. As I have said, there is nothing to show under what conditions the muafi was granted and, therefore, if the sale-deed in favour of Gopi Charan is invalid he must be assumed to be in possession of the land not adversely to the Zemindars but with the permission of the muafidars. The suit is in effect a suit for resumption of the muafi holding and is not cognizable by the Civil Courts. For these reasons, I allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and dismiss the plaintiff's suit with costs in all Courts.

Appeal against a decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Rangpur, dated the 26th August 1919, affirming that of the Munsif, First Court, Kurigram, dated the 6th July 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Surendra Chandra Sen (with him, Babu Hemendra Chandra Sen), for the Appellant :—Having regard to the Full Bench decision in Hridyanath Roy v. Ram Chandra Barua Sarma (1) the judgment of the Courts below cannot be supported. The authority relied upon by the Courts below is no longer good law. Under the Full Bench ruling the Court is not competent to question the properiety of the leave to withdraw granted in the previous suit.

Babu Jatendranath Sanyal, for the Respondent :—The appeal was only allowed to be withdrawn but not the suit. So that, strictly speaking, there was no leave to withdraw the suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit.

Babu Surendra Chandra Sen, was not called upon to reply.

JUDGMENT.—The suit out of which this appeal arises has been dismissed by the Courts below, on the ground that the leave granted to the plaintiff in a previous suit to institute a fresh suit was improper.

The Courts below proceeded upon the view taken in the case of Kali Prasanna Sil v. Panchanan Nandi Chowdhury (2), the same case in 20 Calcutta Weekly Notes, 1000. But that case has been overruled by the Full Bench in Hridyanath Roy v. Ram Chandra Barua Sarma (1) where it was laid down that the Court trying the subsequent suit is not competent to enter into the question whether the Court which granted the plaintiff permission to withdraw the first suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit had properly made such order.

It is contended by the learned Pleader for the respondents that the plaintiff was allowed to withdraw the appeal and not the suit. But the order clearly states that it gave him liberty to bring a fresh suit and awarded the defendant costs of both Courts. Taking the order as a whole there is no doubt that the suit was allowed to be withdrawn and with liberty to bring a fresh suit.

The orders of the Courts below must accordingly be set aside and the case sent back to the Court of first instance for trial on the merits.

Costs to abide the result.

Acquiescence, what amounts to.

For a defence of acquiescence to be successful it is necessary that the defendant should have acted in good faith, believing that he had a valid right to do the act in question and that the plaintiff, knowing that the defendant was under this mistaken belief, should have abstained from doing anything to prevent his spending money in doing that act. [p. 705, col. 2.]

Appeal from a decree of the First Subordinate Judge, Sitapur, dated the 15th May 1920, reversing that of the Munsif, Sitapur, dated the 22nd September 1919.

Mr. Ishri Prasad, for the Appellants.

Syed Ali Mohammad, holding brief of Mr. Wasir Hasan, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT—This is a second appeal in a suit brought by the co-sharers owning an eight annas share in Mauza Chandanpur in the Sitapur district, for a mandatory injunction against a tenant Din Muhammad compelling him to uproot a grove which he has planted and for possession of the land. The co-sharers owning the other eight annas share in the village were made defendants in the suit. The land was let to Din Muhammad, for the purpose of planting a grove, by Chhote Lal alias Chhutkau, one of the co-sharers, and there is a concurrent finding that he was acting on behalf of the Lambardar, his sister-in-law Musammat Jaswant Kuar The lower Appellate Court, without deciding whether the lease was within the powers of the Lambardar, has dismissed the suit on the ground of acquiescence. The learned Subordinate Judge finds that the grove was planted three or four years before the suit, that the plaintiffs were aware from the first of the lease and of the planting of the grove and that they took no steps for three or four years to prevent its being planted.

The principles which govern the defence of acquiescence are laid down by the Privy Council in Beni Ram v. Kundan Lal (1), which has been followed and interpreted in various later decisions of which the decision of this Court in Paddu v. Mahabir Prasad (2) may be taken as an instance. For a defence of acquiescence to be successful it is necessary that the defendant should have acted in good faith believing that he had a valid lease and was entitled to plant the trees and that the plaintiffs knowing that he was under this mistaken belief should have abstained from doing anything to prevent his spending money in planting the grove. It is found that the defendant has spent a considerable amount of money in this case. It is also found by the lower Appellate Court that the lease granted was not in fact prejudicial to the other co-sharers as the interest on the nazrana paid by Din Mohammad would be equal to the rent which they could have got for the plot. Both Courts appear to have found that the defendant acted in perfect good faith. The learned Munsif has stated this in very clear terms. The matter is not so clearly stated in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court but the latter quotes the Munsif's findings apparently with approval. It also finds that the planting of the grove was accompanied by public ceremonies and done with a certain amount of ostentation, which is an indication that the defendant was under the impression that there was no doubt as to his rights. In view of the fact, also found by the lower Appellate Court, that some of the plaintiffs themselves have taken land from Chhote Lal for a grove in the same way as the defendant, and the admission of one of the plaintiffs that he himself has been giving leases whenever he wished without any reference to the other co-sharers the defendant had good reason to suppose that Chhote Lal was authorised to grant the lease which he did and that it was not necessary that he should have obtained the express permission of all the co-sharers in the village. It has been expressly found that the plaintiffs were aware of the planting of the grove and they must have known that the defendant was acting in good faith. They asserted, indeed, that they protested against the grove being planted but the learned Subordinate Judge has disbelieved this statement. On the fact found by the learned Subordinate Judge he was fully justified in holding that the plaintiffs were estopped by their acquiescence from obtaining a mandatory injunction for the uprooting of the trees and I find accordingly.

(1) 21 A. 496; 1 Bom. L. R. 400; 3 C. W. N. 502; 26 I. A. 58; 7 Sar. P. C. J. 523; 9 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 1022 (P. C.).

There is only one other point which it is necessary to mention. The First Court, the Munsif, decreed the suit against the defendant. The latter thereupon filed a suit for return of the nazrana which he had paid and got a decree. It has been suggested on behalf of the appellants that by this conduct he has debarred himself from resisting the present suit. There is no force in this plea. In the state of things which existed when the claim for the return of the nazrana was brought the defendant's conduct was perfectly natural. He was in danger of losing both his grove and his money. The Munsif's decree having been reversed it would seem that a fresh cause of action for return of the nazrana has arisen in Chhote Lal's favour.

The result is that the appeal fails and it is accordingly dismissed with costs.

Appeal, second—Issue dependent on facts cannot be raised for first time.

It is not open to an appellant to raise, for the first time in second appeal, an issue which would depend upon a finding of fact. [p. 707, col. 1.]

Appeal against a decree of the Officiating District Judge, Jessore, dated the 25th of March 1920, affirming that of the Munsif, Third Court, at Narail, dated the 30th of May 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babus Surendra Chandra Sen (with him, Babu Hemendra Chandra Sen) for the Appellants.—The question is, what was the status of the plaintiffs. My submission is that at the time when the holding was purchased by the plaintiffs their status was that of a raiyat at fixed rates We are, therefore, not liable to be ejected after notice under section 49 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The fact that the plaintiffs have surrendered their right of raiyats at fixed rates and are satisfied with the status of occupancy raiyats cannot affect my position. Refers to Buzlul Karim v Satish Chandra (1).

Babu Apurba Charan Mukerjee, for the Respondent, was not called upon to reply.

JUDGMENT.—In the suit out of which this appeal has arisen the plaintiffs sued to recover khas possession on declaration of their title to a certain holding. Their case was that the defendants were their under-raiyats and they had served notice on them under section 49 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The learned Munsif found that the interest of the plaintiffs was that of occupancy raiyats and the interest of the defendants was that of under raiyats and that they were liable to ejectment on notice. On appeal to the District Judge he first allowed the appeal in the absence of the respondents. A petition of review was allowed and the appeal re-heard and the District Judge has now dismissed the appeal.

The point so far as we understand it which is now raised by the learned Vakil for the appellants is that at the time when their present landlords purchased the holding the status of the landlords was that of a raiyat at fixed rate and he would argue that it is immaterial if, for some reason or other, the plaintiffs have surrendered some of their rights as raiyats at fixed rate and are now content to be regarded as occupancy raiyats. The answer to this contention would seem to be that this point was never raised before in the Court of first instance. As far as can be seen, the case has been hitherto argued on the consideration of what is the status of the plaintiffs at the present time. We do not think that it is open to the appellants to raise, for the first time in appeal, an issue which would depend upon a finding of fact. The learned District Judge has found as proved that the plaintiffs are not and cannot claim to be raiyats at fixed rate. This is a finding of fact with which we cannot interfere in second appeal.

The result is that the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Rae Bareli, dated the 29th November 1920, upholding that of the Subordinate Judge, Partabgarh, dated the 5th July 1920.

Mr. Ram Chandra, for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra and Saiyad Mohammad Sibtain, for Respondents Nos. 1 to 4.

JUDGMENT—Thakurain Ajit Kunwar, taluqdar of Patti, District Fyzabad, granted a perpetual lease on the 31st October 1885 to one Sheoambar Prasad. The property which was the subject matter of the lease, has on more occasions than one been transferred under deeds of mortgage executed by the sons of Sheoambar Lal after his death. Some of these mortgages were in favour of the defendant-appellant who brought a suit against the mortgagors for the enforcement of those mortgages and obtained a decree thereon. The grandsons of Sheoambar Lal brought the suit out of which this appeal has arisen for a declaration that the property was not liable to be sold under the decree obtained by the defendant appellant on the basis of his mortgages. The grounds of the claim as set out in the plaint were numerous. One of them was that the lease of the 31st October 1885 conferred no transferable rights on Sheoambar Lal, the lessee. This construction of the lease was disputed by the defendant-appellant, who alleged that the lease in question conferred heritable and transferable rights on Sheoambar Lal. The state of pleadings on the point under consideration gave rise to an issue in the case which the learned Subordinate Judge framed as issue No. 2 "Is the property mortgaged under the said deed non-transferable as alleged by the plaintiffs ?"

But along with this issue the pleadings gave rise to a number of other issues some of which were decided by the learned Subordinate Judge in favour of the plaintiffs and the result of his findings was that the plaintiffs' suit was decreed. The defendant went in appeal to the Court of the District Judge of Rae Bareli. The learned Judge disposed of the appeal by giving a finding on issue No. 2 which I have already quoted. That issue was decided by the learned Subordinate Judge in favour of the defendant and against the plaintiffs.

In my opinion the form of the issue in which it was cast by the learned Subordinate Judge was perfectly proper and in view of the terms of the lease I am clearly of opinion that the onus of proving the issue lay on the plaintiffs. Be that as it may, the learned District Judge in appeal, as I have stated before, confined himself with the discussion relating to that issue and came to the conclusion in disagreement with the Court of first instance that the lease of the 31st October 1885 did not confer transferable rights on the lessee. In the result, he upheld the decree of the Court of first instance and dismissed the appeal. This second appeal is lodged against that decision of the learned District Judge.

The foremost point which arises for decision in the case is the construction of the lease of the 31st October 1885. The contention on behalf of the learned Advocate for the appellant is that the terms of the lease leave no room for doubt that the intention of the grantor was to confer an absolute estate on the grantee subject to the payment of Rs. 449-6-0 per annum, which represented the proportionate share of revenue on the property, which was the subject matter of the lease, and might as well have included haq malikana, which the grantor reserved for herself. On behalf of the respondents their learned Advocate, Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra, contends that the lease in question confers nothing more than a heritable estate on the lessee. His argument is that the document must be treated as one of the nature of an agricultural lease and consequently restriction on the right of transfer should be applied to this lease.

In my judgment, the document, when read as a whole, confers an absolute interest on the lessee subject to the payment of the annual rent described above. It would not be safe to import considerations into the question of construction of this document which might have arisen or may arise with reference to the question of construction of other documents. My attention has, however, been drawn to a recent decision of a learned Judge of this Court, now Mr. Justice Lindsay, in Kalka Singh v. Suraj Bali Lal (1). The learned Advocate for the respondents has in fact pressed that case hard on me. But when I decline to seek aid in the construction of this document from the decision of Mr. Lindsay in that case I am simply following the dictum of that learned Judge expressed in that case. Mr. Lindsay says:—"Cases like these must be decided on their own facts and the law being well understood the only question in each case is, how the law is to be applied to the particular facts which are put before the Court." If I must distinguish the decision of Mr. Lindsay from the case before me, I have very strong grounds to do so. The document before me says that the lessee shall be in possession of the village leased la qaemuqami of the lessor. These words were wanting in the document which Mr. Lindsay had to construe in the case mentioned above. I attach very great importance to these words. The intention to confer an absolute estate subject to the liability mentioned above could not be expressed in a language stronger than the one just now referred to if the document were to be written in Urdu as this document was. The use of this language clearly means the substitution of the lessee in the place of the lessor. Added to these words I find further words naslan bad naslan. These words have acquired a technical import in legal vocabulary. If there were nothing else to control that import the use of those words would generally be understood to have been made with an intention to convey an absolute estate. In support of this observation of mine I may refer to a decision of the Privy Council in the case of Thakur Harihar Baksh v. Thakur Uman Parshad (2). Yet there is another significant feature of this document. In no circumstances and under no contingency, whether arising out of default of non-payment of rent reserved or arising out of any other breach of conditions, the lessor reserves the right of re entry in herself. Why does she not do so, if her intention was in the event of a default being made in the payment of the rent or in the event of the lessee making a transfer of the leasehold property to avoid the lease and enter into possession of the property? The obvious answer to that question is that she did not intend to avoid the lease either on the ground of non-payment of rent or on a transfer of the leasehold property being effected by the lessee. This to my mind is very strong indication of the intention of the parties that the original rights which are available to all persons holding an interest in any property, of transfer of that interest were not to be taken away in this particular instance. I, therefore, disagree with the learned Judge on his construction of the document.

(1) 45 Ind. Cas. 208; 5 O. L. J. 80.
(2) 14 I. A. 7; 14 C. 296; 11 Ind. Jur. 196; 4 Sar. P. C. J. 766; Rafique and Jackson's P. C. No. 95; 7 Ind. Dec. (N. s) 196.

The result is that the appeal is allowed, the decree of the lower Appellate Court reversed, that the record is sent back to that Court with directions to re-admit the appeal under its original number in the register of appeals of that Court and dispose of it according to law. The costs of this appeal and hitherto will abide the event.

Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Dinajpur, dated the 22nd March 1919, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge of that District, dated the 29th May 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Surendra Chandra Sen, (with him, Babu Surendra Nath Bose No. I), for the Appellant.—The plaintiff is the appellant. The appeal arises out of a suit for mortgage. There were several defences. I have obtained a decree on the merits excepting on one point, viz., whether I am entitled to interest from date of suit till decree. In this matter Court has no discretion. Refers to Order XXXIV, rule 4, Civil Procedure Code. The facts are these. The suit was instituted on 11th June 1903. It was decreed ex parte on 12th August 1903. Then decree absolute followed. One of the heirs of defendant No, 5 came in and pleaded non-service on one of the heirs of the mortgagors. On 10th November 1915 an application was made for the setting aside of the ex parte decree. It was set aside by consent on 12th February 19 6. The suit was again heard and decided and a decree was passed on 29th May 1917. The Court said that, ordinarily one would get stipulated rate of interest pendente lite. First Court held that interest at the stipulated rate was to run till the date of payment fixed in the decree; but that interest will not run from the date of the ex parte decree, i. e, from 12th August 1903 to 12th February 1916. My submission is that the defendant was aware of the decree. He did not care to pay up. Therefore, he should pay interest.

[CHATTERJEA, J.—What were you doing all the time?]

I practically did nothing. But all the same, justice would allow me interest for the period. Refers to Order XXXIV, rule 4

Civil Procedure Code; Order IX, rule 13, Civil Procedure Code. They took false defences. I submit section 34, Civil Procedure Code does not apply. Refere to Jawahir Singh v. Someshwar Dat (1).

Babu Bon Bihari Sarkar, for the Respondent.—Interest has some up to a huge amount already. He still claims about Rs. 2,000 more. I submit the effect of the decree was an order to pay. The decree-holder ought not to have slept over for 12 years or so. I submit section 34, Civil Procedure Code read with Order XXXIV, rule 4, Civil Procedure Code would apply to the present case. Refers to Ghosh on Mortgages (4th Edition) 67. There are some cases no doubt but they are all under the Code of 1882. which has been changed since. Refers to Sundar Koer v. Kai Sham Krishen ( ). section 209 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882.

Babu Surendra Chandra Sen replied in brief.

JUDGMENT.—The Courts below have disallowed interest from the date of the ex parte decree, i. e., from the 14th August 1903 up to the 12th February 1916, the date on which the ex parte decree was set aside. The learned District Judge was of opinion that the suit was not pending between the date of the ex parte decree and the date when that decree was set aside.

We do not see how it can be said that the suit was not pending during that period, when the ex parte decree was set aside subsequently. It is not so hard upon the defendant as it seems at first sight; because the defendant did not offer to pay up any money during this period and the rate of interest in two out of the three bonds was not at all high, being only 6 and 8 per cent. per annum respectively. The fact that the delay in the final disposal of the suit took place owing to the laches of the plaintiff should, however, be taken into consideration in dealing with the question of costs.

We are accordingly of opinion that the plaintiff should get interest at the rates stipulated for the entire period during which the suit was pending but that each party should bear his own costs in all Courts, and it is ordered accordingly.

Order accordingly.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss 151, 152—Amendment of decree by Court other than that which passed decree, legality of—Transfer of application for amendment of decree, whether valid.

An order of a Court amending in execution a decree of another Court is wholly ultra vires and is not saved by sections 15 and 152 of the Civil Procedure Code [p. 71, col .]

A transfer by a District Judge of an application for amendment of a decree passed by him to another Court for disposal is improper and out of order [p. 71, col .]

Appeal against a decree of the District Court, Godavari, in Original Suit No. 33 of 1912, as amended by order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Rajahmundry, in Execution Appeal No. 405 of 1920.

Messrs. P. Somasundaram and P. Satyanarayana, for the Appellant.

Messrs. P. Narayanamurthi and G. Lakshmana, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The parties to Original Suit No. 33 of 1912, which was a suit for partition, referred their disputes to be settled by three arbitrators who made an award on April 2nd 1913.

After this, the 3rd arbitrator divided the properties and reported to the Court on 6th October 1915 and at the foot of his report it was written that both the parties agreed to the matters in that report, and the plaintiff and the first defendant for himself and as guardian of the second defendant signed this statement. In this report the 3rd Panchayatdar apparently exceeded his powers as a sigle arbitrator by fixing the amount of mesne profits to be paid after the date of the award,

On 13th December 1915 the District Judge (Mr. Roy) passed orders on this report but omitted (apparently by oversight) to specifically direct a decree to be drawn up in accordance with the award and the report.

But a decree was drawn up and signed by the District Judge's successor Mr. Fernandez on 14th December 1915.

Nearly five years later, when a review petition if presented would have been long out of time, an execution petition was put in on 9th August 1920 by the defendants asking for amendment of the decree and for restitution, and after several adjournments the case was transferred by the District Court to the Sub-Court for disposal, although it should have been obvious to the District Judge that the Sub Court would have no power to amend the District Judge's decree.

On 2nd November 1920 the Subordinate Judge amended the final decree of the District Judge by ordering the clause relating to mesne profits to be expunged and the plaintiff to refund to the second defendant Rs. 776 collected in pursuance of the final decree.

It is clear from the above facts that the Subordinate Judge's order amending in execution the decree of another Court was wholly ultra vires and that sections 151 and 152, Civil Procedure Code, which were invoked in the petition gave him no power to make such an order. The decree in question had become final, no appeal had been preferred, no application for review had been filed in time, and there was no reason on the merits to convert an execution application into a review petition. The District Judge's order transferring the petition pending before him to the Sub-Court was itself improper and out of order.

These alone are sufficient reasons for setting aside the Subordinate Judge's order and we need not deal with the further reason against such interference with the decree, namely, that it was based on the consent of the parties who signed the arbitrator's report.

We allow the appeal and set aside the order of the Subordinate Judge dated 2nd November 1920 and we restore the decree of the District Judge dated 14th December 1915, and we direct the respondent to pay the appellant's costs in this Court and the Court below.

Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Birbhum, dated the 16th of July 1919, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge of that District, dated the 25th of November 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Jogesh Chandra Roy (with him, Babu Sambhu Nath Banerjee), for the Appellant.—The defendant is the appellant. The appeal arises out of a suit for refund of money which was awarded as compensation for the acquisition of certain lands under the Land Acquisition Act and withdrawn by the defendant. The lands were acquired for a Railway. I am the putnidar and the plaintiff is my landlord. The Maharaja did not appear in the land acquisition proceedings before the Collector nor did he ask for any reference. The Collector's order was that I was to get half the amount awarded as compensation which I drew. The Maharaja has instituted the present suit for the recovery of that money from me. My point is that the putni patta has not been rightly construed. The putni patta was dated the 26th June 1855 when there was no Railway in that part of Bengal. The words in the patta are to the effect that the landlord shall be entitled to all compensation for any decrease in the lands owing to acquisition for purposes of roads or embankments and that I shall have no concern in those matters and shall not be entitled to claim any abatement of rent therefor. I submit these terms are clearly illegal and unconscionable. I cannot be deprived of the compensation. Act XLII of 1850 was then in force. The words are vague. The word "Railway" could have been used in the patta as the word was then in use. Then the word puraskar does not mean compensation. I submit no Court of Equity would give effect to such an unconscionable contract. The landlord is at best entitled to the value of the land at the inception of the putni. A suit is not maintainable under the Land Acquisition Act. He was served with notice but he did not apply for a reference nor did he put forward any objection to the amount of compensation awarded by the Collector. The landlord cannot now have recourse to a regular suit having regard to the special remedy provided in the Land Acquisition Act itself. The Act creates a special jurisdiction and provides a special remedy. Refers to sections 9, 31 (2) of the Land Acquisition Act. Refers to Srimati Punnabati Dai v. Rajah Pudmanund Singh Bahadur (1), Raja Nilmoni Singh v. Ram Bandhu Rai (2), Bhandi Singh v. Ramadhin Rai (3) and Icharan Singh v. Nilmoney Balidar (4). The intention of the Legislature was never to allow persons sleeping over their rights to have the luxury of separate regular suits. He had notice and had speedy remedy provided in the Act. He did not avail himself of it. Legislature intended to allow simply those persons who had no notice at all to have recourse to regular suits. It is very difficult to draw the line between these cases. The case in Srimati Punnabati Dai v. Raja Pudmanund Singh Bahadur (1) goes thus far that a person who appears and applies for a reference which is not adjudicated will be barred from bringing a regular suit. The case in Srimati Punnabati Dai v. Rajah Pudmanund Singh Bahadur (1) proceeds on a misinterpretation of the Privy Council decision in Raja Nilmoni Singh v. Ram Bandhu Rai (2). Refers to Hurmutjan Bibi v. Padma Lochan Das (5), Icharan Singh v. Nilmoney Balidar (4) and London & N. W. Ry. Co. v. Bradley (6).

Babu Sarat Kumar Mitra, for the Respondents.—The question of the unconscionable nature of the lease cannot be raised now as it was not done in the Courts below. The lease is dated (1855) 1262 B. S, i. e., more than sixty years ago. The point was given up in the lower Appellate Court. The word rasta which occurs in the lease and for the acquisition of which they will not be entitled to any compensation I submit includes railroads. It is true that Railways were known at the time and that no mention of it was made in lease. But I submit the lease would have made express exceptions in the case of Railways.

[N. R. CHATTERJEA, J.—Would you call Railway a rasta?]

Of course, that cannot be done. But rasta is a generic term and would cover a Railway. Purskar means anything given in lieu of the land or compensation. As regards the other question of jurisdiction of Court to entertain a suit like the present, I submit my suit is maintainable. The only case in point is that of Srimati Punnabati Dai v. Rajah Pudmanund Singh Bahadur (1). The other cases cited by the other side are all distinguishable and do not apply to the facts of the present case. I submit the decision of the Court below is right.

Babu Jogesh Chandra Roy, replied in brief.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for refund of money which had been allowed as compensation for certain lands acquired under the Land Acquisition Act and withdrawn by the defendant.

It appears that the lands in question were acquired for a Railway. The plaintiff (the Zemindar) and the defendant, (the putnidar) were served with notices under section 9 of the Land Acquisition Act. The Collector apportioned the compensation half and half between the Zemindar and the putnidar. Neither party applied for any reference under section 18 of the Act and the putnidar withdrew the amount awarded to him by the Collector. The Zemindar thereupon brought the suit, out of which this appeal arises, for recovery of the amount which had been withdrawn by the defendant, on the ground that under the putni kabuliyat, the putnidar was not entitled to any portion of the compensation money. The defense inter alia was that the plaintiff ought to have applied for reference under section 18 of the Act and that no separate suit lies. The Courts below have overruled that contention and the defendant has appealed to this Court.

Section 9 of the Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894) provides for notice being given by the Collector to all persons known or believed to be interested in the land acquired. Section 11 provides for inquiry by the Collector into the objections (if any) which any person interested had stated pursuant to the notice given under section 9 to the measurements made under section 8, and into the value of the land, and into the respective interests of the persons claiming the compensation, and further provides for an award being made by him under his hand of,

(i) the true area of the land;

(ii) the compensation which, in his opinion, should be allowed for the land; and

(iii) the apportionment of the said compensation among all the persons known or believed to be interested in the land, of whom, or of whose claims, he has information, whether or not they have respectively appeared before him.

Section 12 lays down (1) that such award shall be filed in the Collector's office and shall, except as hereinafter provided, be final and conclusive evidence, as between the Collector and the persons interested, whether they have respectively appeared before the Collector or not, of the true area and value of the land, and the apportionment of the compensation among the persons interested, (2) that the Collector shall give immediate notice of his award to such of the persons interested as are not present personally or by their representatives when the award is made.

Under section 18 any person interested who has not accepted the award may, by written application to the Collector, require that the matter be referred by the Collector for the determination of the Court, whether his objection be to the measurement of the land, the amount of the compensation, the persons to whom it is payable, or the apportionment of the compensation among the persons interested. This application for reference is to be made within the time fixed by sub-section (2) of that section. Section 30 provides that if any dispute arises as to apportionment of the compensation or as to the persons among whom it is payable, the Collector may of his own motion refer such dispute to the decision of the Court. The "Court" means the principal Civil Court of Original Jurisdiction unless the Local Government has appointed a Special Judicial Officer to perform the functions of the Court under the Act, and the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure are to apply to proceedings before the Court under the Act.

The Act creates a special jurisdiction and provides a special remedy. And, ordinarily, when jurisdiction has been conferred upon a Special Court for the investigation of matters which may possibly be in controversy, such jurisdiction is exclusive. [See Bhandi Singh v. Ramadhin Rai (3)].

It is an established principle that where by an Act of Legislature powers are given to any person for a public purpose from which an individual may receive injury if the mode of redressing the injury is pointed out by the Statute, the ordinary jurisdiction of Civil Court is ousted and in the case of injury the party cannot proceed by action. [See Stevens v Peacocke (7), West v. Downman (8) and Ramchandra v. Secretary of State for India in Council (9).]

A difficulty, however, arises from the proviso to section 31, clause (2), which lays down: "Provided also that nothing herein contained shall affect the liability of any person who may receive the whole or any part of any compensation awarded under this Act, to pay the same to the person lawfully entitled thereto." There was a similar proviso to section 40 of Act X of 1870 and the proviso was considered by the Judicial Committee in the case of Raja Nilmoni Singh v. Ram Bandhu Rai (2). In that case the appellant Raja Nilmoni Singh was a party to the apportionment proceedings under sections 38 and 39 of Act X of 1870 and it was held that he could not re open the question by a regular suit. Their Lordships with reference to the proviso observed: "Such a proviso, which appears to have been but a repetition of a provision in a previous Act in pari materia, is necessary in this as in almost all acts of a similar character. It is necessary for the Government, or the persons or Company entitled to take property compulsorily, to deal with those who are in possession or ostensibly the owners: but it may happen, and frequently does happen, that the real owners, possibly being infants or persons under disability, do not appear, and are not dealt with in the first instance and, therefore, a provision of this sort is necessary for the purpose of enabling the parties who have a real title to obtain the compensation money. Their Lordships went on to observe that the proviso applied only to persons whose rights had not been adjudicated upon in pursuance of the sections (38 and 39). This is the passage on which reliance has been placed in Srimati Punnabati Dai v. Rajah Pudmanund Singh Bahadur (1) in which it was held that, as between the claimants inter se, an award by a Collector under section 11 of the Land Acquisition Act does not amount to an adjudication of any question regarding the apportionment of compensation adjudged under the Land Acquisition Act, and that any such question can be determined only by the Civil Court.

In that case the learned Judges observed: "Their Lordships decided the case of Raja Nilmoni Singh v Ram Bandhu Rai (2) under the old Act X of 1870, and the proviso that their Lordships had to construe is word for word the same as the last proviso to sub section (2) of section 31 of the present Act, and their Lordships referring to an adjudication in pursuance of sections 38 and 39 go clearly to show that it is an adjudication of the Civil Court upon a reference by the Collector that their Lordships had in view."

It is to be observed, however, that the Collector under Act X of 1870 had no power to decide the question of apportionment in any case. Whenever there was any question of apportionment, he was bound to refer the matter to the Court, i. e., the Civil Court, and the Civil Court had to decide the matter under sections 38 and 39 of the Act. This appears to be the reason why their Lordships in Raja Nilmoni Singh's case (2) referred to the adjudication under sections 38 and 39.

Under Act I of 1894, compulsory reference was abolished, and the Collector has full power to deal with the question of apportionment under section 11, and his award, subject to the other provisions of the Act, is final under section 12, no doubt as between the Collector on the one hand and the person interested on the other. The person aggrieved by the award, whether his objection be to the measurement of the land, the amount of compensation, the persons to whom it is payable, or the apportionment of the compensation among the persons interested, may apply to the Collector for a reference to the Court. The "Court" by which is meant the principal Civil Court of original jurisdiction or a judicial officer specially empowered to perform the functions of the Court under the Act has to decide the questions referred to the Court. That being so, it is not reasonable to hold that the Act, while creating a Special Court to decide such questions, intended an adjudication of any question relating to apportionment by the ordinary Civil Courts. The proviso as it stands under the present Act, or as it stood under the old Act, is very general in its terms. Admittedly, it cannot be given effect to in its entirety, it cannot be held that a suit lies notwithstanding a reference to the Court upon the application of a party under section 18, or by the Collector of his own motion under section 30. The proviso, therefore, must be given a limited application, and we think that it applies only to cases where the person is under a disability or is not served with notice of the proceedings before the Collector.

In the case of Srimati Punnabati Dai v. Raja Padmanund Singh Bahadur (1), cited above, the learned Judges, although they referred to the contention that there being a special remedy provided by the Act the general remedy was not available, did not discuss the question, and the observations of the Judicial Committee in Raja Nilmoni Singh's case as to the persons to whom the proviso was applicable do not appear to have been considered by them. Then, again, the contention raised in that case that a separate suit if allowed would enable a party to avoid the limitation prescribed by section 18, namely, six weeks from the date of the Collector's award where the party was present before the Collector, or six weeks of the receipt of the notice from the Collector, or six months from the date of the Collector's award whichever period shall first expire, was disallowed on the ground that there is no limitation prescribed for a reference under section 30. Section 30, however, applies only to a reference made by the Collector of his own motion presumably before the final award is made; whereas section 18 deals with a reference upon an application made by a party. For the above reasons, therefore, and with all respects to the learned Judges we are unable to follow the decision in the case of Srimati Pannabati Dai v. Rajah Padmanund Singh Bahadur (1).

In the case of Hurmutjan Bibi v. Padma Lochan Das (5) the plaintiff who brought the suit was no party to the apportionment proceeding, and Wilson, J., pointed out that "apportionment" of the compensation is intended to be a proceeding distinct from that of settling the amount of compensation under the previous provisions of the Act and any dispute as to the apportionment is only decided as between those persons who are actually before the Court. A separate notice, therefore, of the apportionment proceedings is requisite to bind any person by those proceedings and where such a notice has not been served, any person interested, although served with notice of the proceedings for settling the amount of compensation, cannot be considered a party to the proceedings for apportioning it." The decision was under the old Act (Act X of 870), and apportionment proceedings under that Act were taken before the 'Court" under sections 38 and 39 of the Act.

We quite agree in holding that where a person has no notice of the apportionment proceedings he cannot be bound by the award or by the decision.

In the case of Bhandi Singh v. Ramadhin Rai (3) certain persons who were parties to a land acquisition proceeding being dissatisfied with the apportionment of the compensation money made by the Collector obtained a reference to the Court under section 18 of the Land Acquisition Act, but as they did not appear at the hearing before the Court it was struck off. It was held that the suit instituted by them in the Civil Court for the apportionment of the compensation money was barred under section 103, Civil Procedure Code, as the procedure to be observed by the Court is the same as that laid down in the Code of Civil Procedure. In that case Mookerjee, J., discussed the question whether, when special jurisdiction had been conferred, such jurisdiction was exclusive or not, and came to the conclusion that the jurisdiction of the Civil Court was exclusive. He, however, expressed an opinion, having regard to the provisions of section 31, clause (2) and the decision in the case of Raja Nilmoni Singh v. Ram Bandhu Rai (2), that a question as to the persons to whom compensation is payable or its apportionment among the persons interested may be determined either under a reference as contemplated by section 1, clause (1), or by a suit at the instance of persons lawfully entitled to it as against another who has drawn the compensation money; but that if a party has once availed himself of a reference to the Court under section 18 he cannot again ask for an injunction to litigate the same matter in the ordinary Civil Court. In that case, as stated above, the plaintiff had obtained a reference under section 18, which was dismissed for his non-appearance. Consequently, no suit was maintainable It was unnecessary, therefore, to consider whether the Special Court under the Land Acquisition Act, and the ordinary Civil Courts have or have not concurrent jurisdiction and it is to be noticed that the observations of their Lordships in Raja Nilmoni Singh's case (2) as to the persons to whom the proviso is applicable do not appear to have been considered by the learned Judges.

Although the Legislature has created a Special Court (the principal Court of Original Jurisdiction or a Judicial Officer specially empowered to perform the functions of a Court under the Act) to adjudicate all questions of apportionment upon a reference made within the period fixed by the Act, the effect of holding that such Court and the ordinary Civil Courts have concurrent jurisdiction will be that a party may institute a suit even in a Munsif's Court, (in cases where the amount in dispute does not exceed Rs. 1,000) and that long after the periods prescribed by section 18. The Act expressly provides that any party dissatisfied with the award of the Collector as regards apportionment, may apply to the Collector for a reference under section 18 and on such a reference he can get relief in the same way as he can do in the ordinary Civil Court, as the procedure in the Court under the Act is the same as in ordinary Civil Courts, with a right of appeal to the High Court. It would not be reasonable to hold that the Legislature, having provided a special remedy in the Land Acquisition Court, intended to make it optional with a party to apply for a reference under section 18 or to institute a suit in the ordinary Civil Court. The scope of the proviso may be amply satisfied by holding that it applies only to particular persons. The Collector under section 9 has to serve notices upon the persons known or believed to be interested in the land. There may be persons who are not known to the Collector and who might not be in possession and the interests of this class of persons are protected by the proviso to section 31, sub-section (2).

We are of opinion that the plaintiff, having been served with notice under section 9 of the Act, was bound to apply for reference under section 18 when he was dissatisfied with the award, and he cannot maintain a suit in the ordinary Civil Court.

In this view, it is unnecessary to consider the question whether the word "rasta" in the kabuliyat includes land taken for the purpose of a Railway.

We accordingly set aside the decrees of the Courts below and dismiss the suit, but we direct each party to bear his own costs in all Courts.

JUDGMENT.—The judgment of the lower Appellate Court deals with two bonds but only one of these bonds is the subject of this appeal. On the 12th June 1917 the appellant executed a bond in which he promised to pay Rs. 1,500 with interest on demand. The defense of the appellant as regards this bond was, that he was defrauded into signing it under a belief that he was putting a second signature on the bond for Rs. 500. This defense has been found to be entirely false, which is not surprising, considering that in the bond for Rs. 500 that was executed the following day and which the appellant admits having executed, it is recited that there was a separate bond for Rs. 1,500. The bond for Rs. 1,500 recited that accounts were made up on the bond executed on the 5th June 1914 and that Rs. 1,500 were found due thereon. It was in satisfaction of this old bond that the new bond was executed. The bond does not recite the full facts of the case which were that the bond of the 5th June 1914 was not executed by the appellant who was a minor at the time but by his mother as his guardian. The plaintiffs have made no attempt to prove that Rs. 999 borrowed by the appellant's guardian were for the benefit of the minor. It has, however, been proved that, when the appellant signed the bond in suit, the bond executed by his mother as the guardian was read out to him and the state of account under it was explained to him and that when he executed the new bond the old bond of his guardian was returned to him. The pleas actually taken by the appellant included no plea that he did not understand the situation when he signed the bond. He raised an entirely different and false plea. It must be taken, therefore, as established that the defendant was in full possession of all the circumstances when he signed the bond and that he ratified the act of his guardian by signing the new bond for Rs. 1,500 in satisfaction of the former bond.

The first contention of the learned Pleader for the appellant, so far as I have been able to understand it, is that according to the wording of the new bond it purports to be a renewal of the old bond and does not purport to be a new contract; that is to say, a ratification of the old bond. This might be the case if there was any evidence on the record except that of the bond itself which does not mention that the first bond was executed not by the appellant but by his guardian. But the learned Pleader does not contend, nor could he successfully do so, that evidence to show the circumstances under which the bond in suit was executed is inadmissible.

The learned Pleader further contends that the plaintiffs had to show that the old debt was binding on the minor because it was for his benefit. He relies on Seth Ghasiram v. Musammat Binia (1) as showing that a minor on attaining majority cannot ratify an obligation incurred by his guardian unless the obligation was one binding on him as minor. The argument is based on a misunderstanding of the ruling in question which fully recognised that the occasion for ratification only arises when the obligation was not one originally binding on the minor and that, as far as he is concerned, the minor has full power to ratify a contract entered into by his guardian, with this qualification that he cannot ratify a transfer made during his minority by his guardian so as to affect the rights of an intermediate transferee for value. In this case there is no intermediate transferee for value and the ruling so far from helping the appellant is against him. Moreover, it is clearly laid down at the beginning of Chapter XXI of "Trevelyan's Law relating to Minors" that "a ward after coming of age is entitled to adopt any of the acts of his guardian, which were done on his behalf, whether they were or were not for his benefit." Moreover, a contract entered into by a guardian is voidable by the minor on attaining majority but not void and the minor here so far seeking to avoid his guardian's bond ratified it.

The bond in suit was executed more than three years after the execution of the bond by the guardian, but the plaintiffs could still have sued on the earlier bond since the second bond was executed during the Court vacation, and under section 4 of the Limitation Act a suit could have been brought under the earlier bond up to the 16th June 1917. But even if a suit had been time barred on the 2th June 1917, section 25 (3) of the Contract Act would still operate in favour of the plaintiffs. From the following passage at page 158 of "Pollock's Indian Contract Act" Edition?* it is clear that sub section (3) of section 25 applies to the case of a minor who executes a promise in writing to pay a debt incurred by his guardian:—

"Sub section (3) re-produces modern English Law. The reason for upholding these promises was thus stated, soon after the Act came into force, by Westropp, C. J.: 'The general rule of law, no doubt, is that a consideration merely moral is not a valuable consideration such as would support a promise, but there are some instances of promise which it was formerly usual to refer to the now exploded principle of previous moral obligation, and which are still held to be binding, although that principle has been rejected. Amongst those instances is a promise after full age to pay a debt contracted during infancy, and a promise (in writing) in renewal of a debt barred by the Statute of Limitations. The efficacy of such promises is now referred to the principle that a person may renounce the benefit of a law made for his own protection.'"

A minor's contract is void and cannot be ratified even within limitation, so that, as far as the minor is concerned, sub-section (3) must refer to a debt incurred by the guardian since it cannot refer to a debt incurred by the minor himself during his minority. For the above reasons, I am of opinion that the minor could ratify by the bond in suit the debt incurred by his guardian and the bond can be enforced against him.

I may mention an argument addnced by the learned Counsel for the respondents which is to the effect that the bond in suit would operate as an acknowledgment under section 19 of the Limitation Act, even though it was executed more than three years after the execution of the previous bond since it was executed before the Courts opened, with reference to section 4 of the Limitation Act. It is suggested that the word "prescribed" in section 19 of the Limitation Act means, prescribed by the First Schedule subject to the provisions in section . A contrary view has, however, been taken in Bai Hemkore v. Masamulli (2) where it was held that the word "prescribed" in section 19 means, prescribed by the Schedule. The first ground of appeal is of no force, since the observations of the lower Courts on which it is based must be regarded as obiter dicta, being mere conjectures based on neither evidence nor pleadings.

For the reasons given above, the appeal is dismissed with costs.

Mr. Deo Raj Sahoney, for Musammat Sahib Kaur, Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal on behalf of the defendant against an order passed under Order XXIII, rule 1, permitting the plaintiff to withdraw her suit. The following facts will explain the nature of the question which we have to decide :—

On the 31st of July 1912 a decree for Rs. 2,442 was passed in favour of Sant Ram, the appellant, against Sarup Singh and Umrao Singh. In execution of that decree the property in dispute was attached. Thereupon, Musammat Sahib Kaur, the wife of Sarup Singh, objected to the attachment on the allegation that the property had been gifted to her by her husband, Sarup Singh, by a deed of gift dated the 28th February 1912. On the 14th March 1916 this objection was disallowed. This led to the institution of the present suit on the 13th October 1916. In the meantime, Sarup Singh had applied to be adjudged an insolvent and on the 21st February 1917 he was adjudicated an insolvent. On the 29th of March 1917 this suit was dismissed by the learned Subordinate Judge. Appended to the judgment of the Subordinate Judge we find a note to the following effect :—

"After recording the above at the time of announcement of the order, the mukhtar of the plaintiff has presented the attached application to withdraw the claim: this is apparently made to make Sarup Singh escape the consequence of not including the property in the list of assets in the insolvency proceedings; there is no use now to do this and it is rejected; the applicant on hearing the above order wants it back, but this cannot be done and it will be placed on file."

It appears that during the insolvency proceedings Musammat Sahib Kaur had put in an objection claiming the property as hers under the gift of the 28th February 1912. This objection was accepted by the Judge of the Insolvency Court and it was held that the gift was a bona fide transaction and that the widow had acquired a title under the said deed of gift. Apparently it was due to this circumstance that she wanted to withdraw her suit. The learned Senior Subordinate Judge, as appears from his judgment, dismissed the suit of the plaintiff on the ground that the gift in her favour was a fraudulent one and had been executed to defraud the creditors. Upon this main ground her suit had been dismissed.

Against the decree of the learned Senior Sub-Judge dismissing her claim Musammat Sahib Kaur preferred an appeal to the lower Appellate Court raising six pleas in her memorandum of appeal. The fourth plea taken in the memorandum of appeal was that the finding of the Insolvency Court that the property in dispute belongs to Sahib Kaur is a conclusive proof of the plaintiff's claim, and that the lower Court should have allowed the withdrawal of the suit. The learned Judge of the Court below mainly considered the question as to whether the decision by the Insolvency Court operated as res judicata on the question of the validity of the gift in favour of Musammat Sahib Kaur, and, after considering the facts and the law applicable to the point, he came to the conclusion that the order of the Insolvency

Court did operate as res judicata. At the end of his judgment, however, he made the following observation: "plaintiff's prayer in appeal is that she should be allowed to withdraw her suit, not that her suit should be decreed. Her Counsel recognises the fact that a decree would have no force as against the Receiver. He presumably relies on the finality, under section 41 of the Evidence Act, of Mr. Ross's finding on the subject of the validity of the deed of gift."

Then he makes the following order:—

"In these circumstances, I accept the appeal and set aside the decree and the order of the lower Court dismissing the suit. Instead thereof, I allow the suit to be withdrawn under Order XXIII, rule 1. In the circumstances, I leave the parties to bear their own costs in both Courts"

The formal order or the decree is in accordance with the terms contained in the judgment.

On the appeal coming on for hearing, a preliminary objection was raised by the learned Counsel for the respondent that no appeal lay from an order made under Order XXIII, rule 1. This contention is well supported by authorities. See, for example, Jogodindro Nath v. Surat Sunduri Debi (1), Abdul Hossein v. Kasi Sahu (2), Mary Dick v. Louisa Dick (3) and Genda Mal v. Firbhu Lal (4). In these cases it had been held that an order granting permission to the plaintiff to withdraw a suit or to abandon a part of his claim is not a decree, and is not, therefore, appealable. The effect of the order of withdrawal is that the finding on the question of res judicata by the lower Appellate Court becomes inoperative and must be disregarded, as this order is not made appealable under section 104 or any of the clauses of Order XLIII, Civil Procedure Code. Therefore, we hold that no appeal lies, and dismiss the appeal but without costs.

Mr. Tek Chand has requested us to treat this appeal as a revision and go into the merits of the case and restore the judgment and the decree of the Court of first instance, but we are, however, of opinion that no useful purpose can be served by adopting this course. The suit has been withdrawn and leaves the defendant with all his rights intact, and the question whether the order of Mr. Rose operates as res judicata is still open to the appellant. Having regard to all the circumstances of this case, we do not think that it is a case in which we should treat this appeal as a revision. We accordingly decline to adopt the suggestion made by Mr. Tek Chand.

I shall not execute a sale-deed to any other person. Should a sale be so effected to any other person such sale shall not be valid":

JUDGMENT.

IN SECOND APPEAL No. 314 OF 1920.

This second appeal arises out of a suit for the specific performance of a contract for the sale of suit land executed by the second defendant on 10th October 1913 in favour of plaintiffs. The first defendant, to whom the land was sold by the second defendant on 14th March 1916, is the contesting defendant. The District Munsif decreed the suit; but, on appeal by the first defendant, the Subordinate Judge held there was no contract and dismissed the suit. The plaintiffs appeal.

The alleged contract is evidenced by Exhibit A, the material portion of which runs as follows: "In respect of the lands which you and others had sold to my mother Ammoyammal on the 2nd October 1902, you executed a cultivation muchilka to me on the 10th October 1913 specifying the land with particulars of numbers. The amount mentioned in the said sale-deed is Rs. 600. And the amount of small loans taken from time to time is Rs. 200. On payment being made of the total amount of Rs. 800 (Eight hundred), within the 30th Vygasi of any year whatsoever, I shall execute a sale deed to you in respect of the lands consisting of acres (10·52) ten and fifty two cents specified in the aforesaid sale-deed. I shall not execute a sale-deed to any other person. Should a sale be so effected to any other person such sale shall not be valid." It is clear that, under this document, the promisee has the option of paying the price agreed upon, within the 30th Vygasi of any year but that he was not bound to do so. Assuming that there was consideration for Exhibit A and that there is an agreement binding on the promisor, this agreement may, in popular language, be described as an agreement to sell. But what the second defendant really did was that she bound herself to sell to plaintiffs on certain terms, if they choose to avail themselves of the binding offer, and her agreement is, in truth, merely an offer which cannot be withdrawn and certainly does not connote an agreement to buy. It is only in this sense that there can be said to have been an agreement to sell in the present case. Helby v. Mathews (1) per Lord Herschell, L. C., in Dickinson v. Dodds (2) James, L J. said, "Unless both parties had agreed then there was no concluded agreement;" and Mellish, L. J., said, "I am clearly of opinion that it was only an offer, although it is in the first part of it, independently of the postscript, worded as an agreement. I apprehend that, until acceptance, so that both parties are bound, even though an instrument is so worded as to express that both parties agree, it is in point of law only an offer, and, until both parties are bound, neither party is bound."

The learned Vakil for the appellants, while conceding that the second defendant could not sue the plaintiffs for specific performance before the plaintiffs tendered the price, contended that the plaintiffs must be deemed to have agreed to buy but that only the payment of the price was postponed at their option and that this is a case of successive (as opposed to simultaneous) performance of reciprocal promises (section 54 of the Contract Act). But we find it difficult to follow this argument. So long as the second defendant cannot charge the plaintiffs with a breach or failure to perform though they are to begin, there never was a contract at all. The case in Charamudi v. Raghavulu (3) was referred to in the course of the arguments. The point now before us was neither argued nor decided in that case. The only point raised in it was whether the contract therein was void as opposed to the rule against perpetuities. It may be that, in the case of a personal contract executed so far as one party is concerned, as in South Eastern Railway v. Associated Portland Cement Manufacturers (4), it is binding between the parties and no question of the application of the rule against perpetuities arises. But where the agreement is executory on both sides, with an option to one of the parties to do as he likes, there is nothing more than a a standing offer, though it may be that, during the lifetime of the promisor the distinction between a binding offer and a complete agreement is not of much importance as between the parties. In Charamudi v. Raghavulu (3) the case arose between the parties and the offer was not revoked by the death of the promisor or otherwise. But when the offer is at an end, e.g., (1) by the death or insanity of the promisor [See Contract Act, section 6 (4)], or (2) by the destruction of the subject-matter of the offer [see Edwards v. West (5); Cf. Section 56 of the Contract Act], or (3) by the promisor selling it to a third party, the sale being known to the promisee before acceptance as in Dickinson v. Dodds (2), there is nothing to accept. In the last case, if the undertaking not to withdraw the offer was not a mere nudum pactum but a binding undertaking, it may be that the promisee might maintain an action for damages against the promisor. But in this case the plaintiffs made no such claim against the second defendant either in the Court below or in second appeal. So far as the first defendant is concerned, there is no agreement the specific performance of which can be claimed by the plaintiffs see Dickinson v. Dodds (2) and Second Appeal No. 2594 of 1914.]

The result is the second appeal fails and is dismissed with costs of the first defendant (first respondent).

IN SECOND APPEAL No. 315 OF 1920.

It is conceded that this second appeal follows the result of Second Appeal No. 314 of 1920 and is dismissed with costs of the plaintiff (first respondent).

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 10, Sch. I, Arts. 134, 144—Alienation by mahant—Suit for possession—Limitation.

A suit to set aside an alienation by a mahant of ordinary wakf property gifted for general pious or religious purposes, is governed by Article 144 and not by Article 134 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act. [p. 724, col. 1.]

DIWAN SINGH v. RAM SARAN.

Article 134 of the Limitation Act is controlled by section 10 of the same Act, and refers to cases of specific trust and property "conveyed on trust." [p. 724, col. 2.]

A Hindu or Muhammadan may "convey in trust" a specific property to a particular individual for a specific and definite purpose when the person to whom the legal ownership is transferred would become a trustee in the specific sense of the term. "Conveyed in trust" is, however, hardly the right expression to apply to gifts of lands or other property for the general purposes of a Hindu religious or pious institution. [p. 724, col. 1.]

Vidya Varuthi Thirtha Swamigal v. Balusami Ayyar, 65 Ind Cas. 161; 41 M. L. J. 346; (1921 M. W. N. 419; 44 M. 831; 3 U. P. L. R P. C.) 62; 15 L. W. 78; 30 M L. T. 66 P. C., followed

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Amritsar, dated the 13th May 1920, modifying that of the Munsif, First Class, Amritsar, dated the 29th August 1919.

Bakshi Tek Chand, for the Appellant.

Pandit Sheo Narain, R. B, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Diwan Singh and others brought the suit, out of which the present second appeal arises, for possession of certain property which they alleged to be waqf and to pertain to a religious institution, and which they said had wrongly been alienated by a previous Mahant Amar Singh. The First Court decreed the whole claim, but the lower Appellate Court held that the suit as regards the agricultural land mortgaged by Amar Singh in 1892 was barred by time. It accordingly dismissed the suit as regards that part of the property and the plaintiffs have, therefore, filed a second appeal in this Court.

The agricultural land was, as already stated, mortgaged in 1892 by Amar Singh to Wazir Chand and others, and in 1894 was further mortgaged by the said mortgagor in favour of the same mortgagees. In 1895 Amar Singh sold the land to Ganga Ram, and Lachhman Das, the father of one Sham Das, defendant-respondent, obtained a decree for pre emption. He subsequently redeemed the mortgages in favour of Wazir Chand and others and got physical possession of the land pre-empted on the 15th March 1912. The First Court held that the suit as regards this land was within time under Article 134 of the Indian Limitation Act as it was brought within 12 years of the date on which the pre emptor obtained actual possession. The lower Appellate Court, holding that the terminus a quo was the date of the transfer and not the date of transferee's getting possession, was of opinion that the suit was barred by time and passed the order from which the present appeal has been lodged.

Counsel on both sides admit that there is a conflict of authority in the decisions of other High Courts as to whether, in a suit brought under Article 134 of the Indian Limitation Act, time runs from the date of the transfer or from the date upon which the transferee gets possession of the property. They also admit that the case reported as Zafar Ali v Kishen Chand (1) does not decide the question. The point, however, has not been argued before me, because Mr. Tek Chand on behalf of the appellants has cited a recent judgment of the Privy Council as authority for the proposition that the present suit is not governed by Article 134 of the Indian Limitation Act and that it is governed by Article 144 thereof, and that the present suit, having been brought within 12 years of the date upon which the transferee got possession, is within time. The case referred to by him is that of Vidya Varuthi Thirtha Swamigal v. Balusami Ayyar (2). In that case their Lordships held as follows:—

"Section 10 controls Article 134 of the Limitation Act of 1908, and gives the clue to the meaning and applicability of that Article. It clearly shows that the Article refers to cases of specific trust and relates to property 'conveyed in trust.' Neither under the Hindu Law nor in the Muhammadan system is any property 'conveyed' to a shebait or a mutawalli, in the case of a dedication, nor is any property vested in him. Whatever property he holds for the idol or the institution he holds as manager with certain beneficial interest regulated by custom and usage. Prima facie, an alienation by the manager or superior, by whatever name called, of a Hindu or Muhammadan pious institution cannot be treated as the act of a 'trustee' to whom property has been 'conveyed in trust' and who by virtue thereof has the capacity vested in him which is possessed by a 'trustee' in the English Law. Of course, a Hindu or Mahammadan may 'convey in trust' a specific property to a particular individual for a specific and definite purpose, and place himself expressly under the English Law, when the person to whom the legal ownership is transferred would become a trustee in the specific sense of the term. 'Conveyed in trust' is, however, hardly the right expression to apply to gifts of lands or other property for the general purposes of a Hindu religious or pious institution. There is, under the Hindu and Muhammadan Law, a distinction between a specific trust and a trust for general pious or religious purposes."

The nature of the institution to which the property in the present suit is said to pertain appears to be of the same kind as those discussed by their Lordships of the Privy Council, and in accordance with this authority, I think, it must be held that the present suit is not governed by Article 134 of the Indian Limitation Act Pandit Sheo Narain has not attempted to argue the point. He has pointed out that it was assumed in the lower Courts that the property in dispute was conveyed in trust within the meaning of Article 134. He suggests that there might be an enquiry as to whether there was any specific trust of the property in dispute for any specific purpose such as the Article, in accordance with the decision of their Lordships, refers to. The plaintiffs, however, in the Trial Court said that the property was wakf and was attached to a gurdwara for the ordinary purposes of the gurdwara. There was no allegation by them of a specific trust of any sort and the defendant respondent never made any such allegation. His defence was that the property was private property of Amar Singh, the previous manager. I, therefore, see no reason to order any further enquiry upon the points suggested by Pandit Sheo Narain. The Privy Council case is, in my opinion, on all fours with the present one, and I, therefore, hold that this suit is not governed by Article 134 of the Indian Limitation Act, and that so far as the alienation of the agricultural land is concerned it is within time.

There is a concurrent finding by the Courts below that the property in suit is wakf and this finding is conclusive, there remain for decision the questions raised by Sham Das, defendant, in grounds 7 and 8 of his appeal to the lower Appellate Court. I accept the appeal and setting aside the order of the lower Appellate Court remand the case thereto for re decision on the remaining points. Stamp in this Court will be refunded and other costs will be costs in the cause.

Hindu Law—Legal necessity—Simple money-bond executed by female owner—Decree—Execution—Life-interest liable to sale—No question of legal necessity arises.

In execution of a decree obtained on a simple bond executed by a female owner having a limited interest, her life-interest only is liable to be sold and in such a case no question of legal necessity arises as the bond being a simple one there is no charge on the property [p 725, col. 2]

Second appeal against a decree of the Second Additional District Judge, Aligarh, who reversed that of the First Court.

Mr. Pannalal, for the Appellant.

Mr. Pearey Lal Banerjee, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for a declaration that certain property in possession of the defendants is liable to sale in execution of a decree which the plaintiffs obtained against one Musammat Durga Kunwar. It appears that Musammat Durga Kunwar was the daughter of one Bhagirath Singh. Durga Kunwar had two sons, Ram Singh and Bhup Singh. She succeeded to the property after the death of her father and on the 15th of October 1914 Durga Kunwar and Ram Singh executed a simple bond in favour of the plaintiffs-respondents, Jhamman Singh and others. At that time the present appellant, Bhup Singh, the second son of Durga Kunwar, was a minor. The plaintiffs-respondents then sued on their simple bond. The suit was against Durga Kunwar alone as Ram Singh had died in the interval, and on the 27th of May 1918 they obtained a simple money decree against Musammat Durga Kunwar. On the 15th of August 1918 before they had put their decree into execution Durga Kunwar surrendered her life interest in the property in dispute her son, the appellant Bhup Singh. After this, attachment of the property in dispute was made in execution of the decree of Jhamman Singh and others. Bhup Singh objected to the attachment on the ground that the property was his and on the 15th of February 1919 he got an order releasing the property from the attachment. The present suit has now been brought by the decree-holders respondents for a declaration that the property was liable to sale in execution of their decree. The defence raised by Bhup Singh was, that Durga Kunwar had only a life interest and her life interest only could be sold, that he was in possession, that the deed of relinquishment executed by Musammat Durga Kunwar was not collusive and fictitious, that the attachment took place after the transfer in favour of the defendant was made, and that the plaintiffs had no right to get the property sold. The Trial Court came to the conclusion that the assignment by Musammat Durga Kunwar of her rights in the property was made to assist her in defrauding her creditors. It went on to hold that the assignment in question was fictitious, collusive and fraudulent. It also found that the bond was not executed for legal necessity. In the result it gave a decree to the effect that the life interest of Durga Kunwar could be sold and the sale would, therefore, be inoperative after her death. Both parties appealed. Durga Kunwar died during the pendency of the appeals and the defendant had his appeal dismissed. The plaintiffs' appeal, however, came to a hearing and the learned Judge of the Court below agreed with the finding of the First Court that the surrender of her estate by Musammat Durga Kunwar in favour of Bhup Singh was fictitious. He, however, went on to hold that the simple bond was executed in order to pay off a mortgage and for legal expenses and in the absence of any rebutting evidence he held that it was executed for legal necessity and the decree on it was, therefore, binding on the estate. In our opinion the question of legal necessity was totally irrelevant to the decision of this case. The bond in this case did not purport to create a charge on the property and no question of legal necessity arose. On the finding of the Court below that the surrender to Bhup Singh was a fictitious one, or, in other words, that it had not taken place, the life interest of Musammat Durga Kunwar was the only interest liable to be sold in execution of the plaintiffs-respondents' decree. In our opinion the consideration which the learned Judge applied towards the question of legal necessity was not required. That question is foreign to the present suit. In our opinion the decision of the lower Appellate Court was incorrect. We, therefore, set it aside and restore the decree of the Court of First instance, but in the peculiar circumstances of the case we make no order as to costs of this litigation.

Dr Nand Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal has arisen out of a suit brought by the plaintiffs-appellants against the defendants respondents for a declaration that they were the owners of certain shamilat lands situated in village Jara, the original owners of the same having left the village as far back as 1856 and abandoned all their rights therein. Their suit having been dismissed by the Trial Court and an appeal to the District Judge having failed, they have come up to this Court in second appeal through Mr. Nanak Chand, and we have heard Mr. Nand Lal for the respondents.

One of the principal respondents, Bhai Khan, has died and the date of his death is said to be the 27th May 1919. An application to bring his legal representatives on to the record was made on the 13th July 1921. This application is obviously much delayed and the reason for this delay is stated by Mr. Nanak Chand to be that his clients were unaware of Bhai Khan's death. The reason for their want of knowledge is stated to be that Bhai Khan and the plaintiffs-appellants lived in different villages at a distance of about nine miles apart, and that, therefore, it was impossible for the appellants to keep in touch with the respondents. Seeing that the respondents are only six in number, we are not prepared to accept this as a sufficient cause, and hold that the appeal has abated against Bhai Khan.

It was next contended by Mr. Nand Lal that the appeal had abated in toto on the ground that the interests of all the respondents were indivisible. He drew our attention to Hadu v. Lala (1) a case in which it was held that in a suit in which the shares of the parties in a joint property had to be determined, the Court must have all the shares before it, and that if one of the sharers had died without his legal representative being brought on to the record within time, the appeal abated in its entirety. The facts of that case are not, however, clear from the report, but it seems to have been a suit for a declaration that certain common lands were divisible between the parties and in such case there can be no doubt that an abatement affecting one of the sharers would result in an abatement against all. In the present case, we are unable to see that it is necessary to determine the shares of the parties and to that extent Hadu v. Lala (1) may be distinguished. As at present advised, we do not think that the appeal has abated in its entirety.

Turning to the merits of the case, it appears to us that the appeal must fail. The respondents admittedly abandoned their proprietary holding prior to 1855. In 1905 that holding was shown to consist of 33 kanals of land, of which only 8 kanals were culturable. The defendants-respondents denied having abandoned their right to the shamilat, and this matter was put in issue in Issue No. 2, which is to the following effect:—

"Have the plaintiffs for that reason been in possession of the corresponding share in shamilat land and are owners of it, and have the defendants Nos. 1 to 5 given up their connection with it?".

The Trial Court held, and we think correctly, that rights in shamilat lands are independent rights. A sale of a khewat holding without any reference to the shamilat would not result in the conveyance of the shamilat. This has been repeatedly held by this Court. Both the Courts have concurred in holding that the defendants-respondents, although they had abandoned their rights in the proprietary holding, had not abandoned their rights in the shamilat. This is a question of fact by which we are bound in second appeal. Mr. Nanak Chand lays stress on Mirza v. Kahan Singh (2) in which it was held that the fact of the plaintiffs' ancestors having given up the whole of their holding and quitted the village for good showed that they abandoned all the rights they had in the village including rights in the shamilat. The facts of that case are different from those of the present one and it had not in that case been found by the lower Courts as a fact that the rights in the shamilat had not been abandoned.

Finally, Mr. Nanak Chand contended that the learned District Judge had erred in disposing of the question of the appellants' title, inasmuch as no argument had been addressed to him regarding it. In support of this, he has filed an affidavit by Wali, appellant. To this affidavit we cannot attach any weight. In all probability, the arguments were in English and in any case if the allegations contained in the affidavit are correct, we would expect them to be supported by an affidavit of Wali's Counsel. We, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 150, O. IX, r. 13, applicability of—Transfer of territorial jurisdiction from one Court to another—Ex parte decree, application to set aside—Forum, proper.

Where the territorial jurisdiction of a Court in respect of a certain area is transferred to another Court, the Court to which the jurisdiction is so transferred can, under section 150 of the Civil Procedure Code, entertain an application under Order IX, rule 13 of Civil Procedure Code to set aside an ex parte decree passed by the former Court in a suit concerning the subject-matter within the area so transferred. [p 729, col. 1: p 730, col. 1.]

The expression "the Court by which the decree was passed" in Order IX, rule 13 of Civil Procedure Code is not so definite and precise as to create an exception to the general rule introduced by section 150 of the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 729, col. 1.]

Per Krishnan, J.—Section 150, Civil Procedure Code, is an enabling provision which prescribes what is to be done, in the ordinary course, to get an ex parte decree set aside. There is nothing in the section to restrict the making of an application to set aside an ex parte decree to the Court which passed it. [p. 730, col. 1.]

Petition, under section 115 of Act V of 1908, praying the High Court to revise an order, dated the 15th September 1920 of the Court of the District Munsif, Anantapur, in I. A. No. 177 of 1920, in Original Suit No. 1230 of 1919 on the file of the Court of the District Munsif, Penukonde.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. K. Shanyam Aiyangar, for the Petitioner.—The Anantapur Court had no jurisdiction to set aside the ex parte decree. It is only the Penukonda Munsif's Court which passed the decree that could entertain such an application. Section 150, Civil Procedure Code, cannot help the defendant owing to the qualifying words, "save as otherwise provided." That expression limits such applications by the terms of Order IX, rule 13 to the Court which passed the decree. The change of jurisdiction does not affect this question. Analogous case-where it is sought to enforce an injunction or to review an order of Court are helpful in construing section 150. Jaharuddin v. Hari Charan Poddar (1), Bellary Press Co., Ltd. [Mathura Das] v. Venkata Rao (2).

Section 150 applies when the whole business of a Court is transferred to another Court, as, where the former is abolished.

Mr. B. Somayya, for the Respondents.—The words of section 150 and Order IX, rule 13, should be liberally construed. Total transfer of jurisdiction and partial adjustment of local areas are alike covered by the rule. The provisions of Order IX, rule 13, are enabling in their nature. If the Court which passed the ex parte decree grants the prayer to set it aside it cannot proceed to dispose of the suit by reason of the jurisdiction over the subject matter being taken away. Cases of review petitions are peculiar and cannot be invoked in the interpretation of section 150 or Order IX, rule 13. See Ottapurakkal Thazath Suppi v. Alabi Mashur Koyanna Koya Kunhi Koya (3).

JUDGMENT.

SPENCER, J.—Section 150, which appeared for the first time in the Civil Procedure Code of 1908, provides for a Court to which the business of any other Court is transferred having the same powers as the Court from which the business is so transferred. But this useful provision is qualified by the words "save as otherwise provided," and the question in the case before us is whether the wording of Order IX, rule 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure is such as to take away the power of a Court that has territorial jurisdiction over the subject-matter of a suit to set aside an ex parte decree passed by another Court that originally tried the suit.

That rule declares that applications to set aside ex parte decrees may be made to the Court by which the decree was passed. It goes on to state that on making an order setting aside the ex parte decree the Court shall appoint a day for proceeding with the suit

Our attention has been drawn to reported decisions which relate to the powers of Courts other than the Court which granted an injunction to deal with a breach thereof: Bellary Press Co., Ltd. Mathura Das] v. Venkata Rao (2), Jaharuddin v. Hari Charan Poddar (1) and Ottapurakkal Thazath Kuppi v. Alab Mashur Koyanna Koya Kunhi Koya (3), also to decisions touching similar powers of Courts to execute the decrees of other Courts: Panduranga Mudaliar v. Vythilinga Reddi (4), Subbiah Naicker v. Ramanathan Chettiar (5), Seeni Nadan v. Muthuswamy Pillai (6) and to review the order and decrees of other Judges: Sarangapani v. Narayanasami (7). There is also an authority Parmanunda Das v. Mahabeer Dossji (8) for holding that only the Court that passed a decree can sanction agreements to give time to a judgment debtor under section 557A of the Code of 1882. The above are merely analogous cases, and no direct authority on the point before us has been cited.

In matters of execution, the law must now be regarded as settled by the definition of the expression "Court which passed a decree" in section 37 of the Code of 1908, and by the Full Bench judgment in Seeni Nadan v. Muthuswamy Pillai (6). Applications to get a review of judgment have been peculiarly restricted by Order XLVII, rule 2 permitting them to be made only to the Judge who personally passed the decree or made the order when they are based upon other grounds than the discovery of new and important matter or the existence of a clerical or arithmetical error. The use of the words "the Court granting injunction" was not considered by Srinivasa Iyengar, J., in Ottapurakkal Thazath Kuppi v. Alabi Mashur Koyanna Koya Kunhi Koya (3) or by Krishnaswamy Iyer and Munro, JJ., in Bellary Press Co., Ltd. [Mathura Das] v. Venkata Rao (2) to be an obstacle to a Court, to which the general business of another Court is transferred, dealing with applications to enforce injunctions through the powers given them under sections 150 and 36, the objection in the last named decision being only to the transfer of an application from the Court which had express power to deal with it.

The case thus being one of first impression we must put a reasonable construction on the words of the Code. It is one thing to say that an application made to the Court that passed the decree or order should not be transferred to another Court which has by transfer acquired jurisdiction to deal with further proceedings in the connected suit; it is another thing to argue that where the whole business of one Court has been transferred to another Court, the expression "the Court by which the decree was passed" is so definite and precise as to create an exception to the general rule introduced by section 150.

To adopt the latter argument is in effect to leave a defendant against whom an ex parte decree has been passed by a Court, which is afterwards abolished, without any remedy beyond a general right of appeal against the final decree [Vide Karuppan v. Ayyathorai (9) and Sathu Krishna Ayyar v. Kuppan Ayyangar (10)], and section 36 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The direction at the end of this rule that upon setting aside an ex parte decree the Court shall appoint a day for proceeding with the suit would be, as my learned brother pointed out, meaningless if such application were to be disposed of by Courts which had ceased to have jurisdiction over the suit itself.

I would, therefore, place a liberal construction on the wording of section 150 and of Order IX, rule 13 and hold that the District Munsif of Anantapur had jurisdiction to deal with this petition.

As to the merits, the service of notice of suit purported to be by affixture to the outer door of the respondents' residence, the information given by his sister being that he had gone to a village in Mysore. The statement in his affidavit that he did not know till he attended the Taluk office on 27th March 1920 that an ex parte decree had been passed against him stands uncontradicted in detail. There appears, thus, to have been good reason for ordering the ex parte decree to be set aside. The civil revision petition is dismissed with costs

KRISHNAN, J.—The main question for our decision in the revision petition is one of jurisdiction regarding the setting aside of an ex parte decree.

The petitioner before us, who was the plaintiff in Original Suit No. 1230 of 1919 on the file of the District Munsif's Court of Pennukonda, obtained a decree against the respondent and others, the decree against him being an ex parte decree. Subsequently, there was a re-adjustment of territorial jurisdiction between that Court and the District Munsif's Court of Anantapur as the result of which, all the properties included in the decree were transferred to the jurisdiction of the latter Court. Consequently, the respondent applied to that Court to set aside the ex parte decree against him and that Court has granted his prayer. The revision is against that order and it has been contended before us, that the Pennkonda Court, as the Court which passed the decree, was the only Court competent to act under Order IX, rule 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure to set aside the decree and that the Anantapur Court had no jurisdiction to do so. That rule, it is true, authorises an application to the Court that passed the decree but the respondent relies upon section 150 of the Code of Civil Procedure as extending the power to act under that rule to the Anantapur Court in the present case, as the whole business of the former Court within the local area in which the suit properties are situate, has been transferred to the latter Court and he contends section 150 applies.

The petitioner's Vakil has put forward two contentions to exclude the applicability of section 150 and I shall consider them separately. He first argued that the section applied only when the whole of the business of the Court with reference to the whole of its jurisdiction is transferred to another Court; or, in other words, when the Court is abolished and another is substituted for it, and not to a case of partial adjustment of jurisdiction and transfer of its business with reference to that part alone to another Court. There is nothing in the language of the section which compels us to put this restricted meaning on it: to do so would greatly reduce its scope and usefulness. No authority has been cited in favour of the restricted construction, nor is any general reason shown in support of it. On the other hand, there is as much reason to apply the section to cases of transfer of defined local areas as to cases of transfer of the whole jurisdiction. What little authority there is on the point, is in favour of the view I am taking, for in the Full Bench case in Seeni Nadan v. Muthusamy Pillai (6) there is an observation of Ayling, J., on page 35 which supports it, where the learned Judge says "this section (section 150 of the Code of Civil Procedure) certainly seems to me to cover the case of transfer of all the litigations arising out of a tract of country from one part to another." The first objection must, therefore, be overruled.

(9) 9 M. 445; 3 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 705.
(10) 30 M. 54; 1 M. L. T. 268; 16 M. L. J. 479.

The next point taken is, that the words "save as otherwise provided" in the section prevent its applicability to the present case, as it is argued that Order IX, rule 13, requires that the application should be made to the Court that passed the decree and to no other Court. It does not say anything about other Courts and I am unable to read it as excluding the application of section 150. The rule is an enabling one which prescribes what is to be done in the ordinary course, to get an ex parte decree set aside. It does not say that the Court that passed the decree is the only Court that can set it aside. Nor is there anything restrictive in the wording.

No authorities have been cited on the precise point before us, by either side but the petitioner's Vakil has tried to argue by way of analogy with reference to certain rulings under Order XXXIX, rule 2, clause (3) of the Code of Civil Procedure, that when a forum is mentioned in a rule as having authority to do a certain thing it must be held that the jurisdiction of every other forum in the matter is excluded and he cited the cases in Jaharuddin v. Hari Charan Poddar (1) and Bellary Press Co., Ltd. [Mathura Das v. Venkata Rao (2). It is sufficient to say that in these cases, the effect of section 150 of the Code of Civil Procedure did not arise for decision and they are thus of little value in the present case. On the other hand, with reference to this very point, Srinivasa Iyengar, J., in his judgment in the Full Bench case in Ottapurakkal Thaveth Ruppi v. Alabi Mashur Koyanna Koya Kunhi Koya (3) expresses a clear opinion when he says that "where the business of one Court is transferred to another, the Court to which the business is so transferred may, I think, under section 150, entertain an original application for attachment or arrest under clause (c), rule 2 of Order XXXIX." That Full Bench overruled the rather extraordinary contention that, because the clause said that the Court granting the injunction may attach the properties of or imprison in civil jail the person guilty of disobedience, even the Appellate Court had no power to take action under it. If it is kept in mind that these are enabling rules in which there are no restrictive words as there is, for example, in Order XLVII, rule 2 under which except in certain circumstances an application for review can be made "only to the Judge who passed the decree or order" there is no difficulty in holding that the Court, given the same powers as the Court mentioned in the rules, as, for example, an Appellate Court or a Court to which the former Court's business has been transferred under section 150 of the Code of Civil Procedure can itself exercise those powers. To hold otherwise will be, in my opinion, entirely erroneous and will defeat the very object of the Legislature in extending such powers.

I have not referred to section 37 of the Code or to cases under it, for they all refer to proceedings in execution.

I agree with my learned brother that the contention that the Anantapur Court had no jurisdiction must be overruled.

The objections taken to the order of the lower Court on the merits are equally untenable. It is clear from the record that the defendant was not duly served and that his application is within time as he has sworn in his affidavit that he was not aware of the suit or of the affixture of the summons at his residence or of the existence of the ex parte decree till the 27th March, some 12 day before his application. The matter was tried on affidavits, no appliation being made to take evidence or to cross-examine the defendant. The plaintiff filed no affidavit himself but he left it to his Vakil to file an argumentative statement merely alleging that the defendants' affidavit could not be true. In these circumstances, the District Munsif cannot be said to have acted irregularly or even wrongly in setting aside the ex parte decree.

I agree that the civil revision petition fails and must be dismissed with costs.

GOKAL CHAND—JUDGMENT-DEBTOR—APPELLANT

versus

THE FIRM OF HUKAM CHAND-NATHU MAL OF FEROZEPORE—DECREE HOLDER—RESPONDENT.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Separation—Separating member specially trained at family expense—Liability to satisfy decree against family property.

Where a decree is granted against the property of a joint Hindu family including the separate property of a particular member of the family which, being the result of some special training acquired at the expense of the joint family, is also declared family property, and that member subsequently quits the family, the only property of his that is liable for the satisfaction of the decree is his share in the joint family property and his separate property such as it was on the date on which he quitted the family His property acquried after he quitted the family is not liable for the satisfaction of the decree.

Miscellaneous second appeal from an order of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Ferozepore, dated the 15th July 1917.

Bakhshi Tek Chand, for the Appellant.

Mr. Chiman Lal Gulati, for Mr. Bir Lal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of the execution of a decree against appellant and others, in which the separate property of appellant was made liable as being a part of the joint family property.

The main question in the appeal is, whether the separate property of a member of a joint Hindu family whose separate property has been declared to be joint family property for the satisfaction of a decree remains joint family property for that limited purpose after he has quitted the family.

The Court below has refused to decide whether in fact the appellant has quitted the family on the ground that, whether he has or has not, his separate property remains liable to satisfy the decree until the decree has been completely discharged.

With this proposition we cannot agree. No doubt, it seems strange that a member of a Hindu family who has secured a special training at the expense of that family should by quitting it be able to avoid liability for a decree against that family property, but this is not the only anomaly in Hindu Law.

The decree under consideration is against the joint family property, including the separate property of a certain member of the joint family. It follows that when that member quits the family, all of his property that remains liable for the satisfaction of the decree is (1) his share in the joint family property, (2) This separate property such as it was up to the date on which he quitted the family. This separate property acquired after he quitted the family is not, and never was, joint family property.

Another objection by the appellant is that in this Court's decree there is no mention of interest, but this Court's decree affirmed the first Court's decree and merely specified in addition what property should to liable to satisfy the decree.

The Court below must decide the appellant's objection that he has separated from the family. We note that in the original suit a similar objection was put forward in argument and at that time no definite date of separation could be asserted but the appellant may be able to show that he separated at some date later than the original suit.

We accordingly accept the appeal and remand the case for the decision of the above noted point if it is still pressed by the appellant.

Costs to follow final event.

YAGNASAMI IYER alias AYYAVAYYAR—PETITIONER

versus

K. CHIDAMBARANATHA MUDALIAR —RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115, O. XXI, r 91– Sale certificate, amendment of, without notice to judgment-debtor, legality of—Revision—High Court, discretion of, where no prejudice caused to judgment-debtor– Limitation.

The amendment of a sale certificate at the instance of an auction purchaser without notice to the judgment-debtor is a material irregularity in procedure. [p. 733, col. 2]

Ajant Singh v. Sundar Mall [F. T. Christien], 16 Ind Cas 567: 17 C. W. N. 862 at p. 863, Ram Nath Maity v. Rudra Mahanti, 21 Ind Cas. 409: 18 C. L. J. 142 and Jaydhari Dasya v. Rasik Lal Sikdar, 24 Ind. Cas. 694, referred to.

Where, however, the irregularity has not prejudiced the judgment-debtor, a High Court will not interfere with the order in revision under section 115, Civil Procedure Code. [p. 734, col 2.]

It is in the discretion of a High Court, in proper cases to excuse the delay in presenting a revision petition after 90 days from the date of the lower Court's order. [p. 733, col. 1.]

Petition, under section 115 of Act V of 1908 and section 107 of the Government of India Act, praying the High Court to revise an order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Mayavaram, in Execution Appeal No. 369 of 1919, in Execution Petition No. 202 of 1918, in Original Suit No. 28 of 1915, dated the 11th November 1919.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. Muthiah Mudaliar, for the Respondent, took the preliminary objections, (1) that the revision petition was barred as it was presented considerably after 90 days from the date of the lower Court's order, and (2) that the matter was res judicata by reason of the High Court's order in the prior appeal and revision Petition, Civil Miscellaneous Appeal No. 370 of 1919 and Civil Revision Petition No. 240 of 1920 [Yagnasami Ayyar v. Chidambaranatha Mudaliar (1)].

Though there was no notice of amendment of sale certificate to the judgment-debtor, by inclusion of more items, the actual conduct of the sale has not caused any prejudice to the judgment-debtor as the Samudayam rights appurtenant to the properties were also sold.

Mr. T. R. Vencatrama Sastry, for the Petitioner.—The delay was due to petitioner's having bona fide conducted other proceedings. It could be excused by the High Court.

Civil Miscellaneous Appeal No. 370 of 1919 was against another order. There is no res judicata.

The want of notice is a material irregularity and vitiates the amendment order: Ajant Singh v. Sundar Mall [F. T. Christien (2), Ram Nath Maity v Rudra Mahanti (3).

JUDGMENT.—This is an application under section 115, Civil Procedure Code, to revise the order of the Subordinate Judge of Mayavaram, dated 11th November 1919, directing an amendment of the sale certificate by including certain properties said to have been sold in auction.

Mr. Muthiah Mudaliar on behalf of the respondent raises two preliminary objections to the hearing of the petition. (1) It is 303 days out of time, and (2) the matter in dispute was disposed of by a Bench of this Court by the order on Civil Miscellaneous Appeal No. 370 of 1919 and Civil Revision Petition No. 240 of 1920 [Yagnasami Ayyar v. Chidambaranatha Mudaliar (1)].

Mr. Venkatarama Sastri for the petitioner argues that his client was pursuing his remedy in another proceeding, that there was no delay in the prosecution of that remedy, that this being a revision petition the period of limitation is only a rule of Court and (delay?) could be excused for proper reasons and that the order on Civil Miscellaneous Appeal No. 370 of 1919 and Civil Revision Petition No. 240 of 1920 [Yagnasami Ayyar v Chidambaranatha Mudaliar (1)] is not res judicata.

(2) 16 Ind. Cas. 567; 17 C. W. N. 862 at p. 863.
(3) 21 Ind. Cas. 409; 18 C. L. J 142.

The facts of the case are that certain items of property were sold by Court and on 10th November 1919 the auction-purchaser presented an application for amendment of the sale-certificate by the inclusion of certain items which he said were left out by oversight and that they should be included in the sale-certificate. The Subordinate Judge of Mayavaram, without giving notice of the application of the auction-purchaser to the judgment-debtor, ordered on 11th November 1919 that the sale-certificate should be amended as prayed for. The property was ordered to be delivered to the auction-purchaser on 5th December 1919. On 17th December 1919 the petitioner presented the said Civil Miscellaneous Appeal No. 370 of 1919 to the High Court which was disposed of on 7th September 1920. The High Court held that no appeal lay and, as there was no question of jurisdiction involved in the case, there was no ground for interference under section 115 Thereupon the petitioner presented this Civil Revision Petition on 27th September 1920. Hence the delay of 303 days. Though the High Court, as a rule, does not entertain revision petitions after three months, in proper cases the discretion of the Court could very well be exercised in excusing the delay. I should be most reluctant to excuse a long delay on the part of the litigant in ordinary cases. But in this case the petitioner acted on the advice of one of the recognised leaders of the Bar as to the course he should pursue, which course it was found afterwards to be ineffectual. On further advice he has preferred this petition. Without expressing an opinion as to the disposal of the petition on this preliminary point, I heard the case on the merits in order to see whether this is a fit case in which I should exercise my discretion in excusing the delay. Without intending to establish a precedent I hold this is a fit case in which the delay could be excused and the petition should be disposed of on the merits.

Mr. Mathiah Mudaliar's second preliminary objection is not tenable The said Civil Miscellaneous Appeal No. 370 of 1919 and Civil Revision Petition No. 270 of 1920 [Yagnasami Ayyar v. Chidambaranatha Mudaliar (1)] were against the order of the 5th December and though ground No. 6 of the said Civil Miscellaneous Appeal refers to the subject-matter of the present complaint, I cannot bring myself to hold that the matter is res judicata.

Coming to the merits of the case, I find that the Subordinate Judge of Mayavaram ordered amendment of the sale-certificate on 10th November 1919 without notice to the judgment-debtor. He has simply written the word 'add' on the application of the auction purchaser and the sale-certificate was accordingly amended by the inclusion of considerable property. It may be that the Subordinate Judge thought that there was no use in giving notice to the judgment debtor as he could not possibly raise any valid objection to the amendment. But whatever might be the result of an objection by the judgment-debtor, to quote the words of the learned Judge of the Calcutta High Court in Aajnt Singh v. Sundar Mall [F. T. Christien] (2), "it is an elementary rule of universal application and founded upon plainest principles of justice that a judicial order which may possibly affect or prejudice any party cannot be finally made unless he has been afforded an opportunity to be heard." Vide also Ram Nath Maity v. Rudra Mahanti (3). It was the duty of the Subordinate Judge to have given notice of the auction-purchaser's application to the judgment-debtor, especially in a case where amendment is sought to be made of a sale-certificate, which, as their Lordships of the Privy Council observe, is a solemn document and could not easily be impugned, and I think he has acted with material irregularity in not giving to the judgment-debtor notice of the auction-purchaser's application of the 10th November 1919 wherein he prayed that the sale certificate be amended by the addition of certain items of Samudayam property: Vide Joydhari Dasya v. Rasik Lal Sikdar (4).

The next question is, what order should be passed on this petition? In order to decide that, I went into the facts of the case and I am satisfied that no injustice has been done to the judgment debtor by the want of notice. The properties of the judgment-debtor were ordered to be sold in nine lots. The sale proclamation shows that some of the items had as appurtenant to them certain Samudayam rights. Lots Nos. 1 to 3 were sold. As the sale was held of those lots in accordance with the list prepared and the sale proclamation, it cannot be contended that the Samudayam rights which are appurtenant to the said items have not been sold. It may be that, in certain cases, the Samudayam rights are separately sold, but, when the Court proceeds to sell these rights as appurtenant to some items, it cannot, with any show of reason, be contended that the rights appurtenant were not sold or that the Court intended to sell the items without the appurtenances. The petitioner presented a petition to the Subordinate Judge of Mayavaram on 2nd December 1919 wherein he stated that the Samudayam property was not purchased by the auction-purchaser as it had not been sold in auction and also stated that it was not published in the said proclamation and that the said property would be sold in auction together with the village Samudayam. The last statement is clearly an incorrect one, for the sale-proclamation does mention the Samudayam properties as appurtenant to the main items of property to be sold. Evidently when this petition was heard by the Sub-Judge on 5th December 1919, the Vakil, who appeared for the petitioner, could not very well sustain the allegation that the Samudayam property was not sold; that is the reason why the Subordinate Judge of Mayavaram in his judgment, dated 5th December 1919, makes no reference to the allegation that the Samudayam properties were not sold in auction. He deals with the other objections raised by the petitioner. I, therefore, come to the conclusion that the petitioner gave up this contention as hopeless, and that is the reason why no application was made to the High Court against the order for amendment of the sale certificate. The matter is more than two years old and very probably other persons have acquired rights under the auction-purchaser and no good purpose will be served by reversing the order of the Subordinate Judge on 11th November 1919 and directing him to re-hear the petition after giving notice to the petitioner. No injustice has been caused by the material irregularity in the disposal of the respondent's petition on 11th November 1919, and I do not think it would be proper to interfere with the order passed so far back as 11th November 1919. The petition is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

(4) 24 Ind. Cas. 604.

JUGLO v. ABDUL SALAM.

Sheikh Nioz Muhammad, for the Respondent

JUDGMENT.—Sheikh Abdul Salam instituted the suit, out of which this appeal has arisen, against Lachhman Singh, claiming the refund of Rs. 2,300, paid by Sheikh Abdul Salam as earnest-money for the purchase by him of certain property. This property was sold by auction, and, according to the story told by the plaintiff, he happened to be passing along the road when he heard a drum being beaten and was attracted by the noise to the scene where he discovered on enquiry that the property in question was being sold by auction. On enquiry, he learnt from the auctioneer that the last bid was Rs. 22,000, whereupon he himself made a bid of Rs. 23,000, which being the highest was accepted and in due course the plaintiff paid Rs. 2,300, as earnest money at 10 per cent. Subsequently, he says that he discovered that the property was involved in litigation and that there had been litigation in regard to it previously. Thinking that the defendant's title to the property was defective, he sought to recover Rs. 2,300 from him and for that purpose brought this suit. It was also alleged in the plaint that the auctioneer had shown to the plaintiff a list of false bids. The Trial Court dismissed the suit. On appeal, the learned District Judge decreed it holding that the principles of section 55 (1) (a) of the Transfer of Property Act were applicable. The vendor has come up to this Court in second appeal through Mr. Moti Sagar and we have heard Mr. Niaz Muhammad on behalf of the respondent.

In our opinion, the view taken by the learned District Judge is erroneous. The sale was a sale by auction which had been duly notified. Our attention has been drawn to three notices, one yellow, one pink and one white. In the yellow and pink notices it is distinctly stated that the conditions of the sale could be ascertained from notices affixed to the property to be sold, copies of which could be obtained at the office of the auctioneer. A copy of those conditions duly signed by the plaintiff is on the record as Exhibit P. W. No. 1. In this Exhibit P. W. No. 1, the would-be purchasers are distinctly told to satisfy themselves as to the nature of the property sold and there being a contract "to the contrary" the principles of section 55 of the Transfer of Property Act are clearly inapplicable. In any event, it seems to us that the vendor could in law not be expected to do more than he did. He published notices regarding the sale. The conditions of the sale were also declared available at the office of the auctioneer. The plaintiff in this case was at the spot where the auction was held. His signature on Exhibit P. W. No. 1 clearly shows that copies of the conditions were available. If he did not take the trouble to read them that is his own lookout. It appears to us that the doctrine of caveat emptor distinctly applies to this case.

We have been asked to go into the question of the vendor's title, but we see no reason to do so, as in the view we take of the case whether the vendor's title is good or bad, it does not affect the decision of this case. Further, inasmuch as the vendor's title is in dispute, in another litigation (which has so far ended in favour of the vendor) we do not think it advisable to express any opinion on this point in this case. Finally, Mr. Niaz Muhammad urged that if it were held that section 55 of the Transfer of Property Act did not apply, the case should be remanded in order that the learned District Judge may come to a finding as to whether the copy of the conditions, P. W. No. 1, was actually posted on the premises or not. It seems to us that it is unnecessary to do so. The plaintiff has himself produced a copy of the conditions which he clearly could have seen (even if he did not do so) if he had so wished. He admits having seen the pink notice in which would-be purchasers are clearly told that the conditions of the sale were printed and were available at the auctioneer's office.

We, therefore, accept this appeal, and, setting aside the decree of the learned District Judge, restore that of the Trial Court dismissing the suit with costs. The appellant will get his costs throughout.

JUDGMENT.

RAMESAM, J.—The plaintiffs are the step-sons of the step sister of the deceased and claim to succeed to his estate. Our learned brother, Kumarasami Sastri, J., dismissed the suit, holding that plaintiffs are not heirs. The plaintiffs appeal. The only point for decision in appeal is whether the step-son of a step sister is an heir under the Hindu Law (according to Mitakshara) as administered in the Madras Presidency.

Mr. A. Krishnasawmy Aiyar, who appeared for the appellant, started his case by saying (1) that the step sister is a sapinda of the propositus and (2) that the plaintiffs are her sapindas. But he did not, and rightly, follow up these propositions by arguing that the plaintiffs are, therefore, sapindas of the propositus. Later on, he expressly disclaimed any intention to argue that the plaintiffs are bandhus (or bhinnagotra sapindas) of the deceased. On this portion of the case, it is only sufficient to observe that, in general, sapindaship involves descent from a common ancestor, the only exception to this principle being the case of wives of male sapindas. If A and B (males) are sapindas of each other, the wives of A and B are sapindas. This follows from the definition of 'sapinda' in the Ashara Adhaya of the Mitakashara [quoted in Umaid Bahadur v. Udoi Chand (7), Babu Lal v. Nanku Ram (8), Ramchandra Martand Waikar v. Vinayak Venkatesh Kothekar (9), Rajkumar Sarvadhikari on Inheritance, pages 601—605 and West and Bahler (4th Edition, page 114)]. But the sapinda relationship of such females, except in the case of ancestors, such as mother, grandmother, etc., who come in among sagotra heirs has not served to bring them into the line of heirs; so that, a step-mother Mari v. Chinnammal (5), Seethi Ammal v. Nachiar Ammal (6), or a great-grand father's great-grandson's widow Balamma v Pulloyya (10)] is not an heir under the Mitakshara Law; except in Bombay [Lallubhai Bapubhai v. Mankuvarbai (11), Rachava v. Kalingapa (12), Kashibai v. Moreshvar Raghunath (13)] generally, there is no such principle of law as that—"If A and B not descended from a common ancestor, are each a sapinda of C, A and B are sapindas of each other.'

The arguments of the appellant are two-fold. (1) A step-mother is regarded as the equivalent of a mother (Manu IX, 183; see also Vishnu XV, 41 and Vasishta XVII, 11) for various purposes, (a) adoption, (b) sharing with sons in a partition, (c) in inheritance to a woman's stridhan. In the first case, the principle is that adoption is to a father primarily and only in a secondary sense to his wife, so much so that, except in the case of pratipgrachita mata or the wife, who is actually associated with the husband in the ceremony of adoption: Annapurni Nachiar v. Forbes (14), all the wives of an adopter are regarded as adoptive mothers. (See Mayne, section 167). In the second case, the plural is used in the texts—'wives' in Mitakshara, Chapter I, section 2, Pl. 9, and mothers (matarau) in Smriti Chandrika, Chapter IV, section 14, citing Vishnu and inferring that 'mother' includes 'step mother.' In the third case, the right to succession to a woman's stridhanam of her step-son is based on special texts, e.g., Viramitrodaya, Chapter V, part II, section 5. Anyhow, it is clear that the argument may be carried too far. In the text of Brihaspate (quoted in Smriti Chandrika, Chapter IX, section 3, section 36, Vyavahara Mayukha, Chapter IV, section 10, in Mandlik, page 58 and Viramitrodaya, Chapter V, part II, section 14) certain other female relatives besides step-mother are regarded as mothers. It is clear that the general principle stated in Manu IX, 183 did not avail the step mother to become an heir, Mari v. Chinnammal (5), Seethi Ammal v. Nachier Ammal (6), and cannot in general be relied on in questions of succession: Annapurni Nachiar v. Forbes (14) and Gangadhar Bogla v. Hira Lal (15).

The second line of argument adopted by the appellants may be stated as follows:—A certain number of females deemed to be heirs outside Madras except in Bombay (and not yet recognized by the Privy Council even in Madras) have been held to be heirs by the Madras High Court, viz, sister in Kutti Ammal v. Radakrishna Aiyan (1), Lakshmanammal v. Tiruvengada Mudali (16); father's sister, Nrasimma v. Mangammal (17), Chinnammal v. Venkatachala (3), son's daughter in Nallana v. Ponnal (4), daughter's daughter in Ramappa Udayan v. Arumugath Udayan (18), Rajah Venkata Narasimha Appa Rao v. Rajah Surenani Venkota Purshothama Gopala Row (19), brother's daughter in Venkatasubramaniam Chetti v. Thayarammah (20) and sister's in daughter Sundrammal v. Rangasami Mudaliar (21) apparently with some hesitation, (see page 198). These are not bandhus (I am here stating only the appellant's arguments). They cannot come in as 'bandhus' for, if they do, as all bandhus are divided into atma bandhus, pitri bandhus and matri bandhus who take in the order of enumeration [see Adit Narayan Singh v. Mahabir Prasad Tiwari (22)]; famale atma bandhus should take precedence over male pitri and matri bandhus; and female pitri bandhus over male matri bandhus, whereas, according to the Madras High Court, these female heirs are postponed to all male bandhus. Therefore, they come in, as heirs, only as relations after the bandhus. The plaintiffs are at least such relations. Reliance is placed on Gridhari Lal Roy v. Bengal Government (2) where the Right Hon'ble Sir James Colville, discussing the right of the maternal uncle and quoting a passage from Viramitrodaya on the question, says: "If this be the correct reading, it would follow that even if the exclusion of maternal uncle and others not mentioned in the text relied upon by the respondent, from the list of bandhus, were established, they would still as relations, be heirs—" The next succeeding sentence of His Lordship repels the suggestion, if any, in the Viramitrodaya that the maternal uncle is not a bandhu but a relation. The appellants' Vakil also relies on Sundrammal v Rangasami Mudaliar (21), where it is said that sister's daughters are not bandhus. In view of the other decisions above mentioned, in all of which such female heirs are regarded as bandhus, it must be admitted that the language of Sundrammal v. Rangasami Mudaliar (21) is not quite clear. All that was meant was, that they are not male bandhus. The case was so explained by Subramania Aiyar, J., in Venkatasubramaniam Chetti v. Thayarammal (20) In Lakshmanammal v. Tiruvengada Mudali (16) even females, who would be sagotra sapindas by birth—such as sister and son's daughter—are said to be only bandhus, for either they pass away into another gotra by marriage, or are capable of so passing away, Lakshmanammal v. Tiruvengada Mudali (16). Incidentally, it may be observed, that the words 'relations,' and 'kinsmen' occurring in several of the English translations of the Sanskrit texts correspond to 'bandhu' or 'sapinda' in the original, e.g., Mitakshara, Chapter II, section VI—1 and the text of Apastamba (I, 14 section 2) quoted therein Lakshmanammal v. Tiruvengada Mudali (16) Manu, IX, 187 (Banerjee's Translation) in Babu Lal v. Nanku Ram (8). As to the supposed difficulty in arranging the order of female and male bandhus for which reliance is placed on Adit Narayan Singh v. Mahabir Prasad Tiwari (22) it is only sufficient to say that no case of female bandhus has yet come up before the Privy Council; their Lordships' observation in Adit Narayan Singh v. Mahabir Prasad Tiwari (22) were made with reference to male bandhus only and it is unnecessary now to speculate as to whether the Privy Council will recognize female bandhus, and, if they do, they will postpone them to all male bandhus; or place the atma bandhus (male and female) before the pitri bandhus and similarly for pitri and matri bandhus. In this connection, it must be remembered that Yajnavalkya's text, Chapter II, sections 135-136 (Mandlik, page 220), mentions only bandhus between 'gotrajas' and 'pupil.' The Mitakshara in commenting on this, does not purport to add any new class (Chapter II, sections VI and VII). When Mr. Mayne questioned the correctness of the Madras High Court's decision in Kutti Ammal v. Radakristna Aiyan (1) on the ground that the High Court by that decision, added a new class of heirs, the High Court's reply in Lakshmanammal v. Tiruvengada Mudali (16) was that they did not but that they were construing the word 'bandhu' in Mitakshara (section VI) as not confined to males. All the decisions above enumerated proceed on this ground. The learned Vakil for the appellants admitted before us that there is no case of a person who is not a sapinda (apart from pupil and teacher) being allowed to succeed as an heir. Mitakshara, Chapter II, section 3, Pl. 4, and Lakshmanammal v. Tiruvengada Mudali (16), show that propinquity of blood is still all important. I have, therefore, no hesitation in holding that the appellant is not an heir. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs (proportionate to the respective interests of the respondents.)

SPENCER, J.—I am completely in accord with what my learned brother has said. There is manifestly no consanguinity between a man and his step sister's step-son, and there is no authority for holding that the latter is a bandhu. There is no class of relations coming in after the lines of gotraja sapindas and bandhus are exhausted. Colebrook's translation of the Sanskrit word "adi," occurring in the Mitakshara as well as "other relations," is a loose translation. It may be more correctly rendered as "the like" or "etc." In Lakshmanammal v. Tiruvengada Mudali (16) the suggestion that Kutti Ammal v. Radakristna Aiyan (1) was an authority for the existence of a class of heirs who being relations, are neither gotrajas not bandhus was negatived by Sir Charles Turner, C. J., and Kindersley, J. The appeal is dismissed with costs, proportionate to respondent's respective interests.

Where there is an extraordinary difference between the amount of the profits to which a co-sharer would be entitled on the basis of the gross rental, and the amount to which he is entitled on the basis of the actual collections, a presumption of dishonesty or gross negligence arises, which it is for the heirs of the deceased lambardar to rebut. [p. 740, col 1.]

Appeal from a decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Unao, dated the 22nd July 1920, confirming that of the Munsif, Purwa, dated the 30th March 1920.

Mr. Rajeshwari Prasad, for the Appellant.

Mr. Gulab Chand Srimal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs in the suit out of which this appeal arises are owners of a 3 annas 4 pies share in village Shahpur. The defendants are the sons of one Chandra Dat, who was Lambardar of the mahal in which the plaintiff's property is situate. The suit was brought for recovery of Rs. 366 2.6 arrears of profits for the year 1326 Fasli which were or ought to have been collected by the deceased Lambardar Chandra Dat.

The defendants pleaded that the plaintiffs were entitled to a share only of the profits acutally realised and denied their liability to pay profits calculated on the full rental.

The Court of first instance upheld the contention of the defendants and gave the plaintiffs a decree of Rs. 20 6-6 only with proportionate costs. It held that as the plaintiffs had sued the defendants as representatives of the deceased Lambardar, the defendants could not be held liable for any negligence on the part of the Lambardar and could not, therefore, be required to pay profits on the gross rental.

The lower Appellate Court has confirmed the decree of the Court of first instance. It seems to have held that negligence on the part of the deceased Lambardar was proved, but it has found that the defendants cannot be held liable for such negligence and in support of that finding it relied upon certain rulings of the Allahabad High Court:—Dip Singh v. Ram Charan (1), Gulzari Lal v. Dan Dayal (2), Murad un nissa v. Ghulam Sajjad (3), Gulab v. Fateh Chand (4) and also on a ruling of this Court, Banke v. Umrao Lal (5).

It is shown that on the basis of gross rental the plaintiffs would be entitled to the sum of Rs. 270-8 9 whereas, according to the collections admitted and dictated to the Patwari, the plaintiffs' share of profits would amount only to Rs. 20 6-6. There is such an extraordinary difference between these two sums as to raise a presumption either of dishonesty or of gross negligence on the part of the deceased Lambardar, and if the defendants are liable to the extent of the assets of the deceased which have come into their hands, the burden was certainly on them to rebut the presumption. That they have failed to do so is beyond question. They have produced no accounts. Not one of the defendants has gone into the witness box to explain why such an absurdly small amount had been collected. We find that in the other mahals of the village the rent was realised in full, that the tenants are not shown to be poor or insolvent and that, though the Patwari says that the kharif crop was bad, yet no portion of the revenue was remitted or suspended There can be no doubt, in the circumstances, that had the Lambardar Chandra Dat been alive the plaintiffs would have been entitled to a decree for profits on the basis of the gross rental. The only question is, whether a decree on the basis of the gross rental can be passed against his sons the defendants. The learned Counsel for the appellants admits that the defendants cannot be held personally liable. He claims that his clients are entitled to a decree against the assets of the deceased Lambardar which have come into the defendants' hands. It seems to me that there is force in his contention. The rulings of the Allahabad High Court on which the lower Appellate Court has relied are based on the provisions of sections 164 and 166 of the Agra Tenancy Act. The present suit has been brought against the sons of the Lambardar as representatives and in possession of the assets of the deceased and not in their capacity as Lambardar or co sharers. The suit has been brought not in the Revenue Court under clause (15) of section 108 of the Oudh Rent Act but in the Civil Court in accordance with the ruling published in Banke v. Umrao Lal (5). If the deceased Lambardar actually realised a larger amount than is entered in the Patwari's accounts there can be no doubt that the plaintiffs are entitled to their share of the amount realised out of his estate. And it seems to me that if he did not realise more than the amount so entered his estate is equally liable for the plaintiff's share of the profits which with reasonable care he might have collected. The deceased Lambardar was under an obligation to collect the rents of the tenants and in that case he has been grossly negligent in respect of the duty imposed upon him. In the case of Concha v. Murrieta (6) Cotton, L. J., has remarked: "It is true that no action for a tort can be revived or commenced against the representatives of the person who committed it; but the case is quite different where the act is not a mere tort but is a breach of a quasi contract, where the claim is founded on breach of a fiduciary relation, or on failure to perform a duty." And in the case of Peebles v. Oswaldtwistle Urban District Council (7) A. L. Smith, L. J., has quoted the following note of Wheatley v Lane (8) with approval "It was a principle of the Common Law, that if an injury were done either to the person or the property of another, for which damages only could be recovered in satisfaction, the action died with the person to whom or by whom the wrong was done..... But this rule was never extended to such personal actions as were founded upon any obligation, contract, debt, covenant, or any other duty to be performed, for there the action survived."

In the case before us there was clearly a duty imposed upon the deceased Lambardar to take reasonable care in collecting the rents and the liability incurred by his failure to perform that duty survives after his death. The case of Bharath Singh v. Tej Singh (9) was decided solely upon the construction of section 161 of the Agra Tenancy Act, but in his judgment at page 254,* Mr. Justice Banerji expresses the opinion: "On principle it does not seem that the assets of the deceased Lambardar should escape liability simply because the said Lambardar who had neglected to make collections or was guilty of gross misconduct happened to die after the expiry of the year during which the collections had to be made."

For these reasons, I am of opinion that the defendants are liable to the extent of the assets of their deceased father which have come into their hands for the plaintiffs' share of the profits which might with reasonable care have been collected. I have already pointed out that the burden was thrown upon the defendants to show that reasonable care had been exercised; and as they failed to discharge that burden they must be held liable to the plaintiffs for profits calculated on the gross rental. The appeal is, therefore, allowed and the plaintiffs-appellants will be given a decree for Rs. 270-8-9 with proportionate costs in all Courts. The decree will be against the assets of the deceased Lambardar which have come into the hands of the defendants.

The petition of objection is dismissed with costs.

LAHORE HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 938 OF 1919.

Present:—Mr. Justice LeRossignol and Mr. Justice Campbell.

Mahant DIYAL DAS—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

versus

Mahant SUNDAR DAS—PLAINTIFF Musammat BHAGWAN DEVI AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 149, O. XLIV, r. 1—Leave to appeal as pauper—Application dismissed—Memorandum of appeal—Court-fee paid within time allowed—Limitation.

There is a distinction between applications to sue as a pauper, and applications to appeal as such. In the former the plaint is an integral portion of, the application; in the latter the memorandum of appeal is a separate document [p. 743, col. 1.]

Appellant applied for leave to appeal as pauper, and along with his application filed a memorandum of appeal as required by Order XLIV, rule 1 of the Civil Procedure Code. The application was made within the period of limitation allowed for an appeal. Eventually, long after limitation had expired, the application was dismissed and the Court made an order requiring the appellant to pay in Court-fees by a certain date, which was done. At the hearing it was objected that the appeal was barred by time:

Held, (1) that the dismissal of the application for leave to appeal as a pauper did not involve a dismissal of the appeal. [p. 742, col. 1.]

(2) that the order of the Court directing payment of Court-fees was made under section 149 of the Civil Procedure Code; [p. 742, col. 1.]

(3) that on payment of the Court-fees, the presentation of the memorandum of appeal was, under section 149 of the Code, validated as from the date of its original presentation and that, therefore, the appeal was within time. [p. 743, col. 1.]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Sialkot, dated the 15th April 1919, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, Second Class, Sialkot, dated the 15th June 1918.

Pandit Sheo Narain, R. S., for the Appellant.

Lala Mool Chand, R. S., for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—On the 9th July 1918 one Dial Das applied to the District Judge, Sialkot, for permission to appeal in forma pauperis against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, dated 15th June 1918. The application, as required by Order XLIV, rule 1, Civil Procedure Code, was accompanied by a memorandum of appeal.

After enquiry through a Munsif under rule 2 of the same Order, the District Judge on 5th December 1918 dismissed the application and recorded an order in the following terms: "Court-fee to be made up by the 16th December 1918."

The appellant paid the required Court-fee by due date and notice issued to the respondents who on coming into Court objected (1) that there was no appeal before the Court since the memorandum of appeal filed with the application could not survive after the dismissal of the application, and (2) that even if the Court had power to treat the appeal as still subsisting and to extend time under section 5 of the Limitation Act there was no sufficient reason for so doing.

The appellant replied that the District Judge's order for the payment of Court-fee was passed under section 149, Civil Procedure Code, and that the memorandum of appeal had been admitted by an order which was final.

The District Judge held on the consideration of certain authorities that, in spite of the pauper application having been dismissed, he could still treat the appeal as existing in the sense that he might extend time under section 5 of the Limitation Act, and also that, even if his order directing the Court-fee to be paid were tantamount to an order admitting the appeal, it was an order passed ex parte and could be re-considered on the appearance of the respondent. He recorded that he would not have passed his order regarding Court fee without further consideration had he realized that it was to have the effect of extending limitation. He discussed Bai Ful v. Desai Manorbhai Bhavanidas (1), and, while recognizing that it was a judgment delivered before the enactment of section 149 of the present Code of Civil Procedure, thought that it indicated that the memorandum of appeal presented with a pauper application could not be treated as a document contemplated under section 149, in which the only defect is the absence or insufficiency of stamp, but that it must be treated as a document which in itself is not an appeal unless and until a clear and definite order is passed extending time under section 5 of the Limitation Act. He proceeded to review the circumstances of the presentation and prosecution by the appellant of the application for leave to appeal as a pauper, found that it was neither presented in good faith nor prosecuted with due diligence and dismissed the appeal as barred by limitation.

Dial Das has appealed to this Court.

In our opinion the learned District Judge was mistaken in taking the view (as he apparently did) that the appeal was presented to him out of time and that there was a question whether time should be extended under section 5 of the Limitation Act. The appeal was presented when the application for pauperism was filed less than 0 days after the date of decree. The memorandum of appeal was unstamped, but Order XLIV, rule 1 expressly permitted it to be so. Had the application been accepted the appeal would have proceeded on that same memorandum. When the application was rejected, the appeal remained for ex parte disposal.

Counsel for the respondent has argued that Order XLIV says nothing about what is to be done when an application to appeal as a pauper has been dismissed, and has referred us to Order XXXIII which deals with pauper suits. He has asked us to draw an analogy from rule 15 of that

(1) 22 B. 849; 11 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 1150.

Order, and to hold that the dismissal of an application to appeal necessitates the presentation of a fresh memorandum of appeal. But there is a distinction between applications to sue as a pauper, and applications to appeal as such. In the former the plaint is an integral portion of the application; in the latter the memorandum of appeal is a separate document. We agree with the reasons given in Nellavadivu Ammal v. Subramania Pillai (2) for holding that the distinction was drawn deliberately by the Legislature. The limitation periods for suits go up to sixty years and a person who wishes to sue as a pauper is expected to put in his application in sufficient time to allow of a suit being filed within limitation, if and after his application to sue has been rejected. In most cases a would be appellant, who must file his appeal to the District Judge within 30 days could not secure a decision on his application within that period.

In the present case, then, the District Judge, having rejected the application to appeal as a pauper, had to pass an order on the appeal. The order which he passed that the Court-fee was to be made up within 11 days must be taken to be one under section 149, Civil Procedure Code, and, in view of the explicit terms of the sentence "upon such payment the document in respect of which such fee is payable shall have the same force and effect as if such fee had been paid in the first instance," the appeal was clearly validated from the date of original presentation by the payment of Court fee within the time allowed. We do not think that the respondent was entitled to challenge that validity, when he was subsequently summoned, on the ground of limitation. His Counsel's claim that he was so entitled is based upon Umed Ali v. Municipal Committee, Jhang-Maghiana (3) where, however, the facts were different. In that case the order of a Single Judge of this Court converting a revision into an appeal was passed long after the period for an appeal had expired, and, therefore, the appeal was out of time from the very start. Dalip Singh v. Umrao Singh (4), and Kesal Singh v. Shadi (5), are cited, but they also are not in point.

We hold that there was no presentation of the appeal after the expiry of limitation, that the order dismissing the application to appeal as a pauper did not affect the fact that the appeal had been preferred within the prescribed 30 days, and that the appellant having paid Court-fee in obedience to the Court's order of the 5th December was entitled to have his appeal heard. The case is similar to Nellavadivu Ammal v. Subramania Pillai (2), already quoted, which we have followed.

We, therefore, accept this appeal and set aside the order of the learned District Judge dismissing the appeal to his Court as barred by limitation. The case is remanded to his Court for decision of that appeal on the merits. The stamp on appeal to this Court will be refunded and costs will be costs in the cause.

Babu Dhirendra Lal Kastgir (with him Babu Nagendra Nath Bose), for the Appellant.—The plaintiff is the appellant. The appeal arises out of a suit for declaration of title and recovery of possession on the ground that defendant No. 11 and the other defendants have dispossessed him. The defence was that the plaintiff was the benamdar of the landlord. The Courts below have dismissed my suit. Having regard to the nature of the land the onus of proof is on both parties. On the admission of the contesting defendant I am entitled to a part of the land in dispute. There was a local enquiry by the Commissioner. His report was not considered. These two holdings are in a chur. The common landlord settled the land to the parties within 12 years. The question of limitation would not, therefore, arise at all. The only question is one of title. Refers to Lukhi Narain Jagadeb v. Jadu Nath Deo (1). The question is, where to lay the boundary line. The Courts simply find that the plaintiff has failed to prove possession I submit in chur lands where boundary line is not to be easily ascertained the parties must both of them prove their case. The defendant admits that there has been encroachment.

Babu Romesh Chandra Sen, for the Respondent:—The defendant has been in possession for a pretty long time. The defendant is entitled to rely on that possession. Refers to Manindra Chandra Nandi v. Sirabindu Ray (2). It is not compulsory on the Appellate Court to direct a fresh local investigation. So far as the admission is concerned, I submit it is not an admission but is merely a denial of the plaintiff's allegation of the existence of the ail.

Babu Dhirendra Lal Kastgir, replied in brief.

JUDGMENT.—The only question involved in the appeal is, what is the boundary line between the tenure of the plaintiff and that of the defendant. The tenures are situated side by side.

The Courts below have held that the plaintiff has failed to prove title and possession of the land.

On behalf of the appellant, reliance is placed on the case of Lukhi Narain Jagadeb v. Jadu Nath Deo (1) where it was held that "on questions of boundary, specially where the dividing line in dispute runs through waste lands which have not been the subject of definite possession, the rule as to the burden of proving the affirmative is not applicable. The litigants are in the position of counter-claimants and both parties are bound to do what they can to aid the Court in ascertaining the true line".

But the duty of both parties to aid the Court in ascertaining the true line is in cases where the dividing line in dispute runs through waste lands which have not been the subject of definite possession. In the present case, it was the case of both parties that the land was capable of possession and each party was in actual possession of the land comprised within his tenure. That being so, the principle does not apply to the present case. In this connection, we may refer to the case of Manindra Chandra Nandi v. Sirabindu Ray (2) where it was pointed out that, when the defendant in a suit for recovery of possession of land, even when the question is a question of boundaries, is clearly shown or found to have been in actual possession of the disputed area, the burden lies on the plaintiff to establish his title.

In the present case it is found that the defendant has been in possession all along up to the line found by the Court below and that has always been the dividing line between the two tenures. That being so, the contention has no force.

The learned Pleader for the appellant next relies upon certain statements made by defendant No. 11, the contesting defendant, and it is contended that the plaintiff is entitled to a portion of the land according to the admission of the defendant. There was, however, no admission of the title of the plaintiff, or of the boundary line. On the other hand, there was a clear denial. There was, however, a statement as to how many nals of land intervened between the plaintiff's and defendant's land. It was stated in the written statement that the distance between the lands was no less than 20 nals, and in the evidence it was stated to be about 20 or 25 nals. The learned Judge pointed out that it was a statement by guess and not made by actual measurement. In the circumstance, the learned Judge did not attach any weight to the statement.

(1) 21 C. 504; 21 I. A. 39; 6 Sar. P. C. J. 408; 10 Ind. Dec. (N. s.) 966 (P. C.).

(2) 45 Ind. Cas. 408; 27 C. L. J. 599; 23 C. W. N. 593.

We think the learned Judge was right and the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 105 (2), O. XLI, r. 23, O XLIII, r. 1 (u)—Remand, order of—Appeal not preferred—Order, whether can be questioned—Burden of proof—Question of law.

An order of remand which purports to be made under Order XLI, rule 23 of the Civil Procedure Code, if not appealed against, cannot be subsequently questioned, in an appeal from the decree passed after the remand [p. 743, col. 1.]

The question upon which party the onus of proving any particular point lies is a question of law. [p. 745, col. 1.]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Jhelum, dated the 15th January 1921, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, Second Class, Gujrat, dated the 21st June 1919.

Sheikh Niaz Muhammad for the Appellant.

Mr. M. Shah Nawaz, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a second appeal from the order of the District Judge of Jhelum dismissing the plaintiff's suit for a declaration to the effect that she is not the wife of the defendant and asking that the alleged marriage of defendant with plaintiff be cancelled. The Trial Court on the 30th July 1921, decreed the plaintiff's claim. It laid the onus of proving that there had been a valid nikah upon the defendant and found that he had not discharged it. There was an appeal in the Court of Sheikh Amir Ali, District Judge, who, after discussing the evidence on the record, came to the conclusion that, in the circumstances of the case, the onus probandi ought to have been laid on the plaintiff to prove that the entry in the marriage register of March 1911 was a false one. He accordingly accepted the appeal and, reversing the Trial Court's decree, remanded the case for re-trial.

The case having been re-tried the first Court again decreed the plaintiff's claim. Defendant again appealed and this time the appeal was heard by Mr. Malan, District Judge, who held that no such fraud or compulsion as alleged had been practised upon the plaintiff and stated that he had no doubt that the plaintiff was duly married to the defendant in 1911 as shown by the marriage register. He also said that some of the arguments urged on behalf of the plaintiff were not altogether devoid of force, but that it must be remembered that the plaintiff's success depended on her proving that the marriage entry of 1911 was made by fraud or compulsion. He, therefore, accepted the appeal and, setting aside the order of the first Court, dismissed the plaintiff's suit.

The plaintiff has filed a second appeal in this Court, and the main contention urged on her behalf is that Sheikh Amir Ali acted contrary to law in remanding the case and in laying the onus upon her. It is urged on behalf of the defendant-respondent that Sheikh Amir Ali's order of remand was one under Order XLI, rule 23, Civil Procedure Code, and was appealable under Order XLIII, rule 1 (u) of the Civil Procedure Code, and the plaintiff not having appealed from it was precluded now from disputing its correctness having regard to the provisions of section 105 (2) of the Civil Procedure Code. In answer to this appellant's Counsel contends that the order of remand was not one under Order XLI, rule 23 of the Code, because the Trial Court had not disposed of the case upon a preliminary point within the meaning of rule 23. He suggests that the remand must have been under section 151 of the Code; in other words, that the Court remanded the case in exercise of its inherent jurisdiction. Now, having regard to the wording of Sheikh Amir Ali's order, whereby he accepted the appeal and remanded the case to the Court of first instance for re trial, I have no doubt that he meant that the remand should be under Order XLI, rule 23, though he did not specifically say so in his order. There is no provision in the Code of Civil Procedure, other than in Order XLI, rule 23, which allows an Appellate Court to set aside the order of the lower Court and to remand a case thereto for re-trial. If it be conceded that the Trial Court did not dispose of the case on a preliminary point then it follows that Sheikh Amir Ali acted illegally in remanding the case. Now, under Order XLIII, rule 1 (u) an order under rule 23 of Order XLI, remanding the case is appealable where an appeal would lie from the decree of the Appellate Court. Now, there is no doubt, in my opinion, that if an Appellate Court decided an appeal upon an erroneous view of the onus a second appeal would lie from its decision as being contrary to law, for the question, upon which party the onus of proving any particular point lies, is undoubtedly a question of law, and it is, therefore, clear that Sheikh Amir Ali's order of remand was appealable under Order XLIII, rule 1 (u) of the Code. This being so, the plaintiff, not having appealed therefrom, is now precluded from disputing its correctness. In other words, it is not open to her in second appeal to urge that the onus was wrongly laid upon her. The lower Appellate Court, after considering all the evidence upon the record, has come to a clear finding that she has not discharged the onus and its finding appears to me to be one of fact and not open to second appeal. From Mr. Malan's judgment, moreover, I gather that, having considered the whole of the evidence upon the record, he was clearly of opinion that the plaintiff's marriage with defendant had been satisfactorily proved, and that she had failed to prove that any fraud or coercion was used to induce her to affix her thumb-mark upon the marriage register. Even had the onus been upon the defendant, it appears to me that he would have decided the point in his favour. The onus, however, was laid upon the plaintiff by the order of Sheikh Amir Ali and as that order was not objected to by an appeal lodged under Order XLIII, rule 1 (u), Mr. Malan was bound to proceed as if the onus was upon the plaintiff, and he found that that onus had not been discharged.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Rule against an order of the Court of the District Judge, Midnapur, in Miscellaneous Appeal No. 158 of 1920.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Amarendranath Bose, for the Petitioner.—This Rule was granted as an alternative to the connected Miscellaneous Appeal No. 42. It is directed against an order to set aside a sale held in execution of a money-decree on the 4th of November 1919 when the decree holder purchased the properties of the judgment-debtor. The decree-holder was the defendant in the suit which was dismissed with costs both by the Court of first instance as well as on appeal. The appellate decree was passed by this Court on 3rd March 19.9. On 27th May 1919 the defendant decree-holder applied for execution of the decree for costs. On 8th July 1919 the properties were attached. On 25th August 1919 the Court directed the issue of the sale proclamation and fixed 27th October 1919 for the sale. On that date we objected on the ground that no notice was served. That objection was dismissed for default on 4th November 1919. On that date the decree-holder was accorded permission to bid at the sale. There were no other bidders present and the decree-holder purchased three properties for Rs. 415. My contention was that no notice was served under Order XXI, rule 22 of the Code of Civil Procedure. On that ground, therefore, the sale would be void and the case would not be governed under Order XXI, rule 90 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It would come under section 47 of the Code. Refers to Fuleummanessa Bibee v. Halamaddi Molla (1). The lower Appellate Court has not quite appreciated my case. The sale was not fixed for the 4th November. The sale was originally fixed for 27th October 1919. On that date it was ordered to be put up on 1st November 1919. On that day again, as the Presiding Officer was on leave, the case was simply to be put up on the 4th November for order. Assuming that the sale was fixed for the 4th November it was more than seven days from the last date notified. The lower Appellate Court has wrongly applied Order XXI, rule 69 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Then they applied for substitution in the execution proceedings. The execution was for costs only. The decrees that are now being executed are of the first Court as well as of the High Court. The decree of the first Court was passed on 28th February 1910. I was the plaintiff. The suit was dismissed. The decree of the High Court was made on 3rd March 1919. The appeal was dismissed with costs. The first application for execution was on 27th May 1919 for costs. I submit there was no order for sale. It was simply ordered to be put up on 1st November 1919.

[MOOKERJEE, J.—Where is the order for issuing sale proclamation?]

There is no such order in the record. I rely on Order XXI, rule 69 (2) of the Code of Civil Procedure. The case in Rang Lal Singh v. Ravaneshwar Pershad Singh (2) has absolutely no application to the present case. Refers to High Court Rules and Circular Orders, Volume I, Chapter I, rules 94, 95 and 113; Jamini Mohan Nundy v. Chandra Kumar Roy (3), Pran Singh v. Janardan Singh (4) and Bhikari Misra v. Rani Surja Moni (5).

Babu Sarat Chandra Roy Chaudhury (with him, Babu Peary Mohan Chatterjee), for the Opposite Party.—My preliminary objection is that no second appeal lies, the application having been made under Order XXI, rule 90. In the application for setting aside sale or in the appeal there was no objection taken on the ground of notice. The Court below was, therefore, entitled to proceed on the grounds stated. The application for execution was within one year of the decree to which the appellant was a party. So far as the connected Rule is concerned, the question is whether the Judge is right in his interpretation of Order XXI, rule 69 on the Privy Council decision in Rang Lal Singh v. Ravaneshwar Pershad Singh (2). The objections now taken were never raised in the Courts below.

(1) 40 Ind. Cas. 426; 25 C. L. J. 399.

(2) 12 Ind. Cas. 174; 14 C. L. J. 334; 39 C. 26; (1911) 2 M. W. N. 108; 10 M. L. T. 161; 13 Bom. L. R. 823; 8 A. L. J. 1173; 16 C. W. N. 1; 38 I. A. 200 (P. C.).

[MOOKERJEE, J.—Was there an adjournment of the sale at all? Look at Order XXI, rule 66.]

It is on their application that the sale was put off. I submit though the order was not explicit and happily worded its effect was to put off sale till 1st November 1919. On that date the Presiding Officer was absent and both the matters were put off till 4th November. The Privy Council case in Rang Lal Singh v. Ravaneshwar Pershad Singh (2) covers the present point. In the sale proclamation it was stated that the sale will be held in course of the monthly sales commencing on 20th November 1919. I submit there having been no particular date fixed for the sale it took place in the usual course of the monthly sales by the Court.

Babu Amarendranath Bose, replied briefly.

JUDGMENT.—We are invited in this Rule to set aside a sale held in execution of a money decree on the 4th November 1919, when the properties of the judgment-debtor were purchased by the decree-holder for Rs. 415. The decree-holder was defendant in the suit instituted by the judgment-debtor which was dismissed with costs by the Court of first instance as also by this Court on appeal. The decree of this Court was made on the 3rd March 1919. On the 27th May 1919 the defendant applied for execution of the decree for costs. On the 8th July 1919 the properties of the judgment-debtor were attached. On the 25th August 1919 the Court directed a sale proclamation to be issued, fixing the 27th October 1919 for the sale. On that very date, an objection to the execution was lodged by the judgment-debtor. On the 27th October 1919 two orders were recorded. The first was in the following terms: "Put it up on the 1st October (1st November?) 1919 which is the day for miscellaneous cases." The second order was in the following terms: "The decree-holder has applied for permission to bid at the sale. Let it be filed with the record and put it up on that date for orders." On the 1st November we find the following order recorded on the order-sheet:—"Opposite party is ready. Petitioner does not appear to day The Presiding Officer on leave; case be put up on the 4th November for order." On the 4th November the following order was made: "Petitioner not present and so objection is dismissed for default. Put it up for sale. Permission is given to the decree-holder to bid at sale as prayed for by him." There were no bidders present and the properties were knocked down to the decree-holder for Rs. 415. There were three properties sold and the bids offered by the decree holder were equal to the sums mentioned in the sale proclamation as the value of the different lots.

There has been some controversy as to the meaning of the order recorded on the 27th October. We are of opinion that what was intended was that the properties should be put up for sale on the 1st November, which was the date fixed for miscellaneous cases. This may be treated as an order for adjournment of sale under Order XXI, rule 69 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The order of the 1st November, however, is not capable of such an interpretation. It was clearly an order in the miscellaneous case and apparently no order for adjournment of the sale was made in the execution case. Consequently, the true position is that, although the sale was advertised to take place on the 27th October and was adjourned till the 1st November, the sale did not take place on the adjourned day but was held on the 4th November, to which date the sale had never been adjourned. This was clearly a material irregularity, as is indicated by the decisions in Jamini Mohan Nandy v. Chandra Kumar Roy (3), Bhikari Misra v. Rani Surja Moni (5) and Paran Singh v. Janardan Singh (4). The true nature of a departure of this character from the provisions of the Code was considered by this Court in Basharutullah v. Uma Churn Dutt (6), which was recently approved by the Madras High Court in Jayarama Aiyar v. Vridhagiri Aiyar (7). According to the view taken in the two cases just mentioned, a sale held under such circumstances could not be deemed a sale under the Code at all. Whether such a view can be maintained in the face of the decisions of the Judicial Committee in Balkrishna v. Musuma Bibi (8), Tasadduk Rasul Khan v. Ahmad Husain (9) and Gobind Lal Roy v. Ramjanam Misser (10) may be a matter for argument. But for our present purpose, it is not necessary to adopt that extreme view, because we are clearly of opinion that there was a material irregularity in the conduct of the sale. Our attention has, however, been drawn to the case of Rang Lal Singh v. Ravaneshwar Pershad Singh (2) as an authority in support of the contrary view. In that case, the sale was directed to be held in the course of the monthly sales to commence on the 13th July. On that date the monthly sales did not commence, as the Presiding Officer was absent from the station from the 13th to the 16th July. The monthly sales began on the 17th July and, after an application for postponement had been refused, the property was sold on the 20th July, that is, within seven days from the 13th July, and consequently from the 17th July as well. In these circumstances, it was held that the sale was not an irregular sale. In the case before us, the sale was fixed for the 27th October 1919. It was not held till the 4th November 1919 though no order had been made for adjournment to that date. In fact, an adjournment to that date would have been an adjournment for a longer period than the seven days mentioned in rule 69 of Order XXI of the Code of Civil Procedure. On these facts, we are of opinion that the sale was unquestionably irregular. This alone, however, does not justify the reversal of the sale. It must be established that the judgment debtor has suffered a substantial injury by reason of the irregularity. The fact that no bidders were present except the decree-holder himself is significant. Yet that also does not show that the price paid by the decree holder is inadequate. No evidence was adduced in the Court of first instance upon the question of value and the Court proceeded apparently on the valuation made in the suit for the purpose of assessment of Court-fees on the plaint. That assessment is, no doubt, admissible in evidence between the parties. But it is not conclusive, specially if it be true that, as alleged, the property is subject to a charge which may reduce its market value.

(6) 16 C. 794; 8 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 527.
(7) 59 Ind. Cas. 167; 44 M. 35; 39 M. L. J. 183; 12 L. W. 182; (1920) M. W. N. 490.

DURGA v. RAM PADARATH.

In the circumstances, we are of opinion that the Rule should be made absolute. The order of the District Judge, as also that of the primary Court is set aside and the case is remitted to the Court, of first instance for an investigation as to the value of the properties sold upon such evidence as may be adduced by both the parties. If the Court comes to the conclusion that the judgment-debtor has suffered substantial injury by reason of the sale, the sale will be set aside. If, on the other hand, it is established that the properties have not been undersold, the sale will stand confirmed.

We make no order as to costs either here or in the Court below.

DURGA v. RAM PADARATH.

Where a person is entered as a tenant in the Revenue Records in respect of a plot of land, the mere fact that he has not paid any rent in respect of the plot cannot clothe him with any higher position than that which is given to him by those entries If liability for the payment of rent is fixed on such person by the entries, the non-enforcement of that liability on the part of the landlord and the non-compliance of the same obligation on the part of the tenant does not make the latter the owner of the plot in dispute. [p. 751, col. 2.]

Limitation does not continue to run against the rightful owner of land after an intruder has relinquished possession without acquiring title under the Act Possession so abandoned leaves the rightful owner in the same position in all respects as he was before the intrusion took place. Mr. S. N. Roy, for the Appellants.

Mr. Muhammad Wasim, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiffs-respondents for a declaration that plot No. 1182, measuring 1 bigha 8 biswas 13 biswansis, situate in village Bhanauli, Pargana Musafirkhana, District Sultanpur, was owned by them; that the defendants Nos. 1 to 10 had no right therein, and that no relationship of landlord and tenant existed between the plaintiffs and those defendants. The cause of action for the suit is founded on the allegations that the plaintiffs are and have been in adverse possession of the plot in question for a period extending over more than 12 years and in consequence thereof acquired title to that plot in virtue of the rule of prescription; that up to 1315 Fasli the plot in question was entered as bila tasfia in the village papers but that in 1316 Fasli the Patwari of the village in collusion with the defendants entered fictitiously an amount of rent in respect of the land in suit liable to be paid by the plaintiffs to the defendants; that the plaintiffs attempted in the Revenue Court to correct the entry so made by the Patwari but they failed in their efforts to secure the correction, hence the suit for the declaration, which has already been stated. The defence, so far as it is material for the purposes of this appeal, may be stated to consist in the plea of absence of adverse possession on the part of the plaintiffs. The Courts below have granted a decree to the plaintiffs in terms of the prayer made in the plaint. The contention in second appeal is that the plaintiffs have failed to establish their title to the plot in suit by virtue of prescription.

The facts of the case are very simple. In the old Settlement (18 4) the whole of this land is shown as maurua uftada appertaining to the shamilat land of the village (Exhibit 6). The ancestor of the plaintiffs does not appear to have had any connection with this land up to that year, i. e., 1864; but when we come to more recent times we find that at the revision of the Settlement of the district in the year 1891-1892 the entire area comprised in the plot was shown in the name of Ramanand who was admittedly the ancestor of the plaintiffs as a tenant bila lagan (Exhibit 7). Then there is again a long gap till we come to the year 1902 when we find the whole of the area entered in the name of Ramanand again as a tenant bila tasfia. No direct evidence of a reliable character appears to have been produced in the case, which would establish the state of things between the years 1891-1892 and 1902. At the best, the plaintiffs can ask for a presumption in the continuance of the entry as it stood in Exhibit 7. I am prepared to make that presumption in favour of the plaintiffs' possession. It follows, therefore, that from the year 1291 up to the year 1302 the plaintiffs were continuously recorded in the village papers as tenants bila tasfia in respect of the plot in question. But there is again a significant change in the entry relating to this plot from the year 1310 to 1315 Fasli, both inclusive, that is, for a continuous period of six years. That alteration is marked in the village papers by an entry to the effect that out of the total area of 1 bigha 9 biswas 13 biswansis, 19 biswas 13 biswansis was usar and the remaining area of 9 biswas was held as tenants bila tasfia by the respondents or their predecessors-in-interest.

The question in the case is, whether these facts establish adverse possession so as to give title to the plaintiffs by prescription. I am of opinion that they do not. In the absence of any evidence to the contrary, the entries in the revenue papers must be deemed to be correct. This is a proposition of law which has consistently been acted upon in this Court in relation to the evidential value of the revenue papers prepared under the Land Revenue Act. There can be no question, if I may say so, that the view so held by a series of eminent Judges of this Court is perfectly correct. It finds support from several sections of the Land Revenue Act itself and is consistent also with the provisions of the Indian Evidence Act relating to public documents. I may refer only to one of such cases, which have been decided by this Court, and that is the decision in Maharaja Jagatjit Singh Bahadur v. Suraj Bakhsh Singh (1). I must, therefore, hold that prima facie the plaintiffs are the defendants' tenants, that no actual amount of rent has been determined as payable for the land in question either by mutual agreement of the parties or by proceedings in Court under section 127 of the Oudh Rent Act and that there is no ground upon which a higher status than that of ordinary tenants can be conceded in favour of the plaintiffs. The entries referred to above not only establish the status of the plaintiffs as that of mere tenants but they prove their liability to pay rent on a determination of it in a lawful manner. Again, the mere fact that they have not paid any rent for the plot in question cannot clothe them with any higher position than that which is given to them by the entries to which reference has already been made. If the liability for the payment of the rent is fixed on these plaintiffs by these entries, as I have held that it has been, it must be further conceded that the non enforcement of that liability on the part of the defendants and the non compliance of the same obligation on the part of the plaintiffs does not make the latter owners of the plot in dispute. It is much to be regretted that neither of the Courts below, in spite of these documents being before them, have given them any attention which they certainly deserve on the question of adverse possession, which directly arose for decision by those Courts. The judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge throws no light on the question under consideration whatsoever. He says: "The learned Pleader for the appellant has argued that in khasras of certain years the land is recorded as usar and that the possession of the superior proprietor thereon should be presumed. The contention appears to me to be unsound. The defendants claimed that the plaintiffs were their tenants and paid rent therefor Surely they cannot say that the land is usar." In view of the facts evidenced by these documents, to which reference has already been made, it is difficult to understand the bearing of this remark. The plea raised by the defendants that the plaintiffs paid rent since 1316 Fasli has no connection whatsoever with the period for which the land or the bulk of it stands recorded as usar in the Revenue Records. As I understand the judgment of the Court below, the case of adverse possession is upheld on two grounds:—(1) That "the plaintiffs have never paid any rent and they have never admitted their liability to pay rent;" (2) That "the possession of the plaintiffs from its very nature is to be taken as adverse to the superior proprietor." What essential characteristics the learned Subordinate Judge means to include within the word "nature" he nowhere describes, but so far as one can determine the nature of possession as evidenced by a series of documents filed in this case its sole and only characteristic was that of possession by a tenant. As regards the non-payment of rent by the plaintiffs, I have already expressed my opinion that that fact cannot constitute an element if other elements are wanting to establish adverse possession in favour of the plaintiffs.

There is one more aspect of the case which must be considered. We have seen that, continuously, for a period of six years from 1310 to 1315 Fasli, 19 biswas 13 biswansis of the plot in question remained uncultivated and was recorded in the village papers as usar. Even if I hold that previous to the year 1310 Fasli it was in the actual possession of the plaintiffs or their predecessor-in-interest this long break extending over a period of six years in the possession of the plaintiffs clearly in the eyes of the law restored the original owner into the possession of that portion of the plot which remained unoccupied. This view of the law is supported by the decision of the Privy Council in Trustees, Executors and Agency Company Limited, and Templeton v. Short (2). The effect of the decision of Lord Macnaghten in this case is rightly summed up in the head note as follows :—

"The English Limitation Act (3 and 4 Will. 4, c. 27), adopted by New South Wales Act No. III of 1837, does not continue to run against the rightful owner of land after an intruder has relinquished possession without acquiring title under the Act. Possession so abandoned leaves the rightful owner in the same position in all respects as he was before the intrusion took place. The Act applies not to want of possession by the plaintiff, but to cases where he has been out of, and another in, possession for the prescribed time." That this is also the law in India may be gathered from the decision of the Privy Council in an Indian case Secretary of State for India v. Krishnamoni Gupta (3). Their Lordships clearly referred to the Privy Council decision already referred to in support of the conclusions at which they arrived in the case.

It is also well settled law that, as a general rule, possession of part is in law possession of the whole if the whole is otherwise vacant; but that constructive possession of this kind can only be presumed when there is a claim based upon title, and that possession by a trespasser is confined to the land actually occupied by him [Maheshwar Bakhsh Singh v. Hon'ble Raja Pratap Bahadur Singh (4).]

It follows from this that the only case of adverse possession worth considering arises with reference to 9 biswas of land comprised in the plot in question. It must be held on the evidence that the plaintiffs have been and are in actual possession of at least that portion of the area, but as I have held already their possession, as evidenced by the Revenue Records, is that of tenants of the defendants in respect of this area as well.

I, therefore, allow the appeal, set aside the decrees of the Courts below and dismiss the plaintiffs' suit with costs throughout.

BOMBAY HIGH COURT.

CRIMINAL APPLICATION FOR REVISION No. 211 OF 1921.

September 28, 1921.

EMPEROR—APPELLANT

BALKRISHNA GOVIND KULKARNI—RESPONDENT.

Contempt of Court—Newspaper charging Muffussil Court with partiality pending proceedings—Remark, whether amounts to contempt of High Court—Bombay High Court, jurisdiction of, to deal with contempts of inferior Courts.

Every contempt of an inferior Court will not necessarily constitute a contempt of the High Court. All such cases must be considered on their own facts. [p 758, col 2; p 766, col. 1.]

A newspaper in commenting upon a criminal trial pending against certain volunteers of a Temperance Committee in a Muffussil Court said, "..... there is a thick rumour that on the day on which the volunteers were arrested, the Trying Magistrate ran up the stairs of the Collector's Office and called on Mr. Painter and that some whisper took place between them. Again, Police Sahibs sit in chairs on the Magistrate's dais and wink at each other". The paper further alleged that when the Pleader for the accused observed that it was right that co-witnesses should be examined on the same day or else there was fear of the Police tutoring them, the Court adjourned the hearing one hour earlier than the hour of closing of the Court prescribed by law. The Local Government moved the High Court to take proceedings against the Editor for contempt. An objection as to jurisdiction was raised:

Held, (1) that the remarks constituted a contempt of the Court: [p 754, col. 1.]

(2) that the High Court had jurisdiction to deal with the matter for the remarks amounted to its own contempt, as they impeded the due administration of justice, for which the High Court was responsible not only as regards itself, but also as regards all the Courts which were inferior to it. [p 764, col. 2.]

Per Macleod, C. J. (Shah, J., contra*)*—The High Court of Bombay has the same powers of punishing for contempt as the Court of the King's Bench by virtue of the Common Law of England Therefore, it has jurisdiction to deal with contempts of inferior Courts. [p 764, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—This is a Rule granted at the instance of the Government of Bombay calling upon Balkrishna Govind Kulkarni, Editor and Publisher of the Shubhodaya newspaper, at Dharwar, to show cause why he should not be committed for contempt of Court in respect of the publication of an article commenting on the proceedings in the Court of the First Class Magistrate at Dharwar against two volunteers of the Temperance Committee who were alleged to have extorted some money from a Bhangi.

The article commences:—

"Proceedings have been instituted against two volunteers of the Temperance Committee for the alleged extortion of thirteen annas and the hearing commenced ten days back... The Police have appointed to conduct the case one of their Inspectors who merely does what he is asked to do by the Police and echoes them and earns his pay without any trouble. Every one in the town seems to be under the impression that the complainants voluntarily paid the fine and that the case owes its origin to the pressure of the liquor contractors who desire to make fortune by selling toddy. Moreover, there is a thick rumour that on the day on which the volunteers were arrested the Trying Magistrate ran up the stair case of the Collector's Office and called on Mr. Painter and that some whisper took place between them. Again, Police Sahibs sit in chairs on the Magistrate's dais and wink (at each other). The chief complainant is a Bhangi under the District Superintendent of Police who receives his pay from the Police Department."

There are further allegations that the District Police Superintendent was speaking in the middle when witnesses were being examined; that when the Pleader for the accused observed that it was right that co-witnesses should be examined on the same day or else there was fear of the Police tutoring, the Court adjourned the hearing one hour earlier than the hour of closing of the Court prescribed by law; that, although the evidence of the witnesses had been satisfactory, the accused were not enlarged on bail.

It can hardly be disputed that these remarks constitute a very gross contempt of Court.

In the first place, such comments, while proceedings are pending in a Court of law, tend to deprive the Court of the power of doing that which is the end for which it exists, to administer justice duly, impartially, and with reference solely to the facts brought before it. Secondly, any remarks reflecting on the character or impartiality of the Magistrate in the course of the trial must necessarily be contempt: Reg. v. Gray (1).

Now, the innuendo in the passages complained of is perfectly clear. The public are told that the general impression is that the accused are innocent; that, instead of extorting thirteen annas from the Bhangi, they received the amount as a voluntary contribution; that the liquor contractors and the Police are collaborating in the prosecution; that the Trying Magistrate is taking his orders from the Collector, and in his conduct of the trial is acting with great favouritism towards the Police and with gross partiality against the accused. It is not difficult to imagine what the result of such comments would be amongst the public in times of political excitement. They would be induced to think, if the accused were convicted, that they had been denied the essentials of a fair trial and that the Court, whose function it was to render justice to all who might appear before it, had been prostituted to procure the conviction of innocent men in order to gratify the avarice of the liquor contractors.

The respondent says in his affidavit by way of explanation:—

"In publishing the article complained of I had no desire or intention in any way to interfere with or obstruct the due course of administration of justice or in any way to prejudice the fair trial of the case. I wrote the article in the discharge of what I believe to be my duty as a journalist, believing in good faith that I was entitled to do so having regard to the fact that the case was regarded on all hands to be one of public interest and importance. I may add that I have all along believed that it is open to a journalist in the discharge of his duties to offer fair and legitimate comments on all matters affecting the public interest, and that in the publication of the article in question I was actuated by no other motive or desire whatever than that of doing my duty to the public as a journalist by offering fair comments on matters of urgent public interest...If this Hon'ble Court is, however, of opinion that even the mere publication of comments on proceedings pending in the Court of a subordinate Magistrate amounts in law to a contempt of Court of which this Hon'ble Court will be entitled to take notice, I am willing to abide by this Hon'ble Court's ruling on the point and to express my sincere regret for having published the article in ignorance of the law governing the publication of such comments."

The respondent is a Pleader of mature age and his affectation of ignorance of the law with regard to a journalist's right to comment on pending judicial proceedings can be accepted at its true value.

With regard to his allegations against the Magistrate the respondent says:—

"I fully believed in the truth of the statement when I published the same, on the strength of a thick rumour which I had myself heard and which was confirmed by information of a definite nature personally conveyed to me by a gentleman in Government service in whom I confided and whom I had no reason to disbelieve. Being, however, a Government servant the gentleman is not now prepared to back me up by his affidavit and it would on my part also involve a breach of journalistic etiquette to disclose his name... Now that I find that the fact alluded to by me is denied on oath by the learned Magistrate and that the matter is not within my personal knowledge, I feel it to be the more honourable course for me to withdraw the same and also to express my sincere regret for having published the same."

The question for decision is, whether the High Court of Bombay has jurisdiction to deal with a person who has been guilty of contempt of a Court in the Mofussil subordinate to the High Court. In Mohandas Karamchand Gandhi, In re (2) the respondents were charged with contempt of the High Court for publishing a certain letter which formed part of the record of proceedings then pending in the High Court; but incidentally some of the comments complained of reflected on the District Judge of Ahmedabad and it appears to have been accepted by the learned Judges that the High Court could have jurisdiction to deal with contempts of the Mofussil Courts. However, the question was not seriously argued, no Indian cases were cited, and that expression of opinion cannot be considered as binding upon us. It is sufficient to say that, at that time, it did not occur to the learned Judges that such jurisdiction might be disputed.

Marten, C. J., said (page 375*):—

"It makes no difference, I think, that the alleged abuse here was of a District and not of a High Court Judge. Rex v. Davies (3) shows that in England the High Court has power to protect the Courts of inferior jurisdiction and that in a proper case it should do so. I think the same power exists in India, and that, subject to the precautions which Lord Russell mentions...[Reg. v. Gray (1)], this Court should extend its protection to all Courts in the Mofussil, over which it exercises supervision."

Hayward, J., said (page 381*):—

"A contempt of Court of a more serious nature was, in my opinion, committed in commenting in the particular manner on that letter. It amounted clearly to 'scandalising' Mr. Kennedy as District Judge...It was Mr. Kennedy's duty...to report the matter in question as District Judge for the orders of High Court...It has...become our duty to protect the proceedings of the District Judge under the powers shown by the precedents of Rex v. Parke (4) and Rex v. Davies (3) to be vested in us as Judges of the High Court."

See also Hassonbhoy v. Dowasji Jehangir Jassawalla (5), where West, J., in dealing with the powers of the High Court to commit for contempt, said at page 4,—

"Such a power indeed must exist somewhere in order to secure the administration of the law, and it can be safely restricted in the case of the lower Courts only because it is held and exercised by those to which they are subordinate."

The first direct Indian authority on the question is Venkat Row, In re (6). An injunction order was passed by the District Munsif of Bellary against Venkatrao, a Pleader, in a pending suit. While proceedings were pending against him for disobedience to the injunction order, the Munsif was served with notice of suit for damages in respect of the injunction proceedings. It was alleged in the notice that the Munsif had acted maliciously and without reasonable cause and in furtherance of the ill-will he bore the respondent. At the hearing of the motion for contempt, made at the instance of the Advocate-General, Counsel for the respondent tendered an apology and said he was not going to argue the question of jurisdiction. However, he was allowed to argue the question as amicus curiæ. The Chief Justice, in giving judgment, said (page 838*):—

"It seems to me that there are two questions for us to consider: First, have we inherent Common Law jurisdiction in the matter? And, secondly, have we statutory jurisdiction under the powers conferred on this Court by section 15 of the High Courts Act."

EMPEROR v. BALKRISHNA GOVIND KULKARNI.

What was the Common Law of England with regard to the powers of the King's Bench Division of the High Court in England with reference to contempt committed of inferior Courts, has been decided in Rex v. Parke (4), and Rex v. Davies (3), and the latter decision makes it clear that the King's Bench has jurisdiction to commit for contempt of an inferior Court, even if the inferior Court was dealing with a case which would not be taken to a Tribunal which was a branch of the High Court. After discussing these cases and the argument that there might be a distinction between cases of contempt of an inferior Civil Court and contempt of an inferior Criminal Court, the Chief Justice came to the conclusion that, as the Privy Council had decided that the High Court had the inherent Common Law powers in connection with matters of contempt which were exercised by the old Court of King's Bench and now by the King's Bench Division, and as the King's Bench Division had powers to commit for contempt of an inferior Court, the High Court had the same jurisdiction. But the Chief Justice was not prepared to hold that jurisdiction was given by section 15 of the Indian High Courts Act which gave powers of superintendence with regard to subordinate Courts.

In Rex v. Parke (4) a person having been charged before the Petty Sessions with an indictable offence triable only at the assizes, matter was published in a newspaper tending to interfere with the fair trial of the charge. It was held that the High Court had jurisdiction to attach the publisher for contempt notwithstanding that, at the time of publication, the person charged had not been committed for trial. It was argued that there was no jurisdiction because at the time of publication of the articles complained of there were no proceedings actually pending in any Court but the Petty Sessional Court that the jurisdiction was confined to cases in which at the time of publication there was some cause actually pending in the High Court, and that the High Court could not deal by way of attachment for contempt with interferences with the due course of justice in any Court other than itself. On this Wills, J., said (page 436*),—

"It may be conceded that the jurisdiction to commit for contempt of Court is confined to contempt of the Court exercising the jurisdiction. Upon the wider and more general question, whether this Court will treat in this fashion inroads upon the independence of inferior Courts, we propose to say a few words towards the close of this judgment. As far as the present case is concerned, it does not seem to us to arise. By the Judicature Act...the Court of a Commissioner of Assize is made a branch of the High Court. The crime of which Dougal was accused...could not in the regular course of things be tried anywhere but at the Assizes...It has been argued,....that publication of articles of the kind in question cannot be treated as a contempt of the Assize Court unless the committal has actually taken place and a bill been found, when only, it is urged, is there a case pending in the Assize Court, and when, it is also urged, the jurisdiction ought to be exercised by that Court itself. A moment's consideration...is sufficent to dispose of such a proposition...The wrong can hardly be the less because the purpose or the tendency of the act complained of is that the Assize Court never shall have undisturbed power to fulfil its functions satisfactorily. The High Court exists always. To provide beforehand that one of its branches which although it does not at the moment exist, yet must, both according to immemorial custom, and now also by Statutes and rules having the same effect, come into existence, shall be hampered and hindered in the effectual discharge of its duties as soon as it is constituted, if called upon to try a particular case which it is, at all events, proposed to bring into that Court, is surely an offence against the High Court itself."

Then, after discussing the precedents, the learned Judge proceeded at page 442 *,—

"For what they are worth, they tell rather against than for the general jurisdiction of this Court to protect inferior Courts from attacks of this kind on their independence and usefulness. On the other hand, very serious and important considerations tend the other way. Many inferior Tribunals are not Courts of Record, and, therefore, have no means of checking practices of the kind with which we are dealing ...This Court exercises a vigilant watch over the proceedings of inferior Courts, and successfully prevents them from usurping powers which they do not possess, or otherwise acting contrary to law. It would seem almost a natural corollary that it should possess correlative powers of guarding them against unlawful attacks and interferences with their independence on the part of others...But we purposely abstain from pronouncing any opinion upon this general question and prefer to leave it entirely open when the occasion shall arise, and at the present moment confine ourselves to saying, with Wright, J., that we should hesitate long before casting any more doubt than may already exist upon the capacity of this Court to deal by proceedings for contempt with cases in which attempts are made to pollute the stream of justice, and to interfere with its proper and unfettered administration by Courts which possess no adequate means of protecting themselves."

* Pages of (1903) 2 K. B.—[Ed.]

The occasion arose in Rex v. Davies (3) where remarks had been published in a newspaper tending to interfere with the fair trial of a person charged at the Petty Sessions with an indictable offence triable either at the Assizes or at Quarter Sessions. The Court held that the decision in Rex v. Parke (4) was applicable. But as a further question of great and growing importance, namely, the jurisdiction of the High Court to treat attacks of that kind upon the independence and usefulness of inferior Courts, as offences to be dealt with brevi manu by the High Court in its summary jurisdiction, it was considered desirable to treat the case as if a committal had actually taken place to Quarter Sessions which was not a branch of the High Court. Wills, J., first referred to passages in Lord Coke's Institutes and Hawkins' Pleas of the Crown to show the very great trust reposed in the Court of King's Bench in respect of its control and superintendence of all inferior Courts and that it was in a special manner the guardian and protector of public justice throughout the kingdom. The same may be said of this High Court with regard to the Presidency or per of Bombay. Then the learned Judge asked what was the principle which was the root of and underlay the cases in which persons had been punished for attack upon Courts and interferences with the due execution of their orders. He said at page 40*,—

"It will be found to be, not the purpose of protecting either the Court as a whole or the individual Judges of the Court from a repetition of them, but of protecting the public, and especially those who, either voluntarily or by compulsion, are subject to its jurisdiction, from the mischief they will incur if the authority of the Tribunal be undermined or impaired; see the judgment prepared by Wilmot, C. J. in Rex v. Almon (7) but not delivered because the case was allowed to drop: Wilmot's Opinions, page 256. The word 'authority' is used by him to express 'the deference and respect which is paid' to the Judges of a Court and their acts 'from an opinion of their justice and integrity.' These words are apt with respect to the particular case with which he was dealing. But what possible difference in principle can there be in respect of direct attacks upon Courts or Judges, and of writings, the tendency of which is to deprive the inferior Courts beforehand of the possibility of doing evenhanded and impartial justice according to the due course of law? To hold that there was a distinction would give colour to the notion which cannot be too strongly repudiated, that the offended dignity of a particular Court, or of the persons who compose it, is the subject of punishment in such a case. 'The object of the discipline enforced by the Court in cases of contempt of Court,' says Bowen, L. J., 'is not to vindicate the dignity of the Court or the person of the Judge, but to prevent undue interference with the administration of justice': Helmore v. Smith (8) and a considerable part of the undelivered judgment of Wilmot, C. J., to which we have referred is devoted to showing that the real offence is the wrong done to the public by weakening the authority and influence of a Tribunal which exists for their good alone,... 'Attacks upon the Judges,' he says, 'excite in the minds of the people a general dissatisfaction with all judicial determinations...and whenever men's allegiance to the laws is so fundamentally shaken, it is the most fatal and dangerous obstruction of justice, and in my opinion calls out for a more rapid and immediate redress than any other obstruction whatsoever, not for the sake of the Judges as private individuals, but because they are the channels by which the King's justice is conveyed to the people. To be impartial and to be universally thought so are both absolutely necessary for the giving justice that free, open, and unimpaired current which it has for many ages found all over this Kingdom:' Wilmot's Opinions, pages 255, 256. With a few verbal alterations those eloquent words will apply with at least equal force to writings the direct tendency of which is to prevent a fair and impartial trial, or at least one that can be so considered, from being had in Courts of inferior jurisdiction which have not the power of protecting themselves from such encroachments upon their independence. The public mischief is identical, and in each instance the undoubted possible recourse to indictment or criminal information is too dilatory and too inconvenient to afford any satisfactory remedy."

At page 42* the learned Judge refers to the great principle, that Courts or the administration of justice exist for the benefit of the people, that for the benefit of the people their independence must be protectsd from unauthorised interference, and that the law provides effective means by which this end can be secured :

"If it is to be secured at all in the case of the inferior Courts it can only be secured by the action of this Court, for they have not the power to protect themselves; and if it be true that the King's Bench is in any sense the custos morum of the kingdom it must be its function to apply, with the necessary adaptations to the altered circumstances of the present day, the same great principles which it has always upheld."

The learned Judge then points out the essential difference between the jurisdiction exercised by the Court of King's Bench and that of the other Courts which possessed none of the relations with the inferior Courts which have always appertained to the King's Bench, 'whose peculiar function it was to exercise superintendence over the inferior Courts and confine them to their proper duties', and continues (page 43*),—

"This, however, as it seems to us, was only one exercise of the duty of seeing that they did impartial justice, and if and when the attainment of that end required that the misdeeds of others should be corrected as well as the misfeasances of the inferior Courts themselves, it seems to us that it is no departure from principle, but only its legitimate application to a new state of things, if others whose conduct tends to prevent the due performance of their duties by those Courts have to be corrected as well as the Courts themselves."

Then, after discussing the authorities, the learned Judge says (page 47* :

"It appears to us that the state of the authorities, such as they are, is such as to leave the question, as was pointed out in Rex v. Parke (4), entirely open for our decision. Our attention has been called to observations of Sir George Jessel, M. R., in Clements, In re, (9) as to the necessity of caution in dealing with a matter where the liberty of the subject is concerned. Such considerations have been fully present to our minds, and certainly needed no authority to enforce them. It is because we think that we are creating no new jurisdiction, but acting strictly in conformity with the cardinal principles upon which the jurisdiction to commit for conduct tending to improperly interfere with the administration of justice rests, that we have come to the conclusion at which we have arrived. To confine the application of such principles to facts identical with or closely resembling those of preceding cases, and to hold that, because in times long gone by, the chief, if not the only, danger to be guarded against was the illegal exercise of arbitrary power by inferior Courts and their officers, therefore, the power of this Court extends no further, and that the King's Bench cannot afford them protection as well as administer correction, would, we think, be to mistake the application of the principle for the principle itself. The mischief to be stopped is in the case of the inferior Courts identical with that which exists when the due administration of justice in the superior Courts is improperly interfered with. The reason why the Court of King's Bench did not concern itself with contempts of the other superior Courts was that they possessed ample means and occasions for protecting themselves. Inferior Courts have not such powers, although some of them, Quarter Sessions, for example, try many more cases than are tried at Assizes, and have a very extended and important jurisdiction. The danger is perhaps greater to them than it is to the superior Courts of having their efficiency impaired by publications such as those which have given rise to the present proceedings. Thinking as we do that the application now before us asks for nothing more than the legitimate application to new circumstances of the old principles of the Common Law, we have come to the conclusion that we ought to grant the remedy invoked, and it remains only to consider the penalty that ought to be inflicted."

Davies was fined £ 100 and costs.

I need make no excuse for siting at so great a length from this judgment, as otherwise it would not have been possible to realise the foundations on which it rested. The administration of justice is for the benefit of the people, therefore, any unauthorised interference with the administration of justice is against the interests of the people. The inferior Courts cannot protect themselves against such interference, but as it is the duty of the King's Bench in exercise of its powers of superintendence to see that the inferior Courts do impartial justice and, if necessary, correct their misfeasance so it is also the duty of the King's Bench to correct the misdeeds of others which tend to prevent the due performance of their duties by the inferior Courts. And the key of the whole argument will be found when the learned Judge points out that, whether the administration of justice by the inferior Courts or by the superior Courts is interfered with, the mischief is identical,

It seems to me, moreover, that every word in that judgment is applicable to the case before us. This High Court possesses the same powers of punishing for contempt as the Court of King's Bench by virtue of the Common Law of England. It has powers of superintendence over all the Courts, Civil and Criminal, in the Presidency proper and it may be noted that in this case an application has already been made to this Court to exercise its revisional powers on behalf of the accused, and by virtue of its Charter it can withdraw to itself any case, civil or criminal, pending in any of the Courts subordinate to it. It is responsible for the administration of justice not only by itself but also by all the inferior Courts, and as it is its duty to see that those Courts do not exceed their powers, I should have thought it must also be its duty to see that there is no improper interference by others which may prevent those Courts from properly exercising their powers, and, therefore, if the duty lies at Common Law, the power to enforce its orders must also exist at Common Law.

However, the contrary view has been expressed by the High Court of Bengal in Governor of Bengal (Legal Remembrancer) v. Moti Lal Ghose (10) and it will be necessary to consider the judgments, which cover over sixty printed pages, at some length. The facts were that while proceedings in what was known as the Barisal Conspiracy Case were going on in the Court of the Additional District Magistrate at Barisal various articles appeared in the Amrita Bazar Patrika, a paper published in Calcutta, containing comments on the proceedings. It was contended that the publication of these articles tended to interfere with the due course and administration of justice, Jenkins, C. J., said,—

"Have we...jurisdiction to commit for contempt of an inferior Criminal Court? The question is one of considerable difficulty and cannot, as seemed to be supposed, be solved or even understood by a mere perusal of the decision in Surendra Nath Banerjee v. Chief Justice and Judges of the High Court (11) and Rex v. Davies (3). To determine the High Court's jurisdiction in this matter involves an enquiry into its constitution and the jurisdiction, power and authority it has inherited, or may otherwise possess."

EMPEROR v. BALKRISHNA GOVIND KULKARNI.

The High Court inherited all jurisdictions and every power and authority in any manner vested in the Supreme Court, the Sudder Diwani Adawlat and the Sudder Nizamut Adawlat. The Supreme Court established by Charter in 1774 was thereby constituted a Court of Record, but it had no general control or power over the Mofussil Criminal Courts. The Sudder Diwani Adawlut, whose jurisdiction was civil was, under 21 Geo. III, C. 70, section 21, constituted a Court of Record. The Sudder Nizamut Adawlut did not appear to have been even constituted a Court of Record and, therefore, it had no power to commit for contempt of an inferior Court which could only punish under Act XXX of 1841 contempts committed in the face of the Court. The Chief Justice then, after concluding that the High Court could not have inherited the jurisdiction from either of these abolished Courts, considered whether the jurisdiction could have become vested in it by the Charter Act 1861, or the Letters Patent under that Act and whether the decision in Rex v Davies (3) was applicable. Analysing the judgment in that case, the Chief Justice points out that the jurisdiction assumed was inherited from the old King's Bench and was of a special character as it rested on that Court's power to punish every kind of misdemeanour as the guardian and protector of public justice throughout the kingdom, the 'custos morum' a dignity that reverted to it or was revived after the abolition of the Star Chamber. The helplessness of the inferior Court and its subjection to the superintendence and control of the King's Bench were not the foundations of the jurisdiction but merely the occasion and the reason for its exercise. The Court considered that the proceedings before it were the legitimate application to new circumstances of the old principle of the Comman Law, and as according to those principles the King's Bench as custos morum had jurisdiction to punish on a summary proceeding as well as on indictment or information all offenses in the kingdom being a contempt of Court as tending to interfere with the administration of justice, when the Court embarrassed was under the superintendence of the King's Bench and unable to protect itself. Common Law principles should be applied on a summary proceeding. Had the High Court Common Law powers to punish as an offence on a summary proceeding conduct in relation to a proceeding in a Mofussil Court which was not an offence under the Indian Penal Code, and which could only be considered as a contempt of the Mofussil Court? As superintendence did not give jurisdiction and the King's Bench powers to punish for interference with the lower Courts did not arise from its being a Court of Record but from its Common Law powers as custos morum, which the High Court did not possess, it followed that the High Court had not the jurisdiction which was sought for it. The learned Chief Justice refrained from commenting on the decision in Venkat Row's case (6) on the ground that to appreciate the ratio decidendi it would be necessary to possess an intimate acquaintance with the nature and limits of the jurisdiction of the High Court of Madras inherited from its predecessor or vested in it by its Charter. He had none of the materials necessary for that purpose nor could he tell how for the Common Law prevailed in the Madras Presidency outside the Presidency town. But, with all due respect, the ratio decidendi in Venkat Row's case (6) is perfectly clear for the Chief Justice of Madras did not go beyond the decision of the Privy Council in Surendra Nath Banerjee v. Chief Justice and Judges of the High Court (11) to the effect that the High Courts in the presidencies were superior Courts of Record and their power of punishing for contempt was the same as in England by virtue of the Common Law of England. Then, as the King's Bench had the power to punish for contempt of Court involved in the interference with the administration of justice by an inferior Court it was inferred that the High Court of Madras had the same power. If there was jurisdiction in the High Court to deal with contempt of an inferior Court it did not much matter if the jurisdiction was exercised on the ground that the contempt of the inferior Court amounted to a contempt of the Court exercising jurisdiction. The cause of the difference of opinion between the Chief Justices of Bengal and Madras is obvious. The argument of Jenkins, C. J., is as follows:—The King's Bench had jurisdiction to punish on a summary proceedings all contempts of Court, by virtue of its position as custos morum, not because it was a Court of Record. The other superior Courts were Courts of Record but had no power to punish for contempts which did not tend to interfere with the administration of justice by such Courts. The High Court of Bengal was in no better position than the English Superior Courts other than the King's Bench and, therefore, had no jurisdiction to punish for contempts of other Courts. White, C. J., on the other hand, argued, the High Court Madras is a Court of Record, it has also powers of superintendence over the inferior Courts as the King's Bench has, and, consequently, the High Court has jurisdiction to punish contempts which tend to interfere with the administration of justice whether by the inferior Court or by the High Court itself. He did not think the High Court had jurisdiction under section 15 of the Indian High Court Act. That may be so, but I do not think that the learned Chief Justice can be taken as holding that if the High Court of Madras was only a Court of Record with no powers of superintendence over the Mofussil Courts, it would have had jurisdiction to punish contempts which were directed in the first instance against the Mofussil Courts. For he especially refers to the passage in Rex v. Parke (4) to the effect that the power of guarding the inferior Courts against unlawful attacks was the natural corollary of the power of superintendence. Again, in the Barisal case, the contempt alleged was treated in the first instance as a contempt of the Barisal Court, and not of the High Court. White, C. J., considered that a matter of academical interest, but it is much more than that, when a question of logical accuracy is involved. For in Rex v. Parke (4) Wills, J., conceded that the jurisdiction to commit for contempt was confined to contempt of the Court exercising jurisdiction and there is nothing in the judgment in Rex v. Davies (3) delivered by the same learned Judge which would lead one to think that what had been conceded in Rex v. Parke (4) was withdrawn in Rex v. Davies (3) Jenkins, C. J., no doubt did consider the question whether the High Court could deal with the contempt alleged on the ground that the case might come before it either for original or appellate trial at one stage or another but declined to express any opinion on the point on the ground that it had not been discussed in the argument. And, after discussing the articles complained of, the Chief Justice says (page 220*),—

"The conclusion then to which I come is, that though we may have jurisdiction to commit for contempt of the High Court in a case of this class, still in the present case no contempt justifying summary action on our part has been established."

Stephen, J., after discussing Rex v. Parke (4) and Rex v. Davies (3), came to the conclusion that the latter decision depended on general powers possessed by the King's Bench to secure proper administration of justice to His Majesty's subjects which the learned Judge could not find to have been conferred upon the High Court, so that it was impossible to hold that their powers of superintendence implied any power of protection. But the learned Judge discussing what might happen if the case came before the High Court on appeal continued (page 230*),—

"As a matter of principle, it seems to me undeniable that we have a right to treat as a contempt any act committed within the local limits of our original jurisdiction that may affect its trial on appeal, and in particular any act that may tend either to taint or impair that evidence or to cause evidence that would otherwise be forthcoming to be withheld."

However, on a review of the articles complained of, the learned Judge considered that there was no contempt, however widely the law of contempt might be stated. The decision of the Madras High Court was not discussed, Mookerjee, J., considered that there was no foundation laid by the Crown for the theory that the High Court as a Court of Record had authority to punish for contempt of the Court of the Magistrate of Barisal merely because the High Court was a Court of Record which exercised powers of superintendence over that Court or because that Court was subject to its appellate and revisional jurisdiction. The hypothesis that a superior Court which exercised a power of superintendence over a subordinate Court possessed by implication a power to afford to such Court's protection against contempts of its authority, was no doubt attractive but had no solid foundation in the history of the constitution of their Courts. In dealing with Venkat Row's case (6) the learned Judge said (page 248*):—

"The proposition that the High Court, in so far as it has inherited the jurisdiction of the abolished Supreme Court, possesses inherent Common Law powers in connection with matters of contempt which were exercised by the Court of King's Bench, is of no assistance in the solution of the problem now before us, namely, whether the High Court as a Court of Record can punish for contempt of a subordinate Court over which it exercises powers of superintendence and which is subject to its appellate and revisional jurisdiction. The fundamental distinctions between the two questions is easily realised from an examination of the decision in Rex v. Davies (3) upon which the Advocate-General relies as the learned Judges of the Madras High Court did in Venkat Row, In re (6)"

The conclusion in Rex v. Davies (3) was not based on the ground that the King's Bench Division possessed the powers merely because it was a Court of Record or because it exercised powers of surperintendence over inferior Courts, but was founded on a historical consideration of the supreme place in the judicature assigned to the Court of King's Bench which had power to correct errors and misdemeanours extra-judicial tending to the breach of the peace or oppression of the subjects or any other manner of mis-government, and was in a special manner the guardian and protector of public justice throughout the Kingdom. The learned Judge thought it was obvious that those considerations of a very special character had no application to the High Court of Bengal and if they were to apply the principle which lay at the foundation of the decision in Rex v. Davies (3) they would have to hold that the Common Law of England was applicable throughout the jurisdiction of the Court even to persons other than British subjects beyond what was the territorial limits of the ordinary jurisdiction of the abolished Supreme Court. On a review of the article complained of the learned Judge thought that they did not constitute a contempt of Court of the Magistrate of Barisal much less of the High Court. The fact that none of the learned Judges considered that the articles complained of constituted a contempt had no doubt some influence on their judgments and the Chief Justice certainly refrained from holding that in no case of that class could a contempt of the High Court be committed. Although the question of the jurisdiction of the King's Bench was not decided until 1906, the effect of the decision in Rex v. Davies (3) was that, according to the Common Law of England, the King's Bench always had jurisdiction to deal with contempts of inferior Courts which by tending to interfere with the due administration of justice constituted contempts of the King's Bench. It would follow that the Supreme Court by its Charter had the same jurisdiction to the extent of its territorial limits. If those limits had been extended to the Presidency proper, its jurisdiction in matters of contempt would have extended in the same way, and because the Supreme Court was abolished and the territorial limits of the High Court which took its place were extended by the same measure which brought it into existence, there is no reason why its jurisdiction in matters of contempt should be restricted to the territorial limits of the old Supreme Court. Of course, by territorial limits I mean the limits within which the High Court exercises appellate and revisional powers and powers of superintendence. It is true that the powers of the High Courts to correct errors and misdemeanours are defined and limited by Statute, but the power to punish for contempt remains as given to it by the Common Law. I entirely agree with Mookerjee, J., when he says at page 260*,—

"The power...must be exercised with caution and only when the case is clear beyond controversy, because, as Sir George Jessel observed in Plating Co. v. Farquharson (12), it is an arbitrary jurisdiction. There is no limit to the amount of the fine which may be inflicted or to the length of the term of imprisonment which may be directed; there is no appeal as a matter of right against an order of attachment...It is the only criminal offense summarily punishable. The Court will consequently not make an order for attachment, unless it is satisfied beyond dispute that the order is needed peremptorily in the interests of the administration of justice."

The learned Judge refers to what historians have recorded as the policy of the Emperor Augustus as in dealing with such matters; but I think that in deciding whether or not to take notice of contempts the consideration which might have influenced a Roman Emperor in exercising lenieney or passing them by unnoticed would have to be revalued by the Courts according to modern circumstances. We are not concerned with the fact that there are other Courts of highest jurisdiction in India which do not possess the Common Law powers of the King's Bench. We are only concerned to see that what jurisdiction the High Court possesses, so as to preserve the administration of justice pure and unobstructed for the benefit of the people of the Presidency proper, should be exercised as occasion demands with all due care and deliberation. We must exercise the high functions entrusted to us according to due course of law, and I venture to think there is evidence, in the words of Mr. Justice Wills, to show the very great trust reposed in this Court in respect of its control and superintendence of all inferior Courts subordinate to it, and that it is in a special manner the guardian and protector of public justice. It is by writings such as the one complained of in this case that the public mind is poisoned and their belief in the impartiality and incorruptibility of the Courts is sought to be destroyed, and we cannot fulfil that trust if the administration of justice can be interfered with without any power on our part to prevent it.

However desirable it might be that it should have that power, however attractive the hypothesis that the power of superintendense carries with it the power of protection, the High Court of Bengal can find no foundation in the history of its constitution for holding that it has that power The High Court of Madras, without considering its own history, has boldly linked to a dictum of the Privy Council a modern decision which has discovered for the King's Bench its inherent powers to punish all attempts to interfere with the administration of justice.

I see nothing in the history of the constitution of this Court which should deter me from holding that we have the same powers of punishing for contempt as the King's Bench Division. The Supreme Court had the power but its jurisdiction in this respect was limited not by its constitution but by its geographical limits consequent on its being established by the Crown within the territories of the East India Company, for certain purposes, which left the jurisdiction and powers of the Company's Courts free from all constraint or superintendence by the Supreme Court. The jurisdiction of the Supreme Court to punish for contempt in cases of this class thus lying dormant of necessity was inherited by the High Court and, although by virtue of its extended authority, occasions might have arisen for its exercise, nearly sixty years have passed before even the question of its jurisdiction has come up for decision.

It is not every contempt of an inferior Court which will necessarily constitute a contempt of this Court. That is a question which must be decided in each case as it arises. Viewed in this light, the question is not so much one of jurisdiction as one of fact, and I have sufficiently stated above the principles which I think should guide the Court in deciding the question of fact. For myself, I have no hesitation in holding that, according to those principles, in this case a contempt of this Court has been committed but I recognise that, owing to the conflict of authorities on the question at issue, the respondent may have thought that in publishing the article complained of he was in no danger of rendering himself liable to be attached in exercise of our summary powers.

SHAH, J.—This is a Rule issued on the application of the Government of Bombay against Balkrishna Govind Kulkarni, the Editor and Publisher of a paper, called the Shubhodaya, published at Dharwar, to show cause why he should not be committed for contempt of Court. The contempt is said to have been committed by the publication of an article written in Kanarese, on the 2nd of June 1921, in respect of certain proceedings then pending in the Court of the First Class Magistrate at Dharwar against two persons, who are described as "volunteers of the Temperance Committee," on a charge of robbery in respect of a sum of thirteen annas, punishable under section 392, Indian

EMPEROR v. BALKRISHNA GOVIND KULKARNI.

Penal Code. It is not necessary to quote the article here. But the writer attributes partiality to the Magistrate in favour of the prosecution, criticises the proceedings in his Court in a manner which cannot possibly be described as fair, and suggests that he acts under instructions of the District Magistrate and not in accordance with his own conscience.

The publication of such an article during the pendency of the proceedings is clearly improper. The effect of the article is to scandalise the Magistrate and its tendency is to interfere with an even and impartial administration of justice for which the Court is constituted. It is clear that such a publication constitutes a contempt of that Court. It is to be regretted that such an article should have appeared in a newspaper edited and published by a person, who holds a Sanad of this Court and who is expected to understand his responsibility in a matter of this kind. It is a matter of some satisfaction that the opponent has made no serious attempt to justify the article and has expressed his willingness to abide by the ruling of this Court and to express his "sincere regret" for having published it, as he says, in ignorance of the law governing the publication of such comments.

The following observations in Reg. v. Gray (1) appear to be applicable to this case (page 40*):—

'Judges and Courts are alike open to criticism and if reasonable argument or expostulation is offered against any judicial act as contrary to law or the public good, no Court could or would treat that as contempt of Court. The law ought not to be astute in such cases to criticise adversely what under such circumstances and with such an object is published; but it is to be remembered that in this matter the liberty of the press is no greater and no less than the liberty of every subject of the Queen."

In the present case the article was published while the proceedings were pending, and it is not suggested and cannot be suggested that it contains criticism of the nature indicated in the passage quoted above

The question that arise on this view of the article are, (1) whether this Court has jurisdiction to punish the opponent for contempt of the Court at Dharwar, (2) whether it constitutes a contempt of this Court, and (3) whether the opponent should be punished, having regard to the circumstances of the case as disclosed in these proceedings.

As regards the first question, at the outset I may refer to the opinions expressed in Mohandas Karamchand Gandhi, In re (2) on this point. If these opinions were binding upon us, without examining this somewhat difficult question, I would answer it in the affirmative in accordance with these opinions. But it appears that in that case the contempt under consideration was the contempt of this and not of a subordinate Court, and that the question of jurisdiction which arises in this case did not arise in that case. The opinions expressed there were not strictly necessary for the decision of that case. Even then, the opinions so clearly expressed are entitled to great weight. Unfortunately, however, the particular point of law was not argued on both sides and apparently there was no reference to the Indian decision on the point nor is there anything in the judgment to show that the relevant provisions of the Statutes and the Letters Patent bearing on the point were independently examined. While, therefore, I am prepared to attach great weight to these opinions, I cannot say that I am relieved from the obligation of coming to an independent conclusion on the question of jurisdiction.

The two English decisions bearing on the point are Rex v. Parke (4) and Rex v. Davies (3), and the two Indian decisions are Venkat Row, In re (6) and Governor of Bengal [Legal Remembrancer] v. Moti Lal Ghose (10). The application of the view accepted in Rex v. Davies (3) to the Indian High Courts has been considered in both the Indian cases and the difficulty of the point is reflected in the conflicting decisions of the Madras and Calcutta High Courts. I have carefully considered the point of jurisdiction in the light of the judgments in all these cases, and of the arguments urged before us. I do not think that this Court has power to punish contempts of Criminal Courts subordinate to this Court as such.

This Court is undoubtedly a Court of Record. It has been so constituted by the Letters Patent of 1862 and 1865: and section 106 of the Government of India Act of 1915 contains an express provision to that effect. Having regard to its powers as defined by the Statutes and the Letters Patent it would be a superior Court of Record. Undoubtedly it would have the power to punish contempts committed against itself. The old Supreme Court, as a Court of Record, had that power, but the old Sadar Diwani Adawlat and Foujdari Adawlat had no such power to punish persons for contempts. The High Court has got all the powers which the above Courts had subject, of course, to the provisions of the Letters Patent. The High Court has also powers of superintendence over all the Courts within its appellate jurisdiction. It has been held that this Court has power to punish contempts committed against itself as the superior Courts of Record have under the Common Law of England: Surendra Nath Banerjee v. Chief Justice and Judges of the High Court (11). So far there is no difficulty. But the question whether the Common Law of England is applicable so far as the punishability of contempts of subordinate Court as such is concerned, and whether the position of the High Court is the same as or similar to that of the Court of the King's Bench in England as regards the power to punish them are not free from difficulty and cannot be treated as settled by the above decision.

As regards the first point, certain contempts of Court are punishable at present under section 228, Indian Penal Code, and, apart from the usual remedy by way of trial, section 480 of the Code of Criminal Procedure provides a summary remedy for punishing them. The earliest legislation on this point, so far as I can gather, was Act XXX of 1841. A careful perusal of these provisions shows that in India while certain contempts committed "in view or the presence of the Court" are made punishable, there is no provision in the Indian Penal Code or any other Indian Act for punishing such contempts committed in the absence of the Court as in the presence case. It may be that the presiding Judge may be able to take proceedings in respect of a charge of defamation against the person concerned: but that is quite a different matter. All that I mean is, that a contempt of Court as such is not made punishable except to the limited extent indicated in section 228, Indian Penal Code or section 480, Criminal Procedure Code. Under the English Common Law such contempts are punishable as misdemeanour, and the remedy is either by way of indictment or summary proceedings before the Court if it has the power to punish it summarily. I feel a great difficulty in holding that, because a contempt of Court is punishable under the English Common Law, it is punishable as such in India even though the Indian law does not make it punishable. It would be in effect creating a new offence to hold that a contempt of a subordinate Court as such is punishable.

Further, I am unable to hold that this Court has powers which the King's Bench in England exercises under the Common Law of England, with reference to the contempts of other Courts. The provisions of the Statutes relating to the Indian High Courts, particularly sections 9 and 15 of 24 & 25 Vic. c. 104, now replaced by sections 106 and 107 of 5 & 6 Geo. V, c. 61 and of the Letters Patent of 1862 replaced by the amended Letters Patent of 1865, particularly clauses 21 to 28 relating to the criminal jurisdiction of this Court, clearly show that the jurisdiction and powers of the High Court are defined by and subject to those provisions; and it is difficult to find either in the history of this Court or in the statutory provisions defining the limitations of the powers of this Court any justification for holding that this Court has powers such as the Court of the King's Bench in England has as being the custos morum of all the subjects of the realm under the Common Law of the land. In the result, I agree with the conclusion reached by Jenkins, C. J., in the Calcutta case that the High Court has no such power. I need not labour the point that the mere fact that the Court has powers of superintendence over the subordinate Courts does not give to this Court any such jurisdiction, as both the Madras and Calcutta High Courts are agreed on this point.

I may add that the decision in Rex v. Parke (4) left this question open, and that the ecision in Rex v. Davies (3) appears to me to be based upon the view that the Court of the King's Bench has power to punish summarily contempts of other Courts, which are punishable by the Common Law of the land, as being the custos morum of all the subjects of the realm. There it was merely a question of applying the remedy and not of considering the question whether the contempt was punishable by the law of the land.

The next question is, whether the publication in question amounts to a contempt of this Court. The point is not distinctly raised in the petition, but in the argument it has been urged by the learned Advocate-General that a contempt of a subordinate Court really constitutes a contempt of this Court. This question is by no means free from difficulty. On the best consideration that I can give to it, I have come to the conclusion that it is not possible to lay down any general rule one way or the other. It cannot be said that every contempt of a subordinate Court is necessarily a contempt of this Court: nor can it be said that contempt of a subordinate Court can never be a contempt of this Court. In each case it must be determined as a question of fact having regard to all the circumstances including the nature of the contempt, the nature of the proceedings with reference to which the contempt is committed, the relation of the subordinate Court to the High Court with reference to those proceedings and its probable effect upon the due administration of justice.

In the present case we are concerned with the contempt involved in the publication of the particular article in the Shubhodaya at Dharwar, with reference to proceedings in respect of a charge under section 392, Indian Penal Code, in the Court of the First Class Magistrate at Dharwar. The article itself is an attack on the impartiality and independence of the Court. The proceeding was in respect of a charge triable by a First Class Magistrate. The charge of robbery is also triable by a Court of Session but having regard to the description of the offences as given in the petition I should treat these proceedings as a trial before that Court on the charge of robbery. In such a case in case of acquittal the appeal would lie to this Court, and in case of conviction the appeal would lie to the Sessions Court, if the sentence be appealable; and in any event in case of conviction this Court would have the power to revise the order of the Court in question, and the responsibility of this Court would be co-extensive with its revisional powers under the Code of Criminal Procedure. In thus stating the position, I have not referred to the other powers of this Court under the Letters Patent, the exercise of which can be hardly treated as anything more than remotely possible. Looking at the article, it is undoubtedly true that it is primarily directed against the Magistrate and not against this Court and it is not unlikely that the publisher may not have been able to realise the possibility of its being treated as a contempt of this Court. At the same time, it is clear that the attack on the impartiality and independence of the Magistrate was made at a time when the proceedings were pending and tendency of such publication is to impede the due administration of justice. At the same time, without straining language, it is not easy to say that such a contempt constitutes a contempt of this Court. Generally speaking, I entirely disapprove of such attacks on the impartiality and independence of Judges, whatever their rank and position, particularly when the proceedings are pending and I desire to express my complete agreement with the observations of Jenkins, C. J., in Governor of Bengal [Legal Remembrancer] v. Moti Lal Ghose (10) at page 220-221* of the report relating to the impropriety of making comments on pending cases or on Judges in connection with these cases. Having regard to all the circumstances bearing on this question of fact, I am not prepared to differ from the view which my Lord the Chief Justice takes that the publication of the article in question constitutes a contempt of this Court as tending to impede the due administration of justice.

This brings me to the last question as to whether the contempt is shown to be of such a character as to demand any punishment. In connection with this point, I think it must be shown that it was probable that the publication would substantially interfere with the due administration of justice. All the Judges, who decided the case of Governor of Bengal [Legal Remembrancer] v. Moti Lal Ghose (10) have emphasised this point and, having regard to the nature of this jurisdiction, it must be exercised with reserve and caution, I do not consider it necessary to elaborate this point in the present case The petition is silent on this point. While the tendency of a publication may be clear, it may not be easy to determine its probable effect on the due administration of justice, which must necessarily depend upon the surrounding circumstances. On the whole, I think, it is sufficient to warn the opponent on the ground that he has committed contempt of this Court.

Before parting with this case, I may state that, in my opinion, such defects as exist at present in the law relating to contempts of Courts other than the High Courts can be removed only by Legislature and that it is desirable to remove them.

U. P. Municipalities Act (II of 1916), s 178—Public road, building abutting on—Building, alteration in.

A building situated at a distance from a public road but within a compound wall which abuts on the public road, connot be said to be abutting on a public road within the meaning of section 78 of the U P Municipalities Act, and, therefore, no notice under section 178 need be given to the Board if any addition or material alteration is made in such a building

Application against an order of the Deputy Commissioner, Hardoi, dated the 16th July 1920, confirming an order of the Bench of Honorary Magistrates, Sandila, dated the 28th May 1920.

Mr. Ali Mohammad, for the Applicant.

The Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The applicant, Saiyed Mohammad Raza, was convicted by a Bench of Magistrates of an offence punishable under section 185 of the U. P. Municipalities Act (II of 1916). The charge against him was that he had made certain unauthorised erections in connection with his house and had failed to give to the Municipal Board notice which is required by section 178 of the Act. This latter section requires the person who desires to erect a new building or new part of a building or to re-erect or make a material alteration in a building to give notice of his intention to the Board. Sub-section 2 of the same section, however, says that this notice is only required in the case of a building which abuts on or is adjacent to a public street or place or property vested in His Majesty or in the Board. The Magistrates held that the erections made by the accused were made in connection with a building which either abutted on or was adjacent to two public roads—one of them a paved lane to the north of the accused's house and the other a public road which lies to the east. A reference to the map, which is to be found in the judgment of the first Court, shows that the accused's house is situated in one corner of a large compound or ahata. The house is at the south-west corner. On the north between the paved lane and the accused's house proper is a considerable space and on the east there is a still larger space between the accused's house and the public road.

The accused applied to the Municipal Board under section 178 for permission to erect a wall to enclose this compound. The compound admittedly abuts both on the lane and on the road. When the Municipal Commissioner who dealt with these matters, went to inspect the site he found that the accused had put up two walls in his house, which, as I have said, is situated at the south-west corner of the compound. Thereupon a case was instituted against the accused on the ground that these walls had been built on to a house which abutted on or was adjacent to a street or public place. The evidence shows that one wall so built is at least 37 feet away from the lane whilst the other wall is some 40 feet away from the road. How, in the face of these facts, it can possibly be held that these walls are abutting on, or are adjacent to, the public street or road is more than I can say. The process of reasoning apparently by which this conclusion has been arrived at is that, because the compound wall which the accused desired to build round his compound would abut on these public places, it necessarily followed that the whole compound which was enclosed within these walls must also be taken to abut on the lane and the road, and that consequently by this process of deduction it must be held that the two walls which the accused built some 40 feet from either the lane or the road must be deemed to abut on or to be adjacent to these public places. This seems to me to be altogether absurd. By no possible interpretation can it be said that the two walls which the accused has built either abut on or adjoin these public places. The conviction is, on the face of it, wrong and must be set aside. The application is allowed and the conviction is quashed. The fine, if paid, will be refunded.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 257—Prosecution witnesses summoned as defence witnesses, whether can be cross-examined Prosecution witnesses summoned as defence witnesses under section 257, Criminal Procedure Code, do not change their character and may be cross-examined by the accused.

Mowla Bux Biswas v. Derasatulla Sarkar, 1 C. W. N. 19 and Sheoprakash Singh v. Rawlins, 28 C. 594, followed.

Petition, under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise the judgment of the Court of the Sub Divisional Magistrate, Gudur Division, in Criminal Appeal No. 19 of 1921, presented against the judgment of the Court of the Stationary Sub Magistrate, Gudur Division, in Criminal Case No. 15 of 1921.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. A. Narasimha Iyer, for the Petitioners:—Though summoned by the accused the prosecution witnesses do not cease to be such. Under section 257, Criminal Procedure Code, the accused has the right to cross examine them, Mowla Bux Biswas v. Derasatulla Sarkar (1), Sheoprakash v. Rawlins (2).

Mr. N. Rajagopalan, for the Public Prosecutor, for the Crown:—The witnesses have been independently summoned as defence witnesses and they cannot be led or cross-examined.

ORDER.—The only point is, whether the prosecution witnesses ought to have been allowed to be cross-examined. I think the point taken for the accused must succeed. The Magistrate having allowed the prosecution witnesses to be recalled as defence witnesses under section 257, Criminal Procedure Code, must clearly have allowed them to be cross-examined by the accused. There is no finding that the application should not have been allowed as vexatious or dilatory. The cases which support accused's position are Mowla Bux Biswas v. Derasatulla Sarkar (1) and Sheoprakash Singh v. Rawlins (2). Both cases decide that prosecution witnesses summoned under these circumstances, do not change their character and may be cross-examined by the accused. The convictions must be set aside and the case remitted for re-trial according to law.

Appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Fyzabad, dated the 17th February 1921, modifying that of the Munsif, Akbarpur, dated the 15th March 1920.

Mr. Rudra Datta Sinha, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Niamat Ullah and Jawwad Husain, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff-respondent for possession of certain plots of land from which he alleged he was ejected in virtue of a certain order of the Revenue Court passed in proceedings in relation to the demarcation of boundaries between two villages. The plaintiff is the proprietor of the village Paintipur, while the defendants are the proprietors of the adjoining village, Ashrafpur. The plots in question lie somewhere on the border-land between the two villages. The plaintiff's case was that these plots formed part of the village Paintipur. The defendants, on the other hand, contended that they were portions of the lands of Ashrafpur. This was the pleading on the question of title relating to the plots in question. The defendants, however, resisted the suit of the plaintiff on the ground of limitation as well. The issue relating to title is no longer in controversy in this Court, nor was it in dispute in the lower Appellate Court. The plea of limitation was urged throughout and is repeated again before me in support of this appeal.

For the purpose of determining the issue of limitation the Court of first instance divided the plots of the lands covered by those plots into several categories. With regard to some of the plots or portion of plots it held that they were capable of actual and physical possession and, inasmuch as the plaintiff had failed to prove his possession within limitation, his suit was liable to be dismissed with respect to those plots. With regard to another set of plots, it held that no party succeeded in proving actual possession of them and, consequently, the presumption of law that possession follows title was applicable to such of the lands as were covered by those plots. In view of this finding, it held that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree in respect of those plots. With regard to a third set of plots its conclusion was that they generally remained under water and, consequently, the presumption of possession in favour of the owner was applicable to that class of land as well. It decreed the plaintiff's suit in respect of these plots also. The matter was taken in appeal to the Court of the District Judge of Fyzabad by the plaintiff, he being aggrieved from that portion of the decree of the Court of first instance, which dismissed his suit as regards some of the plots in dispute. The defendants were equally dissatisfied with that portion of the decree of the Court of first instance, which had the effect of decreeing the plaintiff's suit with regard to some plots of land. The learned Judge dealt with both these matters in his judgment dated the 17th February 1921, and the decree, which follows that judgment, is the subject-matter of appeal in this Court.

The position which the defendants took in the lower Appellate Court and the one which they have also taken in this Court is, that they are mere trespassers of the plots of land in suit of which the plaintiff is the owner. This is a factor in the case which would govern the application of the rule of law on the question of limitation. The learned Judge also dealt with the several classes of lands in his judgment and with regard to one class of them his finding is that the land covered by those plots in tank-land. With regard to another set of plots he came to the conclusion that the defendants have "no doubt been for long past in possession when the land was capable of physical possession, but as most of the land is tank land pure and simple and the other plots are shown to have been, at least once since 1316 Fasli, either parti or tank-land the ruling reported as Brijraj Singh v. Ganga Bakhsh Singh (1) prevents any title accruing to the respondent." These findings of fact, when compared with the findings of the Court of first instance on the same question, are directly opposed to each other in respect of the plots of land with reference to which that Court had held that the plaintiff failed to prove his possession within limitation. The finding of the learned Judge, shortly put, comes to this that some of the lands in question are tank-lands and that other lands have been actually in the possession of the defendants now and then when they could be in such possession but these lands have also had the character of tank land or parti land. This being his finding, the law which he has applied in determining the question of limitation has, in my opinion, been rightly applied. Even if I had some doubt as to the finding of the learned Judge, the statements twice recorded by the Court of first instance of the Pleaders for the parties with reference to the nature of the lands in suit would undoubtedly have led me to the conclusion that the whole of the lands in dispute were, during the period of the rainy season every year, covered by water.

What, then, is the law of limitation applicable to such a condition of things? In the case of Brijraj Singh v. Ganga Bukhsh Singh (1) a learned Judge of this Court made the following observations:—"It is an axiom of the law relating to possession that where possession in fact is determined, possession in law follows the right to possess; in other words, possession follows title. Applying this principle to the case before us it follows that while the land in suit was under water possession in law was with the plaintiffs whose title or right to possess is acknowledged." If I may say so, with respect, I am in complete agreement with this statement of law. On the facts found, for a period of four months in every year, the lands in suit were subject to submergence. During that period a trespasser cannot be recognised to have been in constructive possession of the lands. In fact, no presumption either of constructive possession on account of previous actual possession or on account of contiguity of land with lands in actual possession of a trespasser can be made in his favour. In the case of Trustees, Executors and Agency Company Limited and Templeton v. Short (2), Lord Macnaghten, in delivering the judgment of His Majesty's Privy Council, observed as follows:—"Their Lordships are unable to concur in this view. They are of opinion that if a person enters upon the land of another and holds possession for a time, and then, without having acquired title under the statute, abandons possession, the rightful owner, on the abandonment, is in the same position in all respects as he was before the intrusion took place. Their is no one against whom he can bring an action. He cannot make an entry upon himself. There is no positive enactment nor is there any principle of law which requires him to do any act, to issue any notice, or to perform any ceremony in order to rehabilitate himself. No new departure is necessary. The possession of the intruder, ineffectual for the purpose of transferring title, ceases upon its abandonment to be effectual for any purpose. It does not leave behind it any cloud on the title of the rightful owner, or any secret process at work for the possible benefit in time to come of some casual interloper or lucky vagrant."

The above principle of law was applied by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Secretary of State for India v. Krishnamoni Gupta (3). Lord Davey, in delivering the judgment of the Privy Council, made the following observation in that case:—"For the purpose of trying the question whether limitation applies, the Government must be regarded as a trespasser and dispossessor of the rightful owners, and, in the opinion of their Lordships, it would be contrary both to the principle and authority to imply such constructive possession in favour of a wrong-doer, so as to enable him to obtain thereby a title by limitation... ..... The possession of the Government was in fact determined by the submergence of the land which then became derelict, and, so long as it remained in that estate, no titles could be acquired against the true owner..... ....They (their Lordships) think that on the dispossession of the Government by his vis major of the floods, the constructive possession of the land was (if any where) in the true owner." On these grounds, I am of opinion that the decision of the learned District Judge is substantially correct.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Railways Act (IX of 1890), s 72—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s 151—Railway Company, duty of, to deliver goods consigned within reasonable time—Delay—Damages.

In the absence of any Risk Note or of any proof to show that the goods consigned were despatched at the risk of the consignor or consignee, or that any notice was given that the goods were to be carried subject to the rules contained in the Goods Tariff Regulations, a Railway Company is responsible under section 72 of the Railways Act, read with section 151 of the Contract Act, for delay in the delivery of goods consigned to it. [p. 772, col. 1]

Civil revision against an order of the Judge, Small Cause Court, Aligarh.

Mr. Lalit Mohan Banerji, for the Applicants.

Mr. Panna Lal, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The admitted facts of this case are these. A consignment of 182 bags of maize was made at Barnala Railway Station on the North Western Railway for despatch to the plaintiffs at Aligarh. The goods were despatched from that station on the 5th of January 1920, the date on which the consignment was made. They had to be carried over a part of the East Indian Railway and the goods had to pass two junction stations, namely, Allal Junction and Delhi Junction. They arrived at Aligarh on the 30th of January and were delivered to the plaintiffs on the 4th of February 1920. In the meantime, the market had fallen and the plaintiffs state that by reason of the delay in the delivery of the goods they sustained loss and accordingly they claimed damages from both the Railway Companies. It was admitted on behalf of the Railway that, ordinarily, it takes from 7 to 10 days for any consignment delivered at Barnala to arrive at Aligarh. So that, admittedly, there was a delay of at least 15 days. It was urged in the Court below on behalf of the defendants that there was no specific time agreed upon for the delivery of the goods, and that, therefore, the defendants were not responsible for any loss which may have accrued to the plaintiffs by reason of the delay in the delivery of the goods. It was also stated in the Court below that an axle had got heated and that for that reason the goods had to be detained at the Allal Junction Station and this was the cause of the delay in the arrival of the goods. On the point last mentioned no evidence was given in the Court below. That Court made a decree in the plaintiffs' favour for a part of the claim. It is contended in this Court that the goods were consigned under a Risk Note, Form A; that paragraph 9 of that Note provided that the goods were to be carried by the Railway subject to the rules contained in the Goods Tariff Regulation; that paragraph 40 of those rules provides that the Railway was not responsible for the arrival of the goods within any definite time, and that, consequently, the defendants were not responsible to the plaintiffs for any loss sustained by reason of the delay in the delivery of the goods. There is nothing on the record to show that a Risk Note in Form A was signed by the consignor. No Risk Note was produced nor was the Railway receipt granted to the consignor filed by the defendants in the Court below. Therefore, there was no evidence before that Court to show that the goods were consigned subject to the notice alleged to be contained in Risk Note, Form A. If the goods were not despatched under a Risk Note of that description, the contract between the parties could not be said to be a contract under which goods were to be carried subject to clause 40 of the Goods Tariff Regulation. In the absence of evidence to this effect, the ordinary rule applicable to a bailee would be applicable to the present case. Under section 72 of the Railways Act, 1890, section 161 of the Contract Act would govern the liability of the Railway. Under that section the Railway would be responsible for delay in the delivery of goods at the proper time. In the present case, according to the admission made on behalf of the Railway in the Court below, the proper time for the delivery of the goods was seven to ten days from the date of the consignment of the goods. Therefore, there was a delay of about 15 days in the delivery of the goods, and if any loss was sustained by the plaintiffs by reason of this delay, the plaintiffs would be entitled to be compensated for the loss. Furthermore, under section 46 of the Contract Act the contract had ordinarily to be performed within a reasonable time. It was, therefore, necessary for the defendants in this case to prove that there were valid reasons which prevented them from delivering the goods at a time when they would ordinarily have been delivered. No such evidence was adduced. Therefore, in the absence of the alleged Risk Note or of any proof to show that the goods were despatched at the risk of the consignor or consignee, or that any notice was given that the goods were to be carried subject to the rules contained in the Goods Tariff Regulations, the Court below was justified in making a decree in favour of the plaintiffs. This application must, therefore, fail and I dismiss it with costs.

Mr. Niamat Ullah, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of the case, which are no longer in dispute, are as follows:—Surajpal Singh, the plaintiff-respondent, and Shankar Singh, defendant No. 1, now deceased, formed a joint Hindu family possessed of some ancestral estate. In the year 1903 Shankar Singh had purchased 49 bighas 13 biswas land in the village Manikpur from Ram Sarup and others. This property on its purchase acquired the characteristic of a joint family property. By a sale deed dated the 19th September 1912 Shankar Singh sold 24 bighas 16 biswas and 10 biswansis out of the land which was purchased in 1903 by Ramadhin Singh, defendant

No. 2, the appellant in this Court, for a consideration of Rs. 500. Surajpal Singh brought the suit for pre emption in respect of the sale of the 19th September 1912, out of which the present appeal has arisen. He has succeeded in both the Courts below.

Two points in support of the appeal were urged before me—(1) That the suit for pre-emption is a mala fide one, and (2) that in a sale of joint family property by one of the members of the family no suit for pre-emption is maintainable by another member of the same family.

As regards the first point the contention is based on two facts—(1) That the vendor, Shankar Singh, brought a suit for cancellation of the sale in question, and (2) that the present suit is designed to counteract the effect of the suit for cancellation in the event of its proving unsuccessful. It is urged that the result of either suit, if successful, would be to the benefit of the whole family. I am not prepared to accept this argument. Both suits may be perfectly bona fide and there is nothing in the record to suggest that they are not so. There can be no objection to a party having two strings to his bow and that fact does not necessarily suggest any mala fides on the part of such a litigant. I reject the first ground.

The second ground is more serious. The learned Counsel for the defendant appellant cited the judgment of the Allahabad High Court in the case of Pratap Narain Singh v. Shiam Lal (1) in support of his contention. With that decision I will deal later. To determine the right of a party to claim pre-emption, I must primarily look to the provisions of the Oudh Laws Act (XVIII of 1876) by which the right of pre-emption is conferred upon persons residing in the territory of Oudh. Section 3, sub-section (c), of the Act says that "the law to be administered by the Courts of Oudh shall be the rules contained in this Act;" section 6 of the same Act is as follows:—"The right of pre-emption is a right of the persons, hereinafter mentioned or referred to, to acquire, in the cases hereinafter specified, immoveable property in preference to all other persons." Such persons are enumerated and classified in section 9 of the same Act. It is admitted that the plaintiff is one of such persons and it is also admitted that the appellant-vendee is not a person who has a preferential, or even an equal, right to acquire property in suit to the plaintiff. Section 13 of that Act gives a cause of action to an intending pre-emptor to bring a suit for pre-emption for the purpose of acquiring the property in preference to the person to whom it has been sold on breach of the terms laid down in sections 10, 11 and 12 and also on the ground that the price stated in the notice was not fixed in good faith, and in the case of mortgage that the amount claimed by the mortgagee was not really due on foot of the mortgage and was not claimed in good faith and that it exceeds the fair market value of the property mortgaged. It would thus appear that, on the terms of the enactment just now mentioned, the plaintiff has a perfect right to bring the suit for pre-emption which he has brought. The cause of action for such a suit arose by the fact that the vendor sold the property to the vendee without giving the due notice as required by section 10 of the Act. But it is argued that there are some general principles of law which negative the plaintiff's right of pre-emption. It is contended broadly that, when one member of a joint Hindu family sells property to a stranger another member of the same family has no right to pre-empt the same. In support of this contention resort was made to the juristic conception of a joint Hindu family and the legal relation in which the members of such a family stood to each other. In this connection, the decision in the case of Himmat Bahadur v. Bhawani Kunwar (2) was cited. I accept the analysis of the notion of a joint Hindu family so elaborately made in that judgment, but the conclusions which the learned Counsel desires to draw from that analysis do not follow nor can they override the statutory law to which reference has already been made. In the Full Bench case of Gandharp Singh v. Sahib Singh (3) it was held that the members of a joint and undivided Hindu family, other than that member who is recorded in the Collector's book as a sharer in the mahal, are co-sharers for the purpose of pre-emption. In that case the vendees resisted the suit for pre-emption on the ground that they were co-sharers in the village and the defence was upheld by the Full Bench. The effect of such a defence being recognised as valid logically leads to the conclusion that the defendants had a right to acquire the property in preference to the pre-emptor and they could equally well enforce their right of pre-emption as co-sharers even in the capacity of plaintiffs. The Full Bench decision has been admitted by this Court as enunciating a good law. In the case of Hazari Singh v. Joot Singh (4) Mr. Blennerhassett, J. C., referred to that case with approval and held that a suit for pre-emption by a member of a joint Hindu family, who happened to be the son of the vendor in that case, was maintainable in respect of a sale made by his father with whom he formed the joint Hindu family. In that judgment Mr. Blennerhassett referred to an earlier decision of this Court in the case of Lachmi Narain v. Raghunath, No. 652 of 1885, dated the 16th September 1885, which had decided that the son was entitled to enforce his right of pre-emption in respect of the property sold by his father with whom he was joint and undivided. If on no other grounds I must overrule the contention on the ground of stare decisis. A reference was also made in this connection to a decision of a Bench of this Court in the case of Ram Dayal v. Bhajju Lal (5). The ratio decidendi of that case may be best explained in the language of the learned Judge, Macleod, A. J. C., himself who delivered the judgment of the Court: "It seems to me that Ram Bharose and Mul Narain are on the horns of a dilemma. They must either admit that the sale was a valid one or deny that it was so. If they admit that the sale was a valid one, then any interest they had in the property before the sale must have been lost to them on the sale taking place, and, therefore, they had no subsisting title at the date of the institution of their suit, while if they deny that their father had power to transfer their interest they are precluded from claiming pre emption." Now, it is perfectly clear that the title of Ram Bharose and Mul Narain to pre-empt rested on their interest in the property which was the subject-matter of the sale and apparently there was no other property besides that property in which they had interest and upon which they could found their status of co-sharers."

In the present case, apart from any other property that the family may be possessed of in which the plaintiff may have an interest as undivided co parcener, half of the property which was acquired by the family under the sale of August 1903 still remains the family property, and the plaintiff has an interest in it and in virtue of which he is a co sharer within the meaning of section 9 of the Oudh Laws Act (XVIII of 1876), and is entitled to maintain the suit for pre emption as has already been observed in an earlier portion of this judgment.

It is further argued that the plaintiff, having accepted the sale in question, becomes a vendor of the property sold and it would be anomalous to allow him to acquire the same property by the exercise of the right of pre emption. This is a reasoning which is borrowed from the decision of the Allahabad High Court in case of Pratap Narain Singh v. Shiam Lal (1) already referred to. I am not prepared to accept the argument as a sound one. My reasons are as follows:—(1) A plaintiff in a suit for pre emption is under a legal necessity to accept the validity of the sale and of the vendor's title to effect the sale. If he denies either the one or the other, according to the law in force in Oudh, he is debarred from claiming a right of pre-emption. This view is founded upon a decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Abdul Wahid Khan v. Shaluka Bibi (6) and has consistently been acted upon. The plaintiff in this case, with a view to successfully exercise his right of pre emption, was bound to accept the sale which has given rise to this suit. (2) With due deference to the learned Judge who decided the case of Pratap Narain Singh v. Shiam Lal (1), I am (unable?) to acquiesce in the view that in such a case the plaintiff must be treated as a vendor. I am of opinion that a member of a joint Hindu family who consents to a sale of a portion of the family property by another member of the same family is not a vendor. His consent merely takes place of legal necessity on proof of which the sale could be upheld as valid against every member of the family—See the recent decision of the Privy Council in the case of Rangasami Gounden v. Nachiappa Gounden (7). Such a consent is a substitute for evidence of legal necessity and when established merely works out as an estoppel by force of which the member giving the consent is debarred from challenging the sale on the ground open to him under the Hindu Law. Such an estoppel cannot, in my opinion, debar him of his right to exercise the claim of pre-emption which exists in his favour independently of the bargain of sale. (3) I have shown above that the right of a member of a joint Hindu family to exercise his claim of pre-emption logically follows from the decision of the Full Bench case of Gandharp Singh v. Sahib Singh (3). The statutory law of pre-emption in Oudh, to which reference has already been made, does not, in my opinion, deprive a plaintiff clothed with a character such as the present plaintiff is from his right of pre emption. On the contrary, I hold that the enactment clearly recognises the right in favour of such a person by the provisions of sections 6 and 9 of the Oudh Laws Act (XVIII of 1876). (5) The right of pre emption of a member of a joint Hindu family in respect of a sale effected by another member of the same family has been recognised and acted upon in several decisions in Oudh, to which reference has already been made.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Order IX, rule 8, of the Code of Civil Procedure read with Order XVII, rule 2, does not contemplate the hearing of a suit on the merits in the absence of the plaintiff or his pleader. Therefore a suit dismissed on the merits in plaintiff's absence can be restored and re-heard. [p. 776, col. 1.]

Revision from an order of the Judge, Small Cause Court, Agra.

Mr. Gulzari Lal, for the Applicants.

Mr. Narain Prasad Asthana, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are these. The plaintiff brought a suit in the Court of Small Causes at Agra to recover money due upon a bond. The defendants admitted the bond but pleaded payment, and they produced a receipt which they alleged had been granted to them by the plaintiff in discharge of the amount secured by the bond. On the date fixed for hearing they filed their written statement and prayed that the plaintiff and his agent might be examined. The plaintiff was not personally present nor was his agent. The Court accordingly adjourned the hearing of the case and fixed the 2nd of March 1921 for the hearing of the suit, and directed the parties to appear in person on that day. On the aforesaid date, the plaintiff was not present and his Pleader stated that he had no instructions. In spite of this, the Court proceeded to try the suit in the absence of the plaintiff and recorded evidence adduced by the defendants and decided in their favour and dismissed the suit. Two days afterwards, the plaintiff appeared and applied to the Court to restore the case, allegir g that illness had prevented his appearing on the 2nd of March 1921. This application was granted and the case was restored and heard in the presence of both parties. Evidence was taken and the Court went fully into the merits and held that the receipt produced by the defendants related to another debt due to the plaintiff and decreed the claim in part after an examination of the account-books of the plaintiff.

The present application has been made for revision of this decree mainly on the ground that the Court below was not competent to restore the suit and to re-hear it. In my opinion this contention is not valid. As the plaintiff was not present and his Pleader had no instructions there was default on the part of the plaintiff on the 2nd of March 1921, and the Court could only have dismissed the suit under Order IX, rule 8 of the Code of Civil Procedure, read with Order XVII, rule 2 it is true that the rule last mentioned provides that the Court may proceed, in circumstances like those of the present case, under Order IX, rule 8, or make any other order in the case. The other order which, according to the rule, could be made by the Court was an order postponing the hearing of the case. But the rule certainly does not contemplate a hearing of the case on the merits in the absence of the plaintiff or his Pleader. As the Pleader had no instructions and the plaintiff was not personally present, the plaintiff must be deemed not to have appeared on the date of the hearing, and the only order which the Court could have made was an order of dismissal for default. The order passed on the 2nd of March 1921, although purporting to be an order of dismissal on the merits, was in reality and in substance an order dismissing the suit for default. The Court must be taken to have done that which it could only do under the provisions of the law. Therefore, the Court below was entitled under Order IX, rule 9, to restore the case to its original number and to re-hear it on the merits. It has considered the case fully on the merits and has come to a decision in favour of the plaintiff. There has been no failure of justice in this case and I see no reason to interfere in revision. The application is dismissed with costs.

Appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Fyzabad, dated 1st February 1921, reversing that of the Munsif, Akbarpur, dated 31st March 1920.

Mr. Niamat Ullah, for the Appellant.

Messrs. A. P. Sen and N. N. Dutt, for Respondents Nos. 1—4.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of an ordinary suit brought by a Hindu reversioner on the death of a Hindu female to recover possession of the property which belonged to a male collateral of the plaintiffs from the hands of a transferee of the female. The suit was dismissed by the Court of first instance but has been decreed by the lower Appellate Court. This is a second appeal by the transferees from the last mentioned decree.

The facts necessary for the disposal of the appeal are as follows:—

The property in suit originally belonged to one Shohrat Singh, who died childless. On his death the property devolved on his mother, Musammat Dilbasi. By a registered deed of sale dated the 21st August 1896 (Exhibit A 1) she conveyed the whole of the property in suit to the defendant's father, Dwarka Singh. At the time of the sale the plaintiffs' father, Ramnihal Singh, was the only presumptive reversioner of Shohrat Singh. On the 10th November 1896 Ramnihal Singh executed a document in favour of Dwarka Singh styled as iqrarnama dastbardari, by means of which he relinquished all his rights in the property in suit, accepted the legality of the sale of the 21st August 1896, and further covenanted that he and after him his heirs would prefer no claim to the property which was the subject-matter of the sale (Exhibit A 2). Ramnihal Singh predeceased Musammat Dilbasi, who died about the end of 1907. At her death the plaintiffs, who are the sons of Ramnihal Singh, are the only reversioners entitled to the estate of Shohrat Singh and the defendants are admittedly in possession of the property in suit since the date of the purchase of it by their father in 1895. These facts are no longer disputed, though in the written statement filed by the defendants the accuracy of those facts was challenged.

The simple case of the plaintiffs is, that the sale-deed of the 21st August 1896 was ultra vires of Musammat Dilbasi; that it ceased to have any effect on her death, and that the plaintiffs are entitled to the property on the termination of the interest of the lady. The plea in defence, which was urged before me on behalf of the appellant and with which alone I am concerned now, is of a two-fold character—(1). That the effect of the sale of the 21st August 1896, combined with the deed of relinquishment of the 10th November 1896, is to create a surrender of the estate by the widow to the vendee with the consent of the reversioner then in existence, and (2) that at any rate the deed of relinquishment distinctly proves the consent of the reversioner to the sale of the 21st August 1896, and consequently the sale is binding on the actual reversioners, that is, the plaintiffs, who are also the sons of the presumptive reversioner, Ramnihal Singh, who gave the consent.

As regards the first aspect of the plea, it may be mentioned that it does not seem to have been distinctly raised at any stage of the proceeding. In any event, it is untenable. It is clear from the evidence of defendant's witness No. 2 that the sale of the 21st August 1896 does not cover the entire estate which had devolved upon Musammat Dilbasi on the death of her son, Shohrat Singh. It is well settled law now that the doctrine of surrender or renunciation has no application to a case where a Hindu female does not transfer the whole of the estate which descends to her from the male propositus. Any doubt which could be entertained on this question before the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Rangasami Gounden v. Nachiappa

Gounden (1) is dispelled in an unmistakable language by the judgment of Lord Dunedin delivered in that case.

As to the second line of argument, the contention of the learned Pleader for the appellant crystallised at the end into one simple point to the effect that the decision of the lower Appellate Court prescribes as a rule of evidence a particular standard of the proof of the consent given by a reversioner to a transfer effected by a Hindu female and that there is no such rule of evidence. The learned Pleader consequently says that the finding of the lower Appellate Court is vitiated by an error of law and is liable to be set aside in second appeal.

On the authorities there can be no doubt whatsoever that the consent of the reversioner is always presumptive evidence of the legal necessity which justifies an alienation on the part of the Hindu female. All controversy as to the legal effect of such a consent is set at rest by the same judgment of Lord Dunedin, to which reference has already been made. It will, therefore, serve no useful purpose to examine the case law on the subject previous to the last mentioned decision of His Majesty's Privy Council. On this question Lord Dunedin makes the following pronouncement :—

"When the alienation of the whole or part of the estate is to be supported on the ground of necessity, then if such necessity is not proved aliunde and the alienee does not prove enquiry on his part and honest belief in the necessity, the consent of such reversioners as might fairly be expected to be interested to quarrel, the transaction will be held to afford a presumptive proof which, if not rebutted by contrary proof, will validate the transaction as a right and proper one." The question whether the evidence adduced in any particular case amounts to "a presumptive proof" or not must necessarily be a question of the sufficiency or insufficiency of evidence, and as such a pure question of fact. It is true that the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge creates an impression that he intended to lay down, with reference to certain Privy Council decisions, noteably the cases of Sham Sundar Lal v. Achhan Kunwar (2) and Hari Kishen Bhagat v. Kashi Parshad Singh (3), a rule of evidence requiring a special kind of proof of consent. The learned Subordinate Judge may be wrong in that view of law but he deals with a number of circumstances emerging out of the evidence on the record and on the basis of those circumstances he finds as follows:—

"Plainly, therefore, Ramnihal Singh, though then presumptively entitled as reversioner, could in fact have had no hope of succeeding to the property now in suit. His consent is in consequence 'worth nothing' Deputy Commissioner, Sitapur v. Auseri Singh (4)'. So the existence of legal necessity cannot be inferred therefrom. In this connection, it is significant that the first appellant, who was then a major, did not join his father, Ramnihal Singh, in executing the iqrarnama dated the 10th November 1896 (Exhibit A 2). For these reasons, I am of opinion that there was no intelligent consent on the part of Ramnihal Singh. Consequently, the deed executed by him on the 10th November 1896 (Exhibit A 2) cannot affect the reversionery rights of the appellant." This, in my opinion, is a finding of fact which is binding on me. The use of the word "intelligent" in the above quotation is unfortunate but I have no doubt in my mind that the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge substantially amounts to the opinion that consent obtained in the particular circumstances to which he refers in detail in his judgment is not sufficient to justify a presumption of legal necessity in favour of the vendee.

I, therefore, maintain the decree of the lower Appellate Court and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Dr. Surendra Nath Sen and Mr. Peary Lal Banerji, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.

PIGGOTT, J.—This is an application in revision against an order superseding an arbitration and directing the trial of the suit to proceed in the ordinary course. It is based upon a finding that there had been misconduct on the part of the arbitrator and so far complies with the provisions of paragraph 15 of the Second Schedule to the Code of Civil Procedure. The misconduct attributed to the arbitrator is, that he had made "private enquiries" behind the backs of the parties. There is authority of this Court for the proposition that the making of such enquiries, where the arbitrator is not empowered to do so by the terms of the reference, amounts to legal "misconduct" on his part. The whole controversy in this case is, whether the arbitrator was or was not empowered to act as he did. For the applicants it is contended that the parties had agreed that the arbitrator might decide the case on his personal knowledge of the facts, and that this necessarily implies a right to supplement his knowledge in respect of any relevant circumstances by any kind of enquiries which he might see fit to make. To this it is replied that, while the parties were quite willing that the arbitrator should make use of such knowledge of the facts as he possessed on the date of the agreement of reference, they never agreed that he might supplement his knowledge by listening to ex parte statements behind the backs of either or both of the parties to the reference. The learned Subordinate Judge has applied his mind to this point and has held that the terms of the agreement did not empower the arbitrator to act as he did. I am not sure that I should have arrived at this conclusion if I had been called upon to decide the matter in his place; but the point is at least an arguable one, and the most that could be said in support of the case for the applicants, even if the matter were before us as an appeal on a point of law, would be that the Court below had misinterpreted the terms of the agreement of reference. As the Legislature has not seen fit to allow an appeal from an order of this nature, even on the grounds specified in section 100 of the Civil Procedure Code, I do not think we ought to interfere in revision. It does not seem to me possible to hold that the Court below has acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction either illegally or with material irregularity.

I would, therefore, dismiss this application with costs.

In order to construe a document the Court must ascertain its legal effect with reference to its terms. Merely calling a document by a certain name will not make it that document. [p. 781, col. 1.]

Tirugnanapal v. Ponnammai Nadathi, 58 Ind Cas. 228; 25 C. W. N. 511, (1920) M. W. N. 559; 28 M. L. T. 190; 12 L. W. 660 (P. C.), referred to.

A document, styled a patta istimrari, granted by an under-proprietor, authorised the grantee to continue in possession of the property conveyed generation after generation on payment of the Government revenue. It further provided that the grantee and his heirs shall have the same rights of ownership as the grantor had, and that the grantor and his representatives shall have no claim to and shall cause no interference in the property conveyed:

Held, that the document conferred complete under-proprietary title on the grantee in respect of the plots covered by it. [p. 781, cols. 1 & 2.]

A partition does not necessarily invest a party with a right to actual possession of lands which are allotted to him. Persons holding interests in a village of a nature subordinate to the interest which is the subject-matter of partition cannot be held to be liable to ejectment on the ground that the land which they occupied is allotted to any particular co-sharer in the partition. A person seeking to eject them must show that their interest in the plot in question is of such a nature as was legally affected by the partition proceedings. [p. 781, col. 1.]

Messrs. A. P. Sen and S. N. Roy, for Respondents Nos. 1 and 2.

JUDGMENT.—The parties are co-sharers in village Daryapur in the district of Sultanpur. The entire village is held as an under proprietary tenure under sub-settlement. One Musammat Sonaiti Bibi was also a co-sharer in the village. On the 14th March 1878 she sold her share in favour of Ghasi Khan and some other persons. On the 13th June 1878 the vendees executed a document in favour of Musammat Sonaiti Bibi, the vendor. This document is given the name of a perpetual lease. It comprises four plots, two of which are in dispute in this case that is, Nos. 118 and 174 of old Settlement. In execution of a decree against Musammat Sonaiti Bibi her rights under the document of the 13th June 1878 were attached and sold in respect of plots Nos. 118 and 174. The sale also included two other plots, Nos. 173 and 175, which are not covered by the lease of the 13th June 1878. This sale took place on the 1st October 1883 and the defendants' ancestor was the purchaser of these plots. In the year 1908 a partition of the entire village was effected under the provisions of the U. P. Land Revenue Act (III of 1901). Amongst others, the parties to this suit or their predecessors-in-interest were parties to the partition proceedings. Apart from the interest which the defendants' ancestor acquired in the four plots already mentioned in virtue of the purchase of the 1st October 1883, they were co-sharers in the village independently of that purchase. In that partition plots Nos. 118 and 174 as well as plots Nos. 173 and 175 were allotted to the plaintiffs' predecessor-in-interest. The plaintiffs brought the suit, out of which this appeal arises, for possession of those four plots. They based their title on the partition proceedings, to which reference has already been made. The defence to the suit which is necessary for the purpose of this appeal was to the effect that the four plots in dispute were held by the defendants in the character of a lessee and not in that of an under-proprietor. This defence naturally raised the issue as to the interpretation of the deed of the 13th June 1878 so far as plots Nos. 118 and 174 were concerned. The Courts below have held that the document in question evidenced nothing more than a mere lease-hold interest in favour of Musammat Sonaiti Bibi.

It is contended in appeal before me that the Courts below have erred in interpreting the document of the 13th June 1878, and that the correct interpretation is that it is a complete transfer of the rights of Ghasi Khan and others in those plots. I agree with the contention of the learned Pleader for the appellants. There is no doubt that the document is given the name of patta istimrari, as I have already observed, but calling the document a patta istimrari does not make it so. We must ascertain the legal effect of the document with reference to its terms. In the case of Tirugnanapal v. Ponnammai Nadathi (1) the question was as to the interpretation of a document, which was given the name of a Will. Lord Moulton observed as follows:—"But calling a document a Will does not make it so." To construe rightly the document of the 13th June 1878 I must look to its terms. It authorises the grantee, Musammat Sonaiti Bibi, to continue in possession of the property conveyed thereby, generation after generation, on payment of revenue, which means the Government revenue, to the extent of Rs. 7-8-0, to the grantors. The document further says that the grantee and her heirs shall have the same rights of ownership as the grantors had and that the grantors and their representatives shall have no claim to, or cause no interference in, the property conveyed by the deed. It is admitted that the grantors possessed under-proprietary rights in the village in virtue of the sale effected in their favour by Musammat Sonaiti Bibi a few months before, that is, on the 14th March 1878. Indeed, the so-called perpetual lease recites the fact of the sale and the possession of the vendees thereunder.

It appears that the motive for the execution of the deed of the 13th June 1878 was the recognition of the needs for maintenance for the former owner, Musammat Sonaiti Bibi, on the part of her vendees. In fact the deed says that the grant is being made for the purpose of her maintenance. There was, therefore, ample consideration for the conveyance of the 13th June 1878. I am, therefore, clearly of opinion that the document confers complete under proprietary title on Musammat Sonaiti Bibi in respect of the plots covered by it. Amongst those plots are, as already stated, plots Nos. 118 and 174, which are in dispute in this case. The defendants were, therefore, co-sharers of the plaintiffs at the time of the partition of 1908 in regard to those plots. It follows that any title which they possessed to those plots in virtue of the deed of the 13th June 1878 was lost to them by reason of their allotment to the plaintiffs in the partition proceedings. The plaintiffs are, therefore, entitled to a decree in respect of those plots.

Now remains the question of the other two plots in dispute in this case, namely, plots Nos. 173 and 175. The defendants alleged, as I have already stated, that they were lessees of all the four plots. It is common ground that the two plots, Nos. 173 and 175, are not comprised in the document of the 13th June 1878, as I have already stated. The status of the defendants, therefore, with reference to these two plots is not that of an under-proprietor. The partition proceedings are consequently no bar to the retention of these plots by the defendants. The plaintiffs cannot be held to be entitled to actual possession of every piece of land that might have been allotted to them in the partition proceedings. The effect of the partition does not necessarily invest the party with a right to actual possession of lands which are allotted to him. Persons holding interests in a village of a nature subordinate to the interest which is the subject-matter of partition cannot be held to be liable to ejectment on the ground that the land which they occupied is allotted to any particular co-sharer in the partition. This is a suit in ejectment and the plaintiffs are under a clear obligation to establish their title to the relief which they seek in the suit; in other words, they must establish their right that they are entitled to turn the defendants out of the actual possession of the plots in question and this they can do only by showing in this particular case that the interest of the defendants in the plots in question is of such a nature as was legally affected by the partition proceedings. This the plaintiffs have not succeeded in showing. The name of the defendants in respect of these plots are entered in the revenue papers as bare lessees or in some papers as mere tenants. I am, therefore, of opinion that the plaintiffs have failed to establish their right to the actual possession of plots Nos. 173 and 175. It is not necessary for me to determine in this case what is the exact status of the defendants in relation to these plots. What is necessary to decide is, that they are not under-proprietors of these plots and this I have already done.

I, therefore, accept the appeal, modify the decree of the Court below and give the plaintiffs a decree for possession of plots Nos. 118 and 174 old Settlement. The decree of the Court below in respect of plots Nos. 173 and 175 is confirmed. The parties to bear their own costs throughout.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 24—Transfer of case—Plaintiff's right to chose forum—Ground of transfer—Convenience.

An applicant for transfer of a case from one Court to another must make out a strong case of the balance of convenience. [p. 785, col. 1.]

In such a case the convenience of the parties in the conduct of litigation is certainly a relevant consideration and it is rather the basis of nearly all statutory jurisdiction on the civil side. [p. 785, col. 1.]

A suit for cancellation of a deed of gift executed in the Central Provinces by a deceased person while in the state of ill-health under undue influence was transferred from a Court within the jurisdiction of the Allahabad High Court where the parties resided to the Court in the Central Provinces on the ground that the balance of convenience was in favour of the latter Court inasmuch as all available witnesses resided at the place in the Central Provinces [p. 784, col. 2.]

Application for transfer of a suit pending in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Shahjahanpur.

Mr. Uma Shankar Bajpai, for the Applicant.

Mr. Lalit Mohan Banerji, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application which raises both a question of principle and a question of fact of some importance. The defendant, who is the applicant, is the son of one Abdul Jalil Khan, deceased, and the plaintiff is the cousin of the deceased man who claims to be his heir. Abdul Jalil Khan and the other members of his family were old residents of Shahjahanpur, which appears also to have been the ancestral home of the defendant. For the purposes of this case, however, it may be assumed that the deceased migrated to a place called Pusad in Yeotmal, a District of the Berars, which is now a portion of the Central Provinces, and died there in October of last year after having made, so the defendant alleges, certain gifts by deed of his property in favour of the defendant. The suit is brought by the plaintiff as heir of the deceased man to set aside these gifts, and it has been brought in the Court at Shahjahanpur, as a matter of choice, by the plaintiff who is of course in all cases dominus litis; probably because it is his ordinary home, the language of the Court is his language and because, as he says, some of the property is situated in that District. However, the defendant, on the ground that, having regard to the issues raised by the suit and the general convenience of the parties in view of the nature of the evidence which will have to be called on both sides in the suit, has applied to this Court to transfer the case from Shahjahanpur and altogether from these Provinces in order that it may be tried in the appropriate Court in the Yeotmal District of the Berars in the Central Provinces.

INAYATULLAH KHAN v. NISAR AHMAD KHAN.

The question of principle raised by the application was not very seriously argued, but our attention was drawn to certain reported cases which make it desirable that we should express our views definitely upon the question. No case is reported on the subject in the authorized reports, Allahabad series, since the year 1882 (I. L. R. 5 Allahabad). There have been decisions which have found their way into modern reports and we prefer to follow the decision reported in Subba Bibi v. Maqbool Hussain (1), a decision by a member of this Court sitting alone, who followed the view taken by the older case of Tula Ram v. Harjiwan Das (2), and the invariable practice as it was then established in England (that old practice has now been codified in England in the form of a special rule), namely, to insist upon any litigant applying for transfer to make out a strong case of the balance of convenience. In Tula Ram v. Harjiwan Das (2), already referred to, the Court recognised that as the real test although it decided against the transfer. There is one further material case, namely, Madho Prasad v. Moti Chand (3) (another single Judge decision) where a member of this Court declined to adopt that rule and held, without reference to any previous authority, that the mere convenience of the parties was not a good test. We come to the conclusion that that view is not a sound one. After all, the convenience of the parties in the conduct of litigation is certainly a relevant consideration, and it is, perhaps, not too much to say that it is the basis of nearly all statutory jurisdiction on the civil side.

That being the state of the law, the plaintiff in this case, as in every other, has undoubtedly a prima facie right to decide the place of trial. The defendant may show, as he does here, exceptional circumstances. The question is, whether those circumstances are such as to make it right to override the wish of the plaintiff and to direct the trial to take place at the most convenient Tribunal. The defendant's main contention in this application is that he has to defend the deeds made in his favour against an attack made upon them by the plaintiff, and that both the attack and the defence must in the end turn upon the local evidence in the place where the deeds were executed, the suggestion being that they were executed by the deceased man in a condition of such ill health as to make him either of not sufficiently sound disposing mind, or subject to the improper influences of some interested party so as to deprive him of the free exercise of his own volition.

To this contention the plaintiff makes several answers :—

Firstly, he alleges that his pedigree has been disputed. As to this the defendant has, by paragraph 6 of his own affidavit, sworn on the 20th of December 1921, admitted the plaintiff to be the cousin of the deceased man, and his Counsel Mr. Bajpai in this Court on this application on his behalf formally admitted the plaintiff to be the heir of the deceased man. These admissions are binding upon both parties to the suit and this issue is, therefore, out of the suit and dispenses with a considerable number of witnesses who would otherwise be necessary from Shahjahanpur.

Secondly, the plaintiff makes the point that the ancestral home of both parties is in Shahjahanpur, that the wives of the deceased Abdul Jalil Khan lived there for the greater part of the time, and that some of the property in suit is situated there. This may be so. The points are really immaterial to the suit. The main issue will be, as we have stated, the condition of health and mind of the donor for some time antecedent to the alleged execution of the deeds and during the period between such execution and his death, and also the extent and nature of the influence exercised upon him during that period. Admittedly, during this period the donor lived at Pusad, according to the plaintiff, for six months only, according to the defendant for nearly a year It, therefore, appears from the position of both parties that the res gestæ and the appropriate witnesses on this head are situated at Pusad. Thirdly, the plaintiff makes a point of the language question. This would be a serious if not an insuperable objection to transfer if it were likely to affect the merits or the satisfactory disposal of the suit. The difficulty of language is one which is common to litigation in many parts of India, particularly when the parties belong to and speak the language of one Province and the events in issue occurred in a Province where many material witnesses speak an entirely different one. In this case the difficulty to some extent cuts both ways. Moreover, inasmuch as the plaintiff has traded in Pusad for some years through a general attorney, with personal visits of his own, it is inconceivable that he has no one even in his own employ who can interpret Urdu and instruct a local lawyer in the language of the Court, particularly when a great part of the necessary instructions can only relate to the collection and preparation of local evidence from people who speak the language of the Court. This difficulty can be met by making it part of our order that any special costs of translating the record as it stands up to date, and reasonably to be incurred in employing an interpreter, if the plaintiff has none in his own employment, should be allowed as part of the costs of the suit in addition to those ordinarily allowed by the Court.

Fourthly, there is the further point of the danger of delay based evidently upon some dilatory criminal proceedings which have already taken place in the Central Provinces. We have no ground for supposing that the appropriate Civil Court in the Central Provinces, where the plaintiff will have to sue, will be less disposed to prevent avoidable delay than the Court at Shahjahanpur. We can at least make it clear that, in our view, any attempts by the defendant unduly to delay the disposal, if they appear to be made mala fide as the result of this order, ought to be punished in the Trial Court by special orders as to costs thrown away or unduly incurred.

On the other hand, the defendant alleges that he will have to call more than 20 local witnesses. On the question how many he proposes to call, the plaintiff only mentions Urdu speaking witnesses in Pusad but he does not allege that he proposes to call no strictly local witnesses. This is significant. It is almost certain that he will have to call some. He lays stress on 4 or 5 Urdu-speaking witnesses in Pusad but there is obviously no difficulty about these if an interpreter is present even if they cannot speak Marathi. One is said to be a medical man whom it is obviously more convenient to keep near his patients, as far as possible. The plaintiff also lays stress upon four witnesses whom he will have to call from Shahjahanpur on the question of the deceased man's illness. But as there must be some transfer of witnesses in any event, there seems no great hardship in their attending the Court in person as they attended the place where the deceased lay ill.

The question of possession of the house at Shahjahanpur on which the plaintiff also lays stress is clearly a subsidiary one. The three witnesses whom he proposes to call can be duly examined on commission and ought to be so examined, particularly on a point on which evidence of purely eye-witnesses is notoriously vague, irrelevant and unreliable.

On the whole, having regard to the attitude adopted by the defendant, and not without hesitation, we come to the conclusion that the balance of convenience is in favour of the Central Provinces, and that the case must be transferred from the jurisdiction of these Provinces to enable the plaintiff to sue at the appropriate Court in the Central Provinces, the defendant undertaking to do nothing unduly to delay the trial, to contribute Rs. 100 in any event, to the Pleaders' fees already paid by the plaintiff to his lawyers, and not to object to the reasonable costs of translation of the present record and of the interpretation of the evidence being made costs in the cause. The costs of this application will abide the event.

Second appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Aligarh, reversing that of the Munsif, Haveli.

Mr. Panna Lal, for the Appellants.

Mr. G. W. Dillon, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff, Musammat Manna Kunwar, sued to recover a sum of money due on a ruqqa executed by the defendants in favour of one Kishori Lal. The plaintiff's allegation was that the money was advanced by her and that Kishori Lal, in whose name it was drawn, was merely her benamidar as she was parda-nashin; Kishori Lal had died without heirs and the plaintiff was entitled to recover the money on this ruqqa. The defence was, so far as we are now concerned, that the plaintiff could not maintain the suit. The Trial Court found all the issues of fact in favour of the plaintiff, namely, that she had advanced the money in cash to the defendants who had executed the ruqqa benami in the name of Kishori Lal who was a near relation of the plaintiff. The Trial Court, however, dismissed the suit on the ground that under section 78 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, read with section 8 of that Act, Musammat Munna Kunwar could not maintain the suit. She appealed. The learned Subordinate Judge agreed with all the findings of fact found by the Trial Court but held that the suit was, nevertheless, maintainable. What he says is this:—"The ruqqa in question is an agreement. It provides for interest and is payable on demand. It is true that under section 78 of the Negotiable Instruments Act only the holder can sue whether the instrument is negotiable or not, but the rule does not apply to agreements. I hold that the ruqqa in question is an agreement and the cestui que trust can sue on it." He, nevertheless, calls the document a ruqqa. We have read the document and there is no doubt whatsoever that it falls within the definition of a promissory-note given in section 4 of the Negotiable Instruments Act. The learned Counsel who appears for the respondent does not, and indeed could not, support the reasoning of the learned Subordinate Judge, but he argues that section 78 of the Negotiable Instruments Act does not bar a suit by the person really entitled to the money payable under a promissory-note. It bars the payment out of Court, it is argued, to any one except the payment as defined in section 8 of the Act so as to get a valid discharge, and that that is all it does, and he relies on the case of Gurumurti v. Sivayya (1). That case certainly does seem to support his contention, but no reference in that case is made to the provisions of the Act. That judgment, however, has been considered in three later cases by the Madras High Court. In Ramanuja Ayyangar v. Sadagopa Ayyangar (2) a Divisional Bench of that Court dissented from it. It was, however, again considered by a Full Bench of the same High Court in Subba Narayana Vathiyar v. Ramaswami Aiyar (3). It is true that that case was the converse of the present case. There it was held that a defendant could not set up the plea that the plaintiff who sued on a promissory-note and in whose name the promissory note was, was not in fact the real owner. That is true, but in the course of the judgment the case of Gurumurti v. Sivayya (1) was expressly overruled. In Subramanya Tevan v. Arunachala Tevan (4) this latter case was followed. In our own Court, in the case of Dori Lal v. Sewak Ram (5), the point was considered by a Judge sitting alone. The facts there were on all fours with the Appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge, Amraoti, dated 31st July 1919, in Civil Suit No. 8 of 1917.

Mr. G. V. Kukday and Sir B. K. Bose, for the Appellants.

Messrs. N. M. Pedgaokar and K. K. Gardhe, for the Respondents.

FACTS appear from the following dissentient judgments of Kotval and Macnair, A. J. C.s, dated the 25th September 1920:

KOTVAL, A. J. C.—This appeal arises out of a suit to enforce a mortgage-deed, dated the 5th July 1912, executed by defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and by Musammat Yashodi who acted as the guardian of her minor sons defendants Nos. 3 and 4, their father Kisan, defendent No. 16, being insane. The mortgagor defendants' relationship appears from the following genealogical table :—

SHANKER

- Thakuram,
  - Nathu, defendant No. 1, mortgagor
    - Pundlik, defendant No. 15, minor.
- Kisan = Musammat Yashodi, defendant No. 16, insane
  - Bhagwan, defendant No. 2 mortgagor.
  - Moti, defendant No. 3, minor, mortgagor.
  - Deorao defendant No. 4, minor, mortgagor.

Defendants Nos. 5 to 12 are subsequent lessees of the mortgaged property under Nathu and defendants Nos. 13 and 14 are subsequent purchasers of a part of it from Bhagwan and his brothers. The mortgage-deed secures a sum of Rs. 20,000 made up as follows :—

Rs. 12,000, due to Balkrishna Ramchandra Oka on prior mortgages agreed to be paid be the mortgagees.

Rs. 7,000, due to plaintiffs on prior bonds and a balance of accounts.

Rs. 1,000, due to Balwant Sakharam Lakhe on a prior mortgage by Yashodi Bai on behalf of Bhagwan during his minority agreed to be paid by the mortgagees.

The plaintiffs stated that Rs. 4,000 out of the Rs. 7,000 due to the plaintiffs were owed by Nathu alone and Rs. 3,000 by Bhagwan and his brothers. The lower Court held that Rs. 1,700, the amount of a bond plus interest thereon Rs. 324 2-0 total Rs. 2,024-2-0 were due by Bhagwan and Rs. 4,000 by Nathu. Nathu and his interest in the mortgaged property were held liable for Rs 16,000 and Bhagwan and his interest for Rs. 3,0 9 2-0. The lower Court declined to make Nathu and Bhagwan liable each for the other's debts in spite of the joint liability undertaken by them in the mortgage bond. The suit was dismissed against defendants Nos. 3, 4 on the ground that no legal necessity was proved and as against defendant No. 15, Pandlik, on the further ground that the debts were incurred by Nathu for immoral purposes. The liability of defendants Nos. 5 to 12 was made co-extensive with that of Bhagwan. Defendant No. 16, Kisan, was held to have no interest in the family property and no decree was passed against him

I do not refer to the numerous pleas raised in defence, such as the nominal nature of the transaction of mortgage, want of due attestation, minority of defendant No. 2 at the date of the execution of the mortgage, an agreement by the plaintiffs with defendant No. 2 not to recover the mortgage-debt from him or his estate, the exercise of undue influence, misrepresentation and fraud by the plaintiffs against defendant No. 2 and the penal nature of the interest claimed by the plaintiffs, or to the pleas raised by the plaintiffs that Pandlik was not entitled to contest the plaintiff's claim on the ground that he was not born at the date of the mortgage and that the debts were borrowed for legal necessity. The issues bearing on these pleas have been decided by the lower Court against the parties raising them and the findings of the lower Court thereon are not challenged before us. An issue regarding the antecedent nature of Nathu's debts and Pandlik's liability therefor was not decided in view of the finding that the debts were incurred for immoral purposes.

The plaintiffs have appealed, and only two contentions are pressed before us on their behalf,—

(1) that each of the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 should be made jointly and severally liable for the total of the amounts in respect of which they are held liable,

(2) that defendant No. 15 Pandlik's interest in the joint property should be made liable for the amount for which Nathu has been found liable, on the ground that it constituted Nathu's antecedent debts which are not proved to have been incurred for immoral purposes.

Nathu and Bhagwan have not appeared in this Court: the only contesting party here is Pandlik.

As regards the first contention, I am of opinion that it must succeed. The grounds on which the lower Court has made Nathu and Bhagwan each liable only for debts found due from himself appear in the following passages in paragraphs 28 and 40 of its judgment:—

"In view of the observations in paragraphs 19 and 20 of this judgment, it is clear that defendant No. 2 cannot be said to have executed the bond for no consideration. Mr. Oka's debt was contracted by Nathu alone. It does not appear to have been contracted for the benefit of defendant No. 2 or his brothers or their estate. But Rs. 995 were due by him and his brothers to Lakha and that sum was subsequently paid by plaintiffs to Lakha. Besides, defendant No. 2 owed at least Rs. 1,700 to plaintiffs on the bond for that sum executed by himself and that sum with about Rs. 323 for interest was due by him. He was not, of course, liable to plaintiffs for the khata debts shown in the account-books of plaintiffs as due by Nathu alone as all those debts were admittedly borrowed by Nathu alone after the partition. Thus the circumstances under which Bhagwan executed the deed were that he was indebted to the extent of about Rs. 3,000 and Rs. 4,000 were to be re-paid by him and his brothers under the arrangement mentioned in the deed of partition. He had just merged from minority. The elderly person in the family to whom he could look up for guidance and advice was his mother—an illiterate woman. He was dealing with Mr. Oka, a Pleader, and with plaintiffs who are and were professional money lenders; and we find him under the circumstances incurring joint and several liability to pay Rs. 20,000 when in fact he was liable to pay about Rs. 3),00) or Rs. 7,000 at the utmost and mortgaging—with his mother—the entire property belonging to him and his minor brothers. This may not be fraud, it may not have been brought about by misrepresentation or undue influence. But it is something unfair to the minors and to defendant No. 2, Bhagwan, who though not minor was not of mature understanding. It does not appear to be an act done with free consent. At any rate, it cannot be said to be prudent.

"* * * In spite of of the admissions in the mortgage deed (Exhibit P-1) the receipt (Exhibit P-3) and the application (Exhibit P-12) I am not prepared to hold Bhagwan liable for more than Rs. 995 paid to Lakha, Rs. 1,700 for which he had executed a bond, and Rs. 324 2-0 interest on Rs. 1,700 for 9 months and 16 days. Total Rs. 3,019-2-0 and interest on this sum from the date of the mortgage deed, because plaintiff attempted to prove other items and failed to prove them and also because Bhagwan was not at all liable to pay Nathu's debts and his promise to pay them was without consideration and appears to have been secured without his free consent, taking advantage of the fact that he had just emerged from minority and was an inexperienced youth with none to advise him except his insane father and illiterate mother. Similarly, I would not hold Nathu, much less his minor son, liable for what was due not by him by the other branch of the family, as the arrangement by which his liability was to be shared by the other branch fails and the arrangement itself appears to be collusive."

The plea of defendant No. 2 was that his signature to the mortgage-deed was obtained by a representation that the document only effected a mortgage of Nathu's property and that he was not signing it as an executant but merely to secure his release from the obligation to pay his own and Nathu's debts. He did not plead that, though he agreed to pay Nathu's debt jointly with him, there was no consideration for the promise. Nathu remained absent and did not contest the suit at all. Whether there was consideration for the promise or not is a question of fact and, in the absence of any definite plea on the point, I think that the lower Court was not justified in absolving the defendants Nathu and Bhagwan from their liability under the mortgage-deed to pay the combined debts of both. As between Nathu and Bhagwan there is no doubt that there was consideration for the promise of each to be jointly liable for the other's debt. So far as the plaintiff is concerned, there was one joint promise from the two mortgagors for which there was a single consideration moving from the mortgagees, namely, the satisfaction and paying up of the debts of both and the question as to what was the consideration for the individual promise of either of them does not arise. In any case, as I have already stated, in the absence of specific pleas it is not possible to hold that there was no consideration for the individual promises of Nathu and Bhagwan.

With regard to the lower Court's remark that the promise of Bhagwan was secured without his free consent, I am unable to find any foundation for it in any fact proved or admitted. It is found that he was major at the time of the execution of the mortgage and that there was no undue influence, fraud or misrepresentation used against him. It is not complained that the burden of proving these was wrongly laid on him. It is not alleged that there was any coercion or mistake. I fail to see the force of the lower Court's remark that the arrangement for joint liability was collusive. Under these circumstances, I hold that Nathu and Bhagwan and their interest in the mortgaged property are jointly liable for the total amount found due from both of them.

The second contention of the appellants refers to the liability of Pandlik's share of the joint family property for the debts found to be due from Nathu. It is contended that these constitute antecedent debts of Nathu for which Pandlik's interest in the joint property is liable and that the finding of the lower Court that they were incurred for immoral purposes is wrong since no connection between the debts and Nathu's immoralities is established. The finding of the lower Court on this point is that Nathu was addicted to drinking, gambling and spending money on prostitutes, and that the fact that the period of these immoralities coincides with the period of his borrowings establishes a sufficient connection between the immoralities and the debts. This leads to an examination of the evidence as to the immoralities and their connection with the debts.

A number of rulings have been cited by the appellants' learned Advocate in support of his contention that it is not sufficient merely to show that the father was of immoral and extravagant habits in order to enable the son to claim exemption from the payment of his father's antecedent debts, but it must also be shown that the money borrowed was applied to immoral purposes. In the present case, as is admitted by the learned Advocate for the respondent, Pandlik, it is not proved that any specific sum borrowed was so applied. But in my opinion such proof is not indispensible. The issue whether the debts were contracted for immoral purposes is one of fact and may be proved by inference from evidence showing that they were contracted during a period of extravagant immoral habits. But in such a case there must be definite and convincing proof that the immoral practices were co-temporary with the loans and could not have been indulged in without the use of the borrowed amounts. I am unable to hold that the evidence in this case is of that kind. That Nathu used to drink is probable, but the evidence of the defence witnesses on the point appears to exaggerate this vice of his. I am unable to attach much importance to the evidence of the ex-Tehsildar (15 D. W. 4) which amounts only to this, that he visited Nathu's village four or five times in 1912 and remembers to have seen him drunk, but how often he cannot say. Nor do I think it safe to rely on 15 D. W. 20 and 15 D. W. 7 whose evidence is adduced to prove Nathu's extravagance due to drinking. These alone are the witnesses to whom any reference is specifically made by the lower Court. The other evidence refers in general terms to Nathu's habits of drinking, gambling and spending money on shows and prostitutes The witnesses appear to be indulging in exaggeration and their statements appear to be haphazard and made without any sense of responsibility. I am not satisfied that such immoral practices have been proved as could not be indulged in without an expenditure approximating to the amount of the loans.

I note that no question regarding Nathu's immoral habits was put to defendant No. 2 Bhagwan (2 D. W. 3) or his mother Yashodi (2 D. W. 1). Nathu, as was to be expected, has kept himself out of the witness-box, though as appears from the evidence of 15 D. W. 21 he must be conducting this litigation.

The defendants' evidence does not also satisfactorily prove that the periods of the immoral habits and the loans were synchronous 15 D. W. 10 and 15 D. W. 18 make out that Nathu's vices began five or seven years before September 1918 when they were examined and 15 D. W. 7, 15 D. W. 8, 15 D. W. 11, and 15 D. W. 14 give instances of extravagance and immorality occurring within the same period. Now, though the bond in suit is dated the 5th August 1912 and Rs. 12,000 were paid on Nathu's behalf to Oka on and after that day, yet this amount was due to the latter on account of mortgage-bonds executed in 1907 and 1908 and the sum of Rs. 4,000 due to the plaintiffs from Nathu which is incorporated in the bond in suit is not altogether a new borrowing but a balance due on account of previous transactions. I am of opinion that there is not sufficient proof to enable us to arrive at a distinct finding that the debts were contracted for immoral purposes.

It is contended on behalf of Pandlik that, in any case, the amount of Rs. 12,000 does not constitute an antecedent debt as it was borrowed on the security of the joint family property. Reliance is placed in support of this contention on Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (1) where at page 447* their Lordships of the Privy Council observe,—

"The law was thus stated by Lord Hobhouse in Nanoni Baburain v. Modhun Mohun (2),— 'Destructive as it may be of the principle of independent co-parcenary rights in the sons, the decisions have, for some time, established the principle that the sons cannot set up their rights against their father's alienation for an antecedent debt, or against his creditor's remedies for their debts, if not tainted with immorality. On this important question of the liability of the joint estate their Lordships think that there is now no conflict of authority.'

"In their Lordships' opinion these expressions which have been the subject of so much difference of legal opinion, do not give any countenance to the idea that the joint family estate can be effectively sold or charged in such a manner as to bind the issue of the father, except where the sale or charge has been made in order to discharge an obligation not only antece-dently incurred, but incurred wholly apart from the ownership of the joint estate or the security afforded or supposed to be available by such joint estate. The exception being allowed, as in the state of the authorities it must be, it appears to their Lordships to apply, and to apply to the case where the father's debts have been incurred irrespective of the credit obtainable from immoveable assets which do not personally belong to him but are joint family property."

The appellants' Advocate relies on Arumugham Chetty v. Muthu Koundan (3) where the above ruling is explained, and it is held that their Lordships of the Privy Council did not intend to lay down the proposition that the antecedent debt must be one which was not incurred on the security of the joint family property. The view taken by the Madras High Court in this case is that this question was not before their Lordships, that the statement in their judgment that the antecedent debt must be one which was not incurred on the security of joint family property is an obiter dictum and that, in view of the great disturbance of titles which is likely to result from the application of the principle appearing in that statement, their Lordships cannot be taken to have intended to lay down a principle for general application. It is said that the only question before their Lordships was whether there should not be a real antecedency or whether was enough that the debt was incurred contemporaneously with, or a short time before, the alienation, the conflict on which their Lordships were then settling. With due respect to this opinion it seems to me that their Lordships who were deciding the question as to the nature of an antecedent debt an alienation for which would be binding on the son, must be taken to have considered the principle governing the nature of such debt in all its aspects, and that they were not likely to have referred to an aspect which they did not intend the Subordinate Courts to be guided by.

It is true their Lordships were settling a conflict on the question whether a debt borrowed on the occasion of the grant of a mortgage was an antecedent debt, but in meeting the argument that a debt which was borrowed a short time before granting the mortgage would be de facto antecedent, their Lordships appear to rule that the mere lapse of time is not the sole factor in the determination of the question of antecedency, but that the intention or understanding at the time of the loan is also to be considered. If at the time the loan was borrowed there was an understanding that a mortgage of the joint family estate was to be granted, then, as I think, in their Lordships' opinion the loan would not constitute an antecedent debt binding on the son. This is what I understand is meant by their Lordships when they say at page 449*: "In truth, in order to validate such a transaction of mortgage there must, to give true effect to the doctrine of antecedency in time, be also real dissociation in fact." This principle of dissociation in fact is the principle that the debt must also be one "incurred wholly apart from the ownership of the joint estate or the security afforded or supposed to be available by such joint estate."

Where a creditor has lent money to the father originally on the security of the joint family estate and later on a fresh mortgage is granted for the same money it may well be taken that the security afforded by the second mortgage is in pursuance of the original intention to make the estate security for the debt and that the debt is, therefore, not dissociated in fact from the alienation.

If a debt secured by a mortgage of the joint family property is to be treated as an antecedent debt when a second mortgage is executed in respect of it the result would be that a transaction, which was originally of no force as constituting, according to their Lordships of the Privy Council, a breach of trust, would be legalised by what really is a repetition of that breach.

I think that their Lordships did intend to lay down the rule that the antecedent debt must be one which was not incurred on the security of the joint family property and that we are bound by it. This opinion finds support in First Appeal No. 70 of 1917 decided by Mittra, A. J. C., [Dileshwar Ram Brahman v Nohar Singh (4)] and Second Appeal No. 291 of 1918 decided by Finlay, A. J. C., [Nanhusao v. Ganpati (5)] and in Brij Narain Rai v. Mangla Prasad (6) and Badagila Jogi Naidu v. Bendalam Papiah Naidu (7) the case overruled in Arumugham Chetty v. Muthu Koundan (3). It is, however, contended that the debts due to Oka were not wholly borrowed on the security of the joint family property but consisted partly of previous cash advances. The lower Court has not decided the issue as to the antecedency of the debts and this point will have to be further considered.

As regards the debt of Rs. 4,000 due to the plaintiffs it is admitted by Pandlik's Advocate that it would be antecedent, but it is contended that it has not been proved as against Pandlik, and in this connection reference is made to paragraphs 38 and 39 of the lower Court's judgment. In paragraph 38, in considering the question of legal necessity for the sum of Rs. 3,000 found due by Bhagwan, the lower Court states that "the plaintiffs did not care to have their account-books proved." Paragraph 39 is as follows :—

"I have not considered in detail the legal necessity for the sums borrowed by Nathu as Pandlik's liability is to be decided on a different consideration, viz, if the debts borrowed were antecedent. However, I may say generally that in connection with those sums also, the account-books are not proved and legal necessity has not been established; nor have the plaintiffs proved that they advanced the sum after any inquiry regarding the evidence of a necessity. All that they appear to have cared for is whether Nathu's property was large."

I cannot accept this as a proper finding that the amount has not been proved to be advanced. The plaintiffs have filed Exhibit P-5, a bond, dated the 5th July 1911, for Rs. 2,500 the last one executed by Nathu in his favour—which has been held to be proved. They have also filed an extract from their account books, Exhibit P-8, and as P. W. No. 2 the plaintiff Sheonarain has stated how the sum of Rs. 4,000 had become due from Nathu. The Pleader for Pandlik did not cross-examine him at all on these matters, and, under the circumstances, I consider that this amount which has been admitted by Nathu in the mortgage-bond in suit and has been held proved against him has been sufficiently proved also as against Pandlik.

I propose to remand the case to the lower Court for a decision of the question (a) how much of the Rs. 12,000 due to Oka was borrowed from him on mortgages of the joint family property, (b) how much of the amount borrowed from Oka on mortgages of joint family property constituted antecedent debts at the time of the mortgages to him, and (c) how much of the Rs. 12,000 was on account of advances made by Oka unsecured by mortgages of joint family property at any time. Pandlik will be liable for amounts (b) and (c). Such additional pleadings and evidence as the parties desire or the Court deems necessary will be taken. After the decision of the above questions a decree will be passed in consonance with it and with the findings given in this judgment. Cost in this Court will abide the result.

MACLEAN, A. J. C.—I have fully considered the reasoning given by my learned brother for his decision that Rs. 12,000 out of the consideration has not been proved to be antecedent debt. I find myself unable to concur in this decision. The facts which require to be stated, as follows. In 1907 and 1903 Nathu executed two mortgages in favour of Oka purporting to bind the joint family estate. It is uncertain whether he received the whole of the consideration on the occasion of executing these mortgages, but for the purpose of considering this question of law it may be assumed that he received the consideration at the time the mortgages were executed. In 1912 he executed a fresh mortgage in favour of the plaintiff in order to pay off the debts incurred in 1907 and 1903.

The question for consideration is, therefore, this: a father borrowed certain sums and at the time of borrowing executed mortgages purporting to bind the joint family estate. After some years he executed a fresh mortgage in order to pay off these debts. Can a son impeach the subsequent alienation on the ground that these debts are not such antecedent debts as those to which Lord Hobhouse in Nanomi Babuasin v. Modhun Mohun (2) referred?

3. In order to appreciate the bearing of the observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (1) quoted by my learned brother, it is necessary to consider the whole of the pages 447, 448 and 449*. The paragraph which precedes the portion quoted by my learned brother is as follows :—

"It is denied that the mortgage can be held to have been granted for an antecedent debt. Antecedent debt, it is said, there was none, and to call a borrowing made on the occasion of the grant of a mortgage an antecedent debt is to extend unduly and improperly the whole scope of the exception on that topic. As to this unfortunately there has been much difference of view in the Courts in India."

After the portion quoted, their Lordships state,—

"In their view of the rights of a father and his creditors, if the principle were extended further, then the exception would be made so wide as in effect to extinguish the sound and wholesome principle itself, viz., that no manager, guardian, or trustee can be entitled for his own purposes to dispose of the estate which is under his charge. In short, it may be said that the rule of this part of the Mitakshara Law is that the joint family estate is in this position: under his management he can neither obtain money for his own purposes for it nor can he obtain money for his own purposes upon it. To permit him to do so would enable him to sacrifice those rights which he was bound to conserve. This would be equivalent to sanctioning a plain and, it might be, a deliberate breach of trust. The Mitakshara Law does not warrant or legalize any such transaction."

Their Lordships then say,—

"The limits of the principle of the exception have been thus set forth because in their Lordships' opinion they form a guide to the settlement of the conflict of authority in India on the subject of antecedent debt."

In my opinion, then, there can be no doubt that their Lordships' attention was solely devoted to the settlement of the question whether borrowing made on the occasion of the grant of a mortgage could be called antecedent debt. Their remarks were intended to form a guide to the settlement of the conflict of authority in India on this subject. At the foot of page 448 their Lordships again indicate clearly by citing certain cases, what is the conflict of authorities to which they refer.

The quotation which is made by Sadhagiri Ayyar, J., in Arumugham Chetty v. Muthu Koundan (3) is extremely pertinent,— "Dicta by Judges, however eminent, ought not to be cited as establishing authoritatively propositions of law unless these dicta really form integral parts of the train of reasoning directed to the real question decided. They may, if they occur merely at large, be valuable for edification, but they are not binding."

I have, therefore, to consider whether the language of their Lordships makes it absolutely clear that they would have held that the obligations incurred by Nathu in 1907 and 1908 were not in 1912 antecedent debts.

7. In the first place, I remark that every one of their Lordships' remarks can be satisfactorily construed as referring to the question whether a borrowing made on the occasion of a grant of a mortgage can be called an antecedent debt. The words "an obligation not only antecedently incurred but incurred wholly apart from the ownership of the joint estate or the security afforded or supposed to be available by such joint estate," at first sight offer a little difficulty but they clearly refer to an argument which in another shape is discussed at the end of the judgment. The obligation mentioned in the words quoted is one de facto antecedent in so far that it was incurred an hour, a day, or a year before the alienation took place: but one not in fact dissociated from that alienation.

In the next place, a considerable portion of the reasoning of their Lordships has not direct application to the question I am now considering. The mortgage-deeds of 1907 and 1908 did not bind the joint family estate. Nathu may be considered to have attempted to commit breaches of trusts in 1907 and 1903 but the attempt was unsuccessful since the deeds did not bind the joint family estate. To hold that the deed of 1912 is binding on the estate does not in effect extinguish the sound and cogent principle that no manager can be entitled for his own purposes to dispose of the estate which is under his charge; for, as soon as the law laid down in Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (1) becomes universally known, a mortgagor will be able to borrow only on his own estate even if he execute bonds such as those executed in 1907 and 1908 which purport to bind, but do not bind, the joint family estate.

Again, their Lordships would have been very reluctant to vary the long established practice regarding the antecedent debt. In considering the conflict of authority they laid stress on the point that the power of a father to alienate property in consideration of an antecedent debt was an exception from a general and sound principle, and remarked that this exception should not be extended. But the exception is allowed because of the settled state of the law and the case for restricting the exception by variation of the settled law is very different from the case for extending that variation in directions where there is conflict of authority. I entirely agree with the opinion of Wallis, C. J., [Arumugham Chetty v. Muthu Koundan (3)] that all Courts in India, the legal profession, and the public know of no restriction of the terms of antecedent debt such as their Lordships are supposed to have favoured. I agree also with the remarks of Sadasiva Ayyar, J., on pages 720 and 731*, regarding the inconvenience which would be caused by variation of the settled law.

I add that if the remarks of their Lordships are held to have varied the settled law it appears to me that much litigation will be necessary in order to ascertain the extent of the variation. I assume that it will be held that obligations incurred on the occasion of the grant of a mortgage purporting to bind the family estate cannot justify subsequent alienations. But the question remains whether it follows from the fact that no such mortgage was executed that the obligation was incurred wholly apart from the security supposed to be available by the joint estate. The parties to a simple bond may still have been influenced by the idea that the obligee at a future period may bind the joint estate for re-payment of the obligation.

I have perused the judgments in Brij Narain Rai v. Mangla Prasad (6), Badagala Jogi Naidu v. Bendalum Papiah Naidu (7) and the unreported ruling mentioned by my learned brother. The Judges who decided these cases had not the advantage of reading the careful judgments in the Madras Full Bench case Arumugham Chetty v. Muthu Koundan (3). With the greatest respect, I give my opinion that they did not appreciate that their Lordships' remarks were directed to the settling of the conflict of a particular matter. I remark that the Judges in Brij Narain Rai v. Mangla Prasad (6) mentioned the fact that the law was understood to support a mortgage such as that made by Nathu in the present case previous to the decision of Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (1). With the greatest respect, I give my opinion that the judgment of Spencer, J., in Badagala Jogi Naidu v. Bendalam Papiah Naidu (7) contains a fallacy. I refer to the second paragraph on page 314. It is undoubtedly open to a father to incur a debt at one time and subsequently execute a mortgage binding on the son's interest in order to pay that debt. The only restriction is that the two transactions must be dissociated in fact. The decision of the Privy Council renders of no effect a mortgage-deed executed at the time the debt was first incurred. I cannot see that if the later mortgage-deed is considered binding even if an ineffectual mortgage-deed was previously executed the sanction of law will be given to the evil which the Privy Council seek to avoid.

I hold, therefore, that the dicta of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (1) do not overrule the uniform course of decisions in all High Courts. I consider, therefore, that I should follow that uniform course of decisions. I entirely agree with the findings of my learned brother on all other points in this case and consider it unnecessary to add to what he has stated.

My view renders the remand of the case to the lower Court unnecessary. I propose that the decree of the lower

*Pages of 42 M—[Ed.]

Court should be set aside and a decree be passed in accordance with the prayer in the plaint.

ORDER.

KOTVAL, A. J. C. AND MACNAIR, A. J. C.—As there is a difference of opinion amongst us it is referred under section 10 (b) (ii), Central Provinces Courts Act, to such other Judge as the Judicial Commissioner may appoint.

The point of law upon which we differ is stated in the judgment of Macnair, A. J. C.

BATTEN, OFFG. J. C.—(September 25, 1920.)—Hallifax, A. J. C. will kindly sit to hear this reference.

OPINION.

HALLIFAX, A. J. C.—(December 20, 1920). The question referred to me for decision has nowhere been definitely stated. The order of reference says that it is stated in the judgment of Macnair, A. J. C., but I can find in that judgment only a statement of the question before the Bench, in these terms: "A father borrowed certain sums and at the time of borrowing executed mortgages purporting to bind the joint family estate. After some years he executed a fresh mortgage in order to pay off these debts. Can a son impeach the subsequent alienation on the ground that these debts are not such antecedent debts as those to which Lord Hobhouse in Nanomi Babuasin v. Mohun Mohun (2) referred?" This question, as it stands, obviously cannot be answered because the data are insufficient. It appears that one Nathu borrowed certain sums of money in 1907 and 1908 and on each occasion executed a mortgage of his ancestral property. In 1912 he executed another mortgage of the same property, of which the consideration was the amount due on the two previous mortgages of 1907 and 1908. His minor son Pandlik now impeaches the mortgage of 1912, and it is pleaded by the mortgagees that the consideration of that mortgage is, therefore, binding on him and his share in the property. Kotval, A. J. C., is of opinion that the consideration of the two previous mortgages, except such portion of it as may have been due by Nathu before he executed those mortgages, cannot be held to have been in 1912 such an antecedent debt as would bind the share of his son, in view of the ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (1). Macnair, A. J. C., considers that the fact that Nathu secured the debts by mortgages in 1907 and 1908 does not, in the circumstances of this case, make the mortgage of 1912 any less binding on the share of the son.

The actual point of difference between my two learned brothers was the interpretation of the ruling in Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (1), but I take it that the question referred to me is the rather wider one, whether, in the circumstances of this case, the consideration of the mortgage of 1912 was an antecedent debt due by Nathu of such a character that the mortgage would bind the share of his son Pandlik. I have no hesitation in saying that it was, and that the difficult question of interpretation of a ruling which has been discussed does not arise at all, for this reason. When the mortgage of 1912 was executed Pandalik was in gremio matris. In 1907 and 1908, therefore, he was not even in that inchoate existence that would give him a vested interest in the ancestral property in the hands of Nathu. The property in which Pandlik became a co-parcener at his birth in 1912, or rather at his conception, was that originally held by Nathu minus what he had alienated in 1907 and 1908. In those years Nathu had no co-parceners. He was sole owner of the property and, to use the words of their Lordships in the case mentioned, this is a "case where the father's debts have been incurred irrespective of the credit obtainable from immoveable assets which do not personally belong to him but are joint family property." My answer to the question referred is, therefore, that the consideration of the mortgage of 1912 was an antecedent debt due by Nathu of such a character as to make the mortgage binding on the share of his son Pandlik in the property.

JUDGMENT.

BATTEN & KOTVAL, A. J. Cs.—(February 15, 1921).—The reference to a third Judge has now been decided, and it has been held that the mortgage of 1912 is binding on the share of Pandlik. A decree must, therefore, be passed in accordance with the judgment of Macnair, A. J. C. The last paragraph of his judgment is as follows:—

"* * * I propose that the decree of the lower Court should be set aside and a decree be passed in accordance with the prayer in the plaint."

An application has been filed on behalf of defendants-respondents Nos. 3 and 4, Moti and Deorao, urging that the claim was not pressed against them in appeal and no decree as prayed for in the plaint should be passed against them. On behalf of Pundlik it is pointed out that, although a decree for foreclosure was asked for in the plaint, the first Court passed only a decree for sale and a decree in accordance with the plaint will involve the reversal of the first Court's decision on a point not appealed against by the plaintiffs.

We have heard the appellants' Advocate and he concedes that the judgment means that a decree be passed for the claim in the plaint as modified in appeal and that the contentions on behalf of Moti, Deorao and Pundlik are correct.

A decree will now be drawn up as follows:—

The suit is dismissed as against defendants Nos. 3, 4 and 16, Moti, Deorao and Kisan. Defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 5 to 15 are ordered to pay Rs. 19,019-2-0 and interest thereon at Re. 1 per cent. per mensem from the 5th July 1912 to the 15th January 1913 and at Re. 1-8-0, per cent. per mensem from the 16th January 1913 to the 11th May 1917 and at Re. 1-4-0 per cent. per mensem from the 12th May 1917 to the 15th August 1921, the date fixed for payment, and costs in both Courts.

A preliminary decree for sale in terms of rule 4, Order XXXIV, First Schedule, Civil Procedure Code, will be drawn up. Plaintiffs will pay defendants Nos. 3 and 4 their costs in both Courts. Defendants Nos. 3 and 4's Pleader's fee in this Court Rs. 100.

Arbitration Act (IX of 1899), s. 19—Reference by one party—Suit by other party—No application to stay suit—Waiver of right to arbitration.

Where under the terms of reference a party refers a dispute to arbitration, and the other party brings a suit but the first party having knowledge of the suit deliberately makes no application under section 19 of the Arbitration Act for stay of the suit, the first party must be taken to have waived his right to arbitration [p. 796, col. 2.]

Ram Prosad Surajmull v. Mohan Lal Lachmi Narain, 60 Ind. Cas. 895; 47 C. 752 and Appavu Rowther v. Seeni Rowther, 42 Ind. Cas. 514; 41 M. 115; 33 M. L. J. 177; 5 L. W. 243, referred to.

First appeal from an order of the District Judge, Cawnpore.

FACTS appear from the following judgment of the lower Court:—

"This is an application to file an award under section 11 of the Arbitration Act. The firm of Phool Chand-Fateh Chand, defendants, agreed to sell 20 bales 'dyed buk,' to the firm of Chhamman Lal-Posti Mal of Delhi by contract in writing dated the 7th August 1918. Under the terms of the said contract the parties agreed to refer all disputes arising out of the contract to arbitration. On the 16th February 1919, defendants wrote to plaintiffs complaining that the goods covered by the invoice were not those contracted for. On the 2nd April 1919 they accordingly cancelled their order. A dispute having arisen between the parties, plaintiffs on the 30th August 1919 appointed Mr. Ameer Chand Khosla as their arbitrator. Information was sent the same day to defendants asking them to nominate another arbitrator of their own. On the 17th September 1919 defendants wrote in reply that they had already filed a regular suit on the 16th of September. This intimation was sent both to plaintiffs Chhamman Lal Posti Mal as also to their arbitrator Mr. Ameer Chand Khosla. As defendants failed to appoint an arbitrator Mr. Ameer Chand Khosla gave his award on the 25th of September 1919.

"Numerous objections have been taken to the validity of the award, but the most important of them is contained in paragraph 9 which runs as follows:—

"'Because the objectors filed their suit in Court before any award was made and after service of notice on the arbitrator that no award should be made.'

"Reliance is placed by defendants' learned Pleader on a ruling reported as Ram Prosad Surajmull v. Mohan Lal Lachmi Narain (1). It has been held that where an action has been commenced upon a contract which contains a provision for reference to arbitration, even if a reference to arbitration has been made before the commencement of the suit the award is of no effect unless the suit has been stayed pending the arbitration. In the body of the report we find the following remarks:—

"'If the Court has refused to stay an action or if the defendant has abstained from asking it to do so, the Court has seisin of the dispute, and it is by its decision, and by its decision alone, that the rights of the parties are settled. It follows that, in the latter case, the private tribunal, if it has ever come into existence, is functus officio unless the parties agree de novo that the dispute shall be tried by arbitration and that the action itself shall be referred.'

"A similar view was adopted by the Judicial Commissioner of Sind in a case reported as Sawyer v. Louis Dreyfus & Co. (2). It was held that, where a written agreement for the sale and purchase of goods contains an arbitration clause, each party is under a contractual obligation to refer any dispute which arises to arbitration. If after dispute arising, either party institutes a suit, he thereby commits a breach of contract embodied in the arbitration clause, but at the same time he submits to a competent tribunal the decision of the dispute; for, the jurisdiction of the Court is not ousted by an arbitration clause. The position of the defendants after institution of the suit, is that he can either sue for damages for breach of contract to refer, or indirectly enforce specific performance of the contract by obtaining an order staying the proceedings under section 19. In the present case plaintiffs, although they were informed that a suit had been instituted, took no action under section 19 of the Act. The award was made ex parte in spite of the present protest raised by the opposite party.

"The ruling reported as Ram Prosad Surajmull v. Mohan Lal Lachmi Narain (1) is applicable to the present case and the objection made by defendants appears to be well-founded. I allow the objection and set aside the award. Defendants will have their costs of this case."

Dr. Surendra Nath Sen (with him Mr. Ajudhia Nath), for the Appellants.

Mr. G. W. Dillon (with him Messrs. B. E. O'Conor and Saila Nath Mukerji), for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—We have decided to dismiss this appeal on the simple ground that the defendant having deliberately refused to utilise the machinery provided by section 19, namely, by applying for a stay, must be taken to have waived his right to arbitration. We would merely add that we are not prepared, as at present advised, to go the length of the decisions in Ram Prosad Surajmull v. Mohan Lal Lachmi Narain (1) and Appavu Rowther v. Seeni Rowther (3) and to hold that in all such cases an award must necessarily be set aside. It must be borne in mind that some of the observations of Lord Justice Fletcher Moulton relied upon were unnecessary for the decision of the case, and were not adopted by the other members of the English Court of Appeal and that the case was one in which the circumstances were peculiar. We are not prepared to adopt, without qualification, the view which the Madras High Court seems to have adopted in Appavu Rowther v. Seeni Rowther (3) referred to above, that the moment a suit is brought the arbitrators have become functus officio and any award made by them is without jurisdiction. That statement must be qualified by the existence of the power of stay contained in the Second Schedule to the Civil Procedure Code, or in section 19 if the arbitration is one under the Act of 1899. This power may be taken advantage of by the other party to Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 144, scope of—Letters Patent Appeal—Order of abatement set aside—Restitution—Order for costs, whether also set aside.

Section 144, Civil Procedure Code, is not confined to cases where restitution is claimed on the reversal of the decree in a first or second appeal. Whenever a decree is varied or reversed the section applies, however the reversal or variance may have been effected.

Tangutur Subbarayudu v. Yerramsetti Seshasani, 33 Ind. Cas. 739; 40 M. 229; 3 L. W. 236; (1916) 1 M. W. N. 155; 30 M. L. J. 366; 19 M. L. T. 235, followed.

Where an order declaring the abatement of a suit awards costs to the defendant, and the order of abatement is set aside on appeal, the order as to costs is also set aside, if, apart from the abatement of the suit, there was no other conceivable reason for the award of the costs to the defendant.

Raghu Nath Das v. Badri Prasad, 6 A. 21; A. W. N. (1883) 177; 3 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 574, distinguished.

Appeal against an order of the District Court, Tanjore, in Appeal Suit No. 43 of 1920, preferred against an order of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Tanjore, (in I. A. No. 338 of 1919), in Original Suit No. 27 of 1914.

Mr. K. Rajah Aiyar, for the Appellants.

Mr. K. S. Jayarama Aiyar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The only question for our decision in this appeal is, whether the case falls under section 144, Civil Procedure Code. Mr. Rajah Iyer has argued that it does not, because the abatement was not set aside in appeal but by means of separate proceedings. As regards this, we are content to follow the ruling in Tangutur Subbarayudu v. Yerramsetti Seshasani (1) and to hold that "section 144 is not confined to cases where restitution is claimed on the reversal of the decree in first or second appeal, provided the decree is varied or reversed the section applies, however the reversal or variance has been effected." In this case the order of abatement was undoubtedly set aside by the order of this Court in Letters Patent Appeal.

It was next argued that the order of this Court in the Letters Patent Appeal did not affect the order of the Subordinate Judge awarding costs to the defendants. This order as to costs is a necessary corollary to the order declaring the case to have abated, and, apart from it, there could be no conceivable reason for directing the payment of costs by the estate of the deceased first plaintiff who initiated the suit. Reliance was placed in this connection on the ruling in Raghu Nath Das v. Badri Prasad (2). But we think the case is easily distinguishable. That decision proceeded mainly on the ground that the Subordinate Judge who had disposed of the objection petition under section 280, Civil Procedure Code, was functus officio and could make no order for restitution. In the present case, the result of this Court's order in the Letters Patent Appeal has been to set aside the abatement and revive the suit as originally launched and it cannot be said that the Subordinate Judge was functus officio.

Then, it is contended that the second plaintiff, the son of the original first plaintiff who applied for restitution, was not a party to the suit. No doubt he now carries on the suit as reversioner in succession to the original reversioner, his father. But he enjoys a dual capacity as the representative of his father's estate, and in this capacity costs were paid by him and there is no reason why he should be debarred from recovering them.

Lastly, it is urged that the estate of the first plaintiff is not entitled to derive subsidiary benefit in consequence of an order obtained by second plaintiff. But we can see no reason why it should not be so entitled and in equity relief ought not to be granted. We think that the District Judge has taken a correct view of this case and we dismiss the second appeal with costs.

Letters Patent Appeal from a judgment of Mr. Justice Walsh.

Messrs. Kailas Nath Katju and Kamla Kant Verma, for the Appellants.

Dr. Surendra Nath Sen, for the Repondents.

JUDGMENT.—The litigation appears to have had a very chequered career. In the year 1910 a suit was brought in the Revenue Court by the present appellant for the ejectment of the defendants from certain plots of land. The Court of first instance, that is the Assistant Collector of the First Class, decreed the claim and ordered ejectment. An appeal was preferred from that decree to the Commissioner and the appeal was dismissed. The case was then taken to the Board of Revenue, and the Board of Revenue held that the appeal from the decree of the Court of first instance ought to have been preferred to the District Judge. Accordingly, an appeal was preferred in the Court of the District Judge and it succeeded and the claim of the plaintiff was dismissed in 1912. A second appeal to this Court was also dismissed. Meanwhile, after the passing of the decree of the Court of first instance that decree was put into execution and the present appellant obtained possession of the holding by ejectment of the tenants. After the decree of the District Judge and the High Court, the respondent applied to the Assistant Collector under section 144 of the Code of Civil Procedure for restitution, that is, for restoration of possession to them. This application was rejected by the Assistant Collector who was of opinion that the remedy of the respondents was one under section 80 of the Agra Tenancy Act. From this order the respondents appealed to the District Judge. The District Judge considered that the decision of the Court of first instance rejecting the application was not correct but he held that the order of the Court of first instance was final and no appeal lay to him. On this ground he dismissed the appeal. A second appeal was preferred to this Court and was heard by a learned Judge of this Court. He set aside the orders of the Courts below and directed possession to be restored within a term fixed by him in his order. From this decision of the learned Judge of this Court this appeal has been preferred under the Letters Patent.

We find it difficult to agree with the reasons given by the learned Judge for his decision. Those reasons were summarised to us by Dr. Sen on behalf of the respondents and he supports them but without assigning any reasons for doing so. The learned Judge held that 'the Court of first instance' referred to in section 144 was not a Revenue Court but the Civil Court which heard the appeal from the order of the first Court. With this view we cannot agree. In a suit under the Tenancy Act the Court of first instance is the Revenue Court which heard the suit, and not the Court of Appeal. The learned Judge says that the decree of the High Court was a decree directing possession to be restored. This is not so. The decree of this Court only dismissed the appeal preferred to it from the decree of the District Judge in the suit for ejectment. The effect of the decree of the District Judge was to entitle the respondents to be restored to possession, and for recovering possession the remedy of the respondents was to apply under section 144 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and this application for restitution is to be made to the Court of first instance under the provisions of the section. The section further provides that no separate suit will lie for recovery of possession where the decree of the Court of first instance has been reversed by a higher Court. The learned Judge's opinion that a separate suit could be brought and the application was to be deemed to be a suit cannot be supported in view of the provisions of section 144 itself, which forbids the institution of a sparate suit. The learned Judge of this Court further held that the appeal to the High Court might be deemed to be a regular suit for possession or an application for delivery of possession. As we have pointed out, an application for delivery of possession could only be made to the Court of first instance and not to this Court. This Court does not execute its own decree, and even if the decree of this Court was a decree directing possession to be restored, the application for restoration of possession could only have been made to the Court of first instance and not to this Court. Therefore, in our opinion, the learned Judge of this Court was not entitled to make an order for restitution. Dr. Sen's main contention was that the order of the Court of first instance refusing to grant the respondent's application was a decree within the meaning of section 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and that, therefore, an appeal lay to the District Judge. This contention is concluded by the principle of the ruling of the Full Bench in the case of Zohra v. Mangu Lal (1). That was, it is true, a case in which the question was whether an appeal lay from an order in execution of a decree, passed by an Assistant Collector of the First Class. It was held that, under the whole scheme of the Tenancy Act, a distinction was made between an "order" and a "decree," and that the word 'decree' in section 177 of that Act was a decree in a suit and did not include an order which, if the definition of a decree applied to the case, might be deemed to be a decree under the Code of Civil Procedure. The learned Judges who decided the Full Bench case made a distinction between a decree in a suit and an order. It was held that an appeal lay from a decree in a suit but an order passed by an Assistant Collector of the First Class was not a decree and was not open to appeal. The principle laid down in the Full Bench case equally applies to the present case and upon that principle we must hold that the learned District Judge was right in holding that no appeal lay to him. In this view, the appeal to this Court ought to have been dismissed. No doubt, it is a hard case, but under the provisions of the law we are unable to interfere in the matter.

We accordingly allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the learned Judge of this Court and restore the decree of the lower Appellate Court. In the circumstances of this case, we direct the parties to pay their own costs of the two appeals to this Court.

both the Appellate Courts. In his application for a final decree for sale, A omitted to include the costs of the Appellate Courts with the result that the final decree as prepared was not the final decree in the cause, but the decree as passed by the first Court. A applied for execution. No objection to execution was taken by B who rather paid up a portion of the amount under the decree and obtained further time to pay the balance. On B's default, A made another application for execution for the balance, adding this time the sum awarded as costs of the Appellate Courts. B objected to this inclusion, and, on matter going to High Court on appeal, raised the further point for the first time that the decree not being the final decree in the cause was not capable of execution:

Execution second appeal from a decree of the District Judge.

Mr. Uma Shankar Bajpai, for the Appellant.

Mr. Panna Lal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of execution proceedings. It appears that Khub Singh and others made a usufructuary mortgage of property situate in village Gokulpur Pipraut in favour of Ausaf Ali Khan and his two brothers. Ausaf Ali's rights as mortgagee were sold in execution of a simple money decree and were purchased by Dambar Singh. Prior to this purchase Ausaf Ali had mortgaged his rights as mortgagee to Dr. Gokul Chand who transferred them to Babu Kallyan Singh, the present decree-holder. The result was that Dambar Singh was the owner of $\frac{1}{3}$rd of the mortgagee rights and Kallyan Singh was the mortgagee of $\frac{1}{3}$rd mortgagee rights. Kallyan Singh sued to recover the amount due to him as mortgagee of the mortgagee rights and obtained a decree for sale on the 30th of October 1912. This decree was set aside on appeal on the 16th of June 1913. On second appeal to this Court the decree of the First Court was restored and the time for payment was extended by six months from the date of the High Court's decree. On the 21st July 1916 Kallyan Singh applied for a final decree for sale. For some reason or other, best known to himself, he did not include the costs of the lower Appellate Court and the High Court awarded to him to be included in the final decree. The result was that the final decree as prepared was for the amount decreed thereunder and the costs of the First Court; or, in other words, for the decree passed by the First Court and not the decree of the High Court which was the final decree in the cause and which was the only decree capable of being made final. The decree holder Kallyan Singh made an application on the 27th of September 1916 to execute the final decree. No objection was taken to the execution by Dambar Singh. On the other hand, on the 16th of July 1917, he paid Rs. 1,800 and obtained further time to pay the balance. The present application in execution was made on the 30th of May 1919, after deducting the amount so paid by Dambar Singh and adding to the balance of the amount decreed under the final decree a sum of Rs. 807 odd representing the costs of the High Court and the lower Appellate Court. Dambar Singh objected to the inclusion of such costs as they were not mentioned in the final decree for sale. The learned Subordinate Judge found that the amount of Rs. 807 odd claimed by the decree-holder was incorrect but that the only amount chargeable against the property was a sum of Rs. 554-6-9 and disallowed the rest of the objection. The judgment-debtor went up in appeal and the learned Judge of the Court below has confirmed the decree of the Frst Court. The judgment debtor comes here in second appeal and, besides raising the question which was put in issue in the Court below, he has raised a further point that the final decree obtained by the decree holder is not capable of execution inasmuch as it was only the appellate decree of the High Court which was the final decree in the cause and which was the only decree which could be made final and then execution taken out. In our opinion, this contention of the judgment-debtor raised before us for the first time is barred by the rule of res judicata. When the first application for execution was made he did not raise this objection. He might and ought to have raised it then and as he did not do so he cannot be allowed to take the same objection in later execution proceedings, see Ram Kirpal v. Rup Kuari (1).

As to the second objection, we think this objection is bound to succeed The amount of Rs. 554 odd is not entered in the final decree for sale and it could not be recovered. The Execution Court can only add execution costs to a decree in the course of execution proceedings and it cannot add to or amend the decree under execution which is here the final decree obtained by the decree-holder and to which no objection was taken by the judgment debtor. We, therefore, allow the appeal to the extent of the amount of Rs. 554-6-9 and modify the decree of the Court below accordingly. Execution of the decree will now be taken for the amount decreed under the final decree obtained by the decree-holder with such costs of execution as might be found due. We make no order as to costs of this appeal.

JUDGMENT.

DAS, J.—I am of opinion that this appeal must be dismissed. In order to understand the point that has been argued before us, it is necessary to state the following facts. On the 28th October 1904, the mortgagor-defendant executed a mortgage-bond in favour of one Munshi Singh in respect of certain properties including a 2 annas 15 dam share in Mouza Deojibagh, which is the subject-matter of the present appeal. By two subsequent transactions, one dated the 22nd June 1910, the other dated the 12th November 1912, the defendant No. 17, the appellant before us, acquired a good title to 2 annas 15 dam share in Mouza Deojibagh subject to the mortgage in favour of Munshi Singh. In 1913 Munshi Singh sued upon his mortgage and cited defendant No. 17 as a defendant in his action. He got the usual mortgage-decree on the 22nd December 1913 and the final decree on the 28th January 1915. Defendant No. 17 it will be noticed, did not appear in the action, nor did he make any attempt to save the property which he had purchased. But the mortgagor-defendants, with a view to save the properties from sale, borrowed Rs. 13,000 from the plaintiffs and, as a security for the loan, executed a mortgage-bond in favour of the plaintiffs in respect of certain properties with which defendant No. 17 is not concerned. It was found, however, that there was a much larger sum of money then due to Munshi Singh, and Munshi Singh proceeded to sell the mortgaged properties, including the property in which defendant No. 17 was interested, in execution of his mortgage-decree. The mortgagor-defendants then applied to have the sale set aside under Order XXI, rule 90, of the Code, but, before the application could be heard and disposed of, they raised further loans from the plaintiffs, discharged the debt due to Munshi Singh and induced the auction-purchaser to consent to have the sale set aside. These loans were raised on the 29th October 1915 and the 3rd December 1915, respectively, on the security of certain properties including 2 annas 12 dam share in Deojibagh in which defendant No. 17 was interested. The present suit was brought to enforce the securities of the 29th October 1914, 29th October 1915 and the 3rd December 1915 respectively.

We are in this appeal concerned only with the question whether the plaintiffs are entitled to a decree in respect of 2 annas 12 dam share of Deojibagh. The position taken up by the appellant is this: that his purchase being antecedent to the transaction of the 29th October 1915 and the 3rd December 1915, respectively, his interest in the property purchased by him, cannot be affected by these transactions. I am unable to agree with this contention. Defendant No. 17 was a defendant in Munshi Singh's action, and had the right and the opportunity to redeem the mortgages. He did not, however, avail himself of that opportunity, but left it to the mortgagor-defendants to redeem the mortgages. Upon such redemption, the mortgagor-defendants became subrogated to the position of Munshi Singh in relation to defendant No. 17 and became entitled to enforce the mortgage as against defendant No. 17 just as Munshi Singh could. But, in order to pay off Munshi Singh, the mortgagor-defendants had to borrow money from the plaintiffs. In my opinion, the plaintiffs stand exactly in the position of Munshi Singh or the mortgagor defendants in relation to defendant No. 17.

The proposition in the form in which I have stated it was not contested by the learned Vakil for the appellant; but he argued that neither the mortgagor-defendants nor the plaintiffs could claim the right to enforce the security as against defendant No. 17, as it must in law be considered to have been extinguished by the final decree passed in Munshi Singh's action on the 28th January 1915. If the learned Vakil be right in his contention, then, it must be conceded that the position of the plaintiffs is one of difficulty. But there is neither principle nor authority for the view which has been strenuously pressed before us by Mr. Purnendu Narain Sinha on behalf of the appellant. So far as principle is concerned, it will be found in the settled view of equity that, though a personal covenant is extinguished by a judgment upon it, the charge remains notwithstanding the judgment which does not determine the security, or put an end to the charge: See Popple v. Sylvester (1). The question is also covered by authorities: see Bibijan Bibi v. Sachi Bewah.

On the last mentioned case an ingenious argument was advanced to us by Mr. Sinha. It was argued that, however correct the decision might have been under section 89 of the Transfer of Property Act, the position now is different under the Civil Procedure Code. The only basis of the argument is, that section 89 of the Transfer of Property Act now finds its place in the Civil Procedure Code as Order XXXIV, rule 5. Section 89 of the Transfer of Property Act ran as follows:—"If in any case under section 88 the defendant pays to the plaintiff or into Court on the day fixed as aforesaid the amount due under the mortgage, the costs, if any, awarded to him and such subsequent costs as are mentioned in section 94, the defendant shall (if necessary) be put in possession of the mortgaged property, but if such payment is not so made, the plaintiff or the defendant, as the case may be, may apply to the Court for an order absolute for sale of the mortgaged property, and the Court shall then pass an order that such property, or a sufficient part thereof, be sold, and that the proceeds of the sale be dealt with as is mentioned in section 88; and thereupon the defendant's right to redeem and the security shall both be extinguished." The question constantly arose in the Law Courts as to whether there was any right in the mortgagor judgment-debtor to stop the sale of the mortgaged property by payment of the debt before the sale actually took place, although an order absolute for sale might have already been passed. The Civil Procedure Code conceded that right to the judgment-debtors ; but it used to be argued that as the right to stop the sale by payment of the debt was in fact the right of redemption, such a right could not exist after an order absolute for sale had been passed, as section 89 of the Transfer of Property Act provided that, upon an order absolute for sale the defendant's right to redeem and the security shall both be extinguished. The difficulty in the construction of section 89 lead to a conflict of decisions ; but that conflict was put an end to by the decision of the Special Bench of the Calcutta High Court in the case already cited. The Calcutta High Court took the view that the concluding words of section 89, viz., " thereupon the defendant's right to redeem and the security shall both be extinguished," related to the actual sale and distribution of the proceeds and not to the order absolute for sale. In other words, the defendants' right to redeem and the security remain in full force until the actual sale and the distribution of the proceeds.

Section 89 of the Transfer of Property Act has now been repealed and re-enacted in Order XXXIV, rule 5 of the Code ; but there is this important matter for consideration, that the concluding words of section 89, to which I have already referred, have not been re enacted. I regard the omission to re enact the concluding words of section 89 as deliberate. It marks the sense of the Legislature that those words were capable of being misunderstood as in fact they were misunderstood. In my opinion, the provision of Order XXXIV, rule 5, is far more unfavourable to the appellant than the provision of section 89 of the Transfer of Property Act.

It was, however, argued that the mortgagor judgment debtor may have the right to stop the sale by payment of the debt before the sale, but that is a right which is now conferred on him by the Code and not by the law of mortgage. In other words, the right to stop the sale is in no sense a redemption of the mortgage. In my opinion the problem is not solved by a reference to the Code ; but I do not appreciate the distinction between the right to redeem, and right to stop the sale by payment of the judgment-debt. In order to solve the problem, we must examine the view which equity took of a mortgage transaction. That view will be found in the judgment of Fry, L.J., to which I have referred. I hold that the final decree passed in Munshi Singh's action did not extinguish the security, and that the plaintiffs, by virtue of the advance made to the mortgagor-defendants who, for their own protection, were obliged to discharge the mortgage-debt of the appellant to Munshi Singh, are subrogated to the position occupied successively by Munshi Singh and the mortgagor-defendants in relation to the appellant, and are entitled to enforce the security as against the appellant. I would dismiss this appeal with costs.

BUCKNILL, J.—This was an appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge of the Second Court of Patna, dated the 22nd of December 1917. The circumstances under which this litigation took place were very simple; but in order to understand exactly how this appeal arises it is necessary to refer to them very shortly.

Some of the defendants in the action had borrowed money from one Munshi Singh on mortgage. After this transaction these defendants sold to one Maulavi Muhammad Musa, who was the 17th defendant in these proceedings and who, having since died, is here duly represented, a certain portion of the property mortgaged. It is stated that Maulavi Muhammad Musa did not in fact have, at the time of his purchase, any notice of the encumbrance upon the property which he bought ; whether this is really true or not, does not seem to be here very material. In 1913 Munshi Singh brought an action upon his mortgage; in that suit Maulavi Muhammad Musa was joined with many others, as one of the defendants ; amongst those others was the present plaintiff. Munshi Singh obtained a preliminary decree and this decree was made absolute in 1915. The properties were sold and purchased by certain persons but possession was never granted to the auction-purchasers because an agreement was come to under which Munshi Singh's claim was satisfied. What, so far as here is material, really took place in connection with this compromise is, that the present plaintiff, Babu Aidal Singh, made arrangement primarily with the judgment-debtors to pay off the amount due to Munshi Singh, and, for the security of what he advanced for this purpose, took certain mortgages from the judgment debtors of the properties, which included that property which had been purchased by Maulavi Muhammad Musa, subject to Munshi Singh's prior encumbrance. In 1916 the plaintiff brought the present suit upon his mortgage-bonds; again, many persons interested were joined as defendants and, as I have stated before, Maulavi Muhammad Musa, and now his representative, since his death, was the 17th defendant. He obtained a decree, but Maulavi Muhammad Musa or his representative at the trial and here on appeal contends that the plaintiff cannot sell the property which had been purchased originally by him (Musa). I find it somewhat difficult to understand exactly what was the legal proposition put forward by the learned Vakil for the appellant. But, so far as I could gather, it seems to have been contended that the appellant was not a party to the agreement by which the plaintiff paid off the debt due to Munshi Singh and that in consequence Munshi Singh's encumbrance was by the compromise permanently taken off the property which the appellant had purchased; that, therefore, Munshi Singh's judgment debtors could not mortgage the property which the appellant had purchased from them because by the payment by the plaintiff of the judgment-debtor's debt to Munshi Singh the appellant had his title cleared of any burden. In order to see whether there is any force in this contention one must endeavour to ascertain exactly what really took place.

It must, in the first place, be admitted for both legal and equitable purposes here that the appellant's purchase was undoubtedly subject to Munshi Singh's mortgage; when Munshi Singh brought his suit the appellant was joined as a defendant, he had obviously then an opportunity of paying off the amount due in order to protect his encumbered ownership of the property which he had bought. But apparently he did nothing, for it would seem that he did not appear at the hearing of the suit and a decree was passed against him, as it was against several other defendants, ex parte. What was the effect of this? There was thus a decree against him which was in due course made absolute. The property was then put up for sale, and was actually sold; but, before the delivery of possession, the arrangement to which I have referred already was come to. We have not, unfortunately, got before us the full record of the execution proceedings, but it would appear that on the 1st of December 1915 the compromise petition was filed whilst on the 4th of the same month the order sheet of the Subordinate Judge reads: "The parties have filed a Kolehnama. The case need not be tried; the case is disposed of according to the Kolehnama." It is difficult to see what attitude could possibly have been taken up by the appellant with reference to this compromise which would have been effective to protect his interest unless he did come forward either at the trial of the case (which he did not) or as an auction-purchaser (which he did not) or as one who was ready to undertake the obligation undertaken by the plaintiff. I do not know whether he was actually served with the final petition for compromise which was ultimately effected. I am inclined to assume that he was and to think that, even if he was not, it makes no difference to his position. The plaintiff, to my mind, when he had paid off the judgment-debtor's indebtedness to Munshi Singh, satisfied the decree and, what is more important, the Subordinate Judge finds as a fact that it was the intention of the judgment debtors and of the plaintiff that the plaintiff should be (as he was) placed in the position in which Munshi Singh had been (and no doubt in a better position supplementarily with regard to encumbrances upon the judgment-debtors' property). It is suggested that the plaintiff cannot in equity be thus subrogated to Munshi Singh's status, but I cannot see that there is any force in this contention. Where a person in agreement with judgment-debtors undertakes to relieve them from their debt to the judgment-creditor on the condition that he takes over from the judgment-creditor the security which that judgment-creditor possesses, it, in my opinion, constitutes a subrogation the validity of which does not allow serious argument. The appellant had his rights throughout the course of the proceedings; he never chose to exercise them in any way; he allows judgment to go against him ex parte; and, therefore, has permitted his right, which, after all, was no more than an equity of redemption, to be extinguished by operation of law. With the subsequent compromise, it seems to me, that he was in no way concerned and that it would be absurd to suggest that having never, when he could, availed himself of his equities, he should be now heard to say that, having not done so, his equity should be given effect to.

I think that the Subordinate Judge was correct in his view and that the appeal must fail. I, therefore, consider that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

CIVIL APPEAL NO. 79 OF 1920.

Malabar Law—Tarwad—Karnavastanam—Succession—Family karar diverting succession, whether binding on future karnavan not party to karar.

Under the Marummakkathayam Law, a family karar, not assented to by a member of a Tarwad entitled to succeed to the office of karnavan on the death of the present incumbent, cannot interfere with the right of that member to succeed to all the powers of karnavan in due course of succession, even though the karar is assented to by a majority of the members of the Tarwad. The fact that the karar provides for a larger maintenance to the dissentient member as a set-off against the deprivation of his right would not render the karar valid. Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, South Malabar, at Palghat, in Original Suit No. 38 of 1918.

This appeal came on for hearing on the 30th and 31st of March 1921.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. O. Madhavan Nair, for the Appellants.—The Karar is a bona fide family arrangement to which a large majority of the Tarwad members have assented. It is beneficial to the Tarwad and Tavazhies attached to it. The fact that it interfered with the personal birth-right of the expectant Karnavan will not render it invalid. His dissent is not of any avail. The argument that it is operative even where there is one dissentient is an antiquated notion that is repugnant to modern progressive conditions. Chindan Nambiar v. Kunhi Raman Nambiar (1) requires re consideration.

There is a provision for larger maintenance to the expectant Karnavan. The Karar is only a maintenance arrangement.

Messrs. O. V. Anantha Krishna Aiyar, K. V. Krishnakrishna Menon and E. Sankaran Unni, for Respondents.—There is a limitation of the succeeding Karnavan's rights and the Karar cannot interfere with his birth right to succeed to the office. Though a larger provision is made for his maintenance he is deprived of his right to management which is to rest in others. Chindan Nambiar v. Kunhi Raman Nambiar (1), the Full Bench ruling, concludes the matter.

JUDGMENT.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—The defendants Nos. 1 to 4 and 6 to 14 are the appellants before us. The 5th defendant died after the suit. Twenty more defendants were impleaded in the suit but they have not preferred any appeal. The appellants are thirteen of the members of a Tarwad which had four Tavazhies. One Kochara

(1) 45 Ind. Cas. 26; 41 M. 577; 34 M. L. J. 400; (1918) M. W. N. 283; 23 M. L. T. 316; 7 L. W. 543 (F. B.).

Menon was the Karnavan of the whole Tarwad till his death in January 19 8. The plaintiff succeeded by Marummakkathayam law to the Karnavastanam at Eachara Menon's death. A Karar had been executed during Eachara Menon's lifetime on the 2nd September 1916 to which the said prior Karnavan and almost all the adult members of the Tarwad were parties. Only three persons was not parties to it, that is, those who are mentioned as Nos. 7, 16 and 20 in that Karar No. 7, afterwards confirmed the Karar by a separate deed and No. 20 in the Karar (who is the 25th defendant in the present suit) had given up the world before the date of the Karar and might be ignored. The appellant's contention is that the plaintiff who was No. 16 in the Karar refused to sign it because at the last moment he wanted three further provisions to be inserted in the Karar in his favour and the other members of the Tarwad refused their consent. This is probably true. The fact, however, remains that he refused to be a party to the Karar as executed finally.

It was contended that the plaintiff had first agreed to all the terms of the Karar about a week before it was executed and then illegally refused to sign it at last. I think the evidence clearly establishes that it was intended that the mere understandings arrived at during the negotiations of the Karar should not have the force of a final agreement, and that the finality and binding nature of the agreement depended on agreement, the agreement being reduced to writing and signed by the persons intended to be bound thereby. The provision inserted in the Karar after the plaintiff refused to sign it, namely, that the plaintiff should be deprived of the benefits of maintenance given to him by the Karar till he executed a confirmation document also supports the above conclusion. The plaintiff's dishonesty in pretending ignorance of the negotiations before the execution of the Karar is irrelevant to the consideration of the question of the legally binding nature of the Karar on him.

The plaintiff's suit prays for the following reliefs :—

(1) a declaration that the Karar is not binding on the plaintiff ;

(2) that the properties described in schedule A in the possession of the 1st defendant's Tavazhi should be surrendered to him ;

(3) that certain moveable properties shown in schedule B be delivered to the plaintiff or their value be awarded to him on the personal liability of defendants Nos. 1 to 6 and on the Tavazhi of all the defendants to the extent of their Tavazhi, properties, and

(4) that the income of the properties in schedule A at the rate of 2000 Paras of paddy per year from 1094 (1918-19) be also awarded to the plaintiff (besides the other usual reliefs).

Defendants Nos. 1 to 14 alone contested the suit. On their pleas, several issues were framed of which it is necessary to set out only issues Nos. 1, 5, 7, 8, and 10, and they are as follows :—

"(1) Whether the plaint-mentioned Karar is a bona fide family arrangement, and whether the plaintiff withheld his signature wrongfully, or whether it was executed in the circumstances alleged in the plaint? Whether it is valid and binding upon the plaintiff ?

"(5) Whether the plaint Karar is entitled to be upheld as a maintenance arrangement for the defendants and whether the plaintiff is not entitled to recover the properties allotted for maintenance as contended by 1st defendant ?

"(7) Whether the rent of 1093 was partially discharged by payment to Eachara Menon as contended by 1st defendant ?

"(8) Is the plaintiff entitled to recover any and what rent for the plaint properties ? Is the 1st defendant liable to be treated as a tenant ? Is the letting alleged in the plaint true and are the properties held under it ?

"(10) Whether the plaintiff is entitled to personal relief against defendants Nos. 2 to 14 and relief against the Tavazhi properties ?"

The second portion of the 1st issue, namely, whether the Karar is valid and binding upon the plaintiff was decided against the defendants by the lower Court. That finding was attacked by Mr. Madhavan Nair, Counsel for the appellants, on the grounds (a) that a bona fide Karar was binding on the succeeding Karnavan even if it interfered with his personal birthright to succeed in the natural course of events to the power of the Karnavan and even if he had not consented to the Karar, and (b) that the Karar did not so interfere with his birth-right. I think this second contention is clearly untenable, having regard to the provisions found in paragraphs 14, 20, 24 of the Karar, Exhibit G. I think Exhibit G, read especially in the light of the note attached to it at the end, was clearly intended to reduce the plaintiff (mentioned as number 16 in the Karar) to the status of a mere maintenance-holder entitled, no doubt, to maintenance at a higher rate than an ordinary member of the Tarwad but deprived even of the benefit of the provision inserted in it for distribution of the surplus income after the previous Karnavan's death per capita among the members of 4 Tavazhies. I shall reserve the consideration of the first legal contention to the end.

Then as regards the 5th issue, this was decided against the plaintiff, in so far as the Karar makes provision for the maintenance of the Tavazhies, and there has been no appeal by the plaintiff in respect of that matter.

Coming to the 7th issue, the Karar fixes 2,000 Paras of paddy as the income of the lands left in possession of the defendants Nos. 1 to 14. It directs them to take 720 Paras of paddy thereout for the maintenance of their Tavazhi, to take another 444 Paras out of the remaining 1,280 Paras towards the interest on the loan which had been made by their Tavazhies to the Tarwad, and to pay the remaining 836 Paras into the hands of the prior Karnavan. The written statement of the 1st defendant contains a schedule of 13 items which mentions that in December 1917 the 1st defendant gave 500 Paras out of the 836 Paras due for that year into the hands of the prior Karnavan (item No. 1) and that the 1st defendant further spent for the Tarwad during the prior Karnavan's illness and after his death money and grain which when all converted into grain was the equivalent of 925 Paras and 4 Edangalies (items Nos. 2 to 13). Though the 7th issue is not specific, it might be taken that it was intended to cover the question of the true and binding nature of these alleged payments entered in the schedule to the written statement. The lower Court has dealt with this question in paragraphs 11 and 12 of its judgment. Of the 13 items in the schedule, it deals specifically only with the 1st item which relates to the 500 Paras alleged to have been given in December 1917 and for which the 1st defendant produced the receipt, Exhibit VIII. The lower Court disbelieved the genuineness of Exhibit VIII and also found the payment of 500 Paras not proved by sufficient evidence as the evidence consisted only of the statement as witness of the 1st defendant. It was not denied that for the previous year the 1st defendant paid up 836 Paras as provided for in the Karar to the prior Karnavan. Five hundred out of the 846 Paras (the said 500 Paras being about six-tenth of the amount) had to be paid in the month of September-October to the previous Karnavan according to the Karar. Exhibit 8 recites that the 500 Paras was so paid to him partly before the date of Exhibit VIII and partly on that date. I think that the truth of such a payment is highly probable and, believing the 1st defendant's evidence on this point, I would allow the appellants' credit for the payment of 500 Paras. The other items mentioned in the written statement are either not supported by any evidence worth the name or are not pressed except item No. 2 which is a sum of Rs. 20 for which Exhibit XII is produced. But it does not appear that that Rs. 20 was paid for purposes of the whole Tarwad as distinguished from the purposes of the 1st defendant's Tavazhi. I agree with the lower Court as regards these items.

Coming to the 8th issue and the 10th issue, the plaintiff did not ask for a personal relief against defendants Nos. 7 to 14 and the lower Court's decree will, therefore, be modified by confining the award of personal relief against defendants Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4 and 6, the 5th defendant (as I said before) having died. The lower Court has given a decree for 1280 Paras of paddy for 1093 without deducting 414 Paras which the defendants are entitled to deduct therefrom on account of interest on the loan due to the Tavazhi and the 500 Paras of paddy which was found above to have been paid out to the prior Karnavan. One hundred and eighty-eight Paras will, therefore, be substituted for 1,132 Paras in the decree of the lower Court as the provision for deducting 414 Paras for interest is a reasonable provision which the succeeding Karnavan is bound to respect. So as regards M. E. 1094 and subsequent years, the 1,280 Paras mentioned in paragraph 12 of the judgment and in the decree will be reduced to 836.

As regards the liability of the defendants' Tavazhi properties, the Karnavans who were in possession on account of the Tavazhi are liable as such Karnavans to account to the Tarwad for surplus income. Hence, the Tavazhi also was properly made liable to the extent of the said Tavazhi properties. Of course, this will not affect the separate properties of the individual members of the Tavazhi as distinguished from the separate properties of the Tavazhi as a whole.

I have reserved the first contention of Mr. Madhavan Nair to the end. That contention is that a bona fide family Karar, even if it affects the birth-right of the succeeding Karnavan is binding on him, notwithstanding that he had refused to give his consent thereto. I think the matter is concluded by the decision in Chindan Nambiar v. Kunhi Raman Nambiar (1). The opinion which I had pronounced in Cheria Pangi Achan v. Unnalachan (2) on this question was repeated by me in Chindan Nambiar v. Kunhi Raman Nambiar (1), and was approved by my Lord the Chief Justice and by Spencer, J., who with himself formed the Full Bench which dealt with the case in Chindan Nambiar v. Kunhi Raman Nambiar (1). The above two cases have laid down that a family Karar, when not assented to by an individual member of the Tarwad and though assented to by a majority, is powerless to interfere with his personal birth-right to succeed to all the powers of a Karnavan in due course of succession. It follows, therefore, that the appellant's contention fails on this point.

Most of the rules of law governing the rights of the Karnavan and junior members of a Marumakkathayam Tarwad have undoubtedly become stale and antiquated. The Marumakkathayees belonging to both the upper and lower sections of the middle class do feel the irksomeness of most of these rules very strongly and, though I do not belong to that community, I feel with the community, if I may be allowed respectfully to say so, as strongly as if I belonged to that community, partly for the reason that I have the privilage of counting numerous individuals in that community among my very dear friends. But I have found that any attempts made (such attempts having begun long before I became a Judge of this Court) to develope that law on liberal lines through creating judicial precedents have almost invariably ended in failure (except in the single instance of the right to get maintenance when not living in the Tarwad house) and I believe that Sir Sankaran Nair was of the same pessimistic opinion. As, in the non-legal world, there are to be found among Judges and lawyers also, persons of varying temperaments, some endowed with liberal tendencies of mind, and some with conservative tendencies and a very few may have what may be called radical tendencies. But, as a rule, conservatism is the general tendency of judicial and legal minds—such conservatism is probably a failing (if it is a failing at all) on virtue's side in countries where the Legislature is reasonably active in enacting reforming legislation from time to time. The Travancore and Cochin States are moving and have moved in this matter of changing the rules of the antiquated Malabar Law so as to bring them into reasonable conformity with the altered conditions and exigencies of the times. Now that the Legislatures in British India have been strengthened by the Reforms, it is naturally expected that they would prove more active in bringing forward measures for liberalising the laws and the institutions governing those who are now subject to the Marumakkathayam Law. I have considered it not inappropriate to make the above paragraph a part of this judgment as Mr. Madhavan Nair argued with much feeling (not at all unnatural under the circumstances) that the rule of law laid down in the Full Bench case above cited (which rule was not a new rule at all but was based on a long line of precedents) had the effect of perpetuating the antiquated notion that the birth-right of a member of the Tarward was more sacred than the welfare of the majority of the Tarwad members. The same criticism might be applied to the several antiquated rules of succession now prevailing under the Mitakshara Law but the appropriate remedy is a resort to the Legislature.

In the result, subject to the modifications in the decree necessitated by the opinions already expressed in respect of the amounts due for arrears of income and claimable as future income, I would dismiss the appeal with proportionate costs.

NAPIER, J.—I agree generally on the question of consent and the other issues, but I only wish to say a word on the question of law raised by the appellants as to the extent to which effect can be given to a Karar like this against a succeeding Karnavan who was not a party to it. It is unnecessary for me to say more than that I have no means of knowledge of the conditions of life in Malabar and, therefore, I will not express any opinion of mine as to the necessity or otherwise of alteration in that law. I can only take the law as I find it, and I find it stated by my learned brother in a decision reported as Cheria Pangi Achan v. Unnalachan (2). Some of the words used in that decision have been quoted and relied on by the Subordinate Judge but the definite statement of the law is found in a passage a little higher up than the one quoted by the Subordinate Judge. My learned brother, speaking about a family Karar and the extent to which it would be binding on dissentient members, says as follows:—"it may not be binding on a dissentient member so far as it seeks to restrict his right to succeed to the full powers of a Karnavan in the natural course of events or if it interferes with his right to reasonable provision for maintenance." Now, it is contended by Mr. Madhavan Nair that where a Karar is upheld in so far as it makes arrangements of a certainly somewhat permanent character for the maintenance of the various Tavazhies, it does thereby restrict the right of a succeeding Karnavan to succeed to his full powers if such provisions for maintenance are upheld and, that, therefore, this proposition is stated too widely. The answer to that seems to be this, that there is nothing in the fact that the provision for maintenance, however elaborate or however much it affects the division of property, is made in a Karar; its real origin arises in the power of a Karnavan to make suitable provision for the maintenance of the members of the family which provision must naturally be continued, at all events, until circumstances require its alternation. This so-called limitation of the rights and powers of the succeeding Karnavan rests on the necessity for upholding arrangements which would otherwise have to be upset on the death of every Karnavan. It is analogous to the accepted rule of law that leases granted, under certain conditions, by a Karnavan enure after his death and are binding on the succeeding Karnavan and I, therefore, think that it is no limitation of the proposition that a Karar is not binding on a dissentient member in so far as it restricts his right to succeed to the full powers of a Karnavan, to say that the arrangements made for maintenance must be upheld. Then, Mr. Madhavan Nair has endeavoured to satisfy us that this Karar is only an arrangement for maintenance. We have examined its various provisions with great minuteness and I agree with the Subordinate Judge that it goes far beyond that. One of the objects of this Karar was undoubtedly to oust the present plaintiff from his right to succeed to the status of Karnavan. That was attempted to be done by giving him, as senior Anindravan, a large maintenance and promising him to arrange for a still larger maintenance when he became Karnavan. Other terms distinctly provide that all the general management of the Tarwad after the death of the existing Karnavan was to be vested in Nos. 2 and 18 who were the heads of their respective Tavazhies. There can be no doubt that this is a limitation of the right of the 1st defendant to succeed to the full powers of a Karnavan and I have no doubt that the other members of the Tarwad who were at variance with the plaintiff believed that by giving him this increased maintenance during the lifetime of the then existing Karnavan they would get him eventually to agree to the Karar. Unfortunately for them, the then Karnavan died soon afterwards with the result that the plaintiff has now brought this suit to recover all his full rights. In my opinion he is entitled to succeed on this point of law and, therefore, this appeal must be dismissed except to the extent which has been allowed in the judgment of my learned brother.

ARIP SHAIKH—JUDGMENT-DEBTOR—RESPONDENT.

Execution of decree—Objection by judgment-debtor that decree cannot be executed as rent-decree, competency of—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), Ch. XIV.

A tenant judgment-debtor can raise an objection in execution proceedings that a decree obtained against him for arrears of rent cannot be executed under the special procedure prescribed by Chapter XIV of the Bengal Tenancy Act, but he cannot object to the decree being executed against him as a decree for money under the Code of Civil Procedure.

Appeal against an order of the Subordinate Judge, Second Court, Pabna, in Pabna and Bogra, dated the 10th of September 1920, affirming that of the Munsif, Second Court, at Serajgunj, dated the 19th of May 1920.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Bhupendra Chandra Guha, for the Appellant.—The decree-holder is the appellant. The appeal arises out of certain execution proceedings. In course of these proceedings the tenant judgment-debtor for the first time objected to the sale on various grounds. I contended that those objections were not maintainable at that stage of the proceedings. Both Courts have overruled my objection. Their objection is, that the sale cannot proceed inasmuch as other co-sharers have not been made parties, my contention is that they were no parties to the decree at all. Hence that objection is not tenable. There was a decree for rent against one Ariff Sheikh, at the hearing of the suit he did not set up the plea that the other co sharers were no parties to the suit. I submit he cannot now turn round and say that the decree is not executable on that ground.

[CHATTERJEA, J.—The question is whether the decree is to be executed as a money decree.]

On the face of the decree there is a tenure. The other co-sharers objected under Order XXI, rule 58, of the Civil Procedure Code. That application was rejected. As soon as the decree was passed Ariff could not any longer object on the ground of non-joinder of parties. This decree does not affect the interests of his co-sharers. Assuming that the decree was a money-decree, the Courts below were wrong in dismissing my application. The decree is good and valid against Ariff. So it has got to be executed for the realisation of the money.

Babu Troylokhya Nath Ghose, for the Respondent.—We are not debarred from raising the objections in these proceedings. They have applied for execution under the Bengal Tenancy Act which he cannot do. I will be entitled to costs if he is allowed to amend the application now.

Babu Bhupendra Chandra Guha, briefly replied.

JUDGMENT.—It is contended on behalf of the appellant in this case that the judgment-debtor is not entitled to raise the objection to the execution of the decree.

There is no doubt that the decree which has been obtained against the judgment-debtor is binding upon him and that in execution proceedings he cannot go behind the decree. But the objection raised by him was that the decree could not be executed under the special procedure prescribed by Chapter XIV of the Bengal Tenancy Act. It was competent to the judgment-debtor to raise such objection.

The decree, however, can be executed as a decree for money under the Civil Procedure Code and the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor in the lands can be put up to sale. The judgment-debtor cannot object to such a course being adopted.

We think, in these circumstances, that the order of the Court below, in so far as it dismissed the application for execution entirely, should be set aside and the case sent back to the Court of first instance in order that the decree-holder may make an application for amendment of the application for execution of the decree by praying for attachment and sale of the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor as under a decree for money, and upon this being done, the Court will proceed to execute the decree in the ordinary course of law. This, however must be on terms.

We accordingly direct that, upon the decree-holder paying to the judgment-debtor costs of both the lower Courts and of this Court—the costs of this Court being assessed at one gold mohur—within a fortnight of the arrival of this order in the Court of first instance, the orders in the Courts below be set aside, the application for execution amended, and the decree executed according to law.

If the above costs are not paid within the time specified, the appeal will stand dismissed with costs.

B. N. & J. P. Order accordingly.

Stamp Act (II of 1899), s. 64, Sch. I, Art. 33—Gift, deed of—No valuation given—Stamp, if necessary—Collector, whether can ascertain value—Omission or under-valuation, prosecution for—"As set forth in such instrument," applicability of.

A deed of gift which contains no statement of the value of the property thereby conveyed, does not require any stamp under the Stamp Act and a Collector is not authorised to ascertain the value of the property with a view to causing the instrument to be stamped with reference to the value thus ascertained.

If a person executing a deed of gift omits to state the value of the property conveyed with intent to defraud the Government, or if there is an intentional under-valuation, a prosecution will lie against him under section 64 of the Stamp Act.

The words "as set forth in such instrument" in Article 33 to Schedule I to the Limitation Act refer back to the word "value" and not to the word "property."

Reference under section 57 (1) of the Stamp Act by the Board of Revenue, U. P.

JUDGMENT.—This is a reference from the Chief Controlling Revenue Authority under section 57, clause (1) of the Indian Stamp Act, No. II of 1899. The point referred to is a simple one. A deed of gift was executed which contains no statement of the value of the property thereby conveyed. The officer before whom the document was produced impounded it and referred it to the Deputy Commissioner of Bahraich, as Collector of the District, for necessary action. The question referred to us is, first of all, whether this instrument requires any stamp under the Indian Stamp Act. According to Article 33 of the Schedule an instrument of gift, such as the one before us, should be stamped with the same duty as a conveyance, for a consideration equal to the value of the property set forth in such instrument. We are satisfied that the words "as set forth in such instrument" refer back to the word "value," and not to the word "property." We are confirmed in this view by the authority quoted in the reference before us, reported as Reference under Stamp Act, s. 46 (1). In the present instance there is no "value" seth forth in the said instrument. No doubt, this is a contravention of section 27 of the Indian Stamp Act and, if it be found that the omission to state the value of the property conveyed was done with intent to defraud the Government, a prosecution will lie against the person who executed the instrument under section 64 of the Indian Stamp Act. The case seems to us strictly analogous to one which would arise if the executer of a deed of gift chose to set a purely nominal value on the property conveyed and to stamp the instrument accordingly. For the purposes of the Stamp Law, the valuation given in the instrument would have to be accepted. If there was an intentional under-valuation, then a prosecution would protect the Government against the attempted fraud. There is no provision in the law authorising the Collector to do what he has done in the present instance, namely, to ascertain the value of the property with a view to causing the instrument to be stamped with reference to the value thus ascertained. Our answer, therefore, to the first question referred to us is, that the instrument, as it stands, does not require any stamp under the Stamp Act. The second question, except in so far as it has been incidentally answered, does not arise, and the third question does not arise at all. Let this answer be returned accordingly.

(1) 8 M. 453 (F. B.); 3 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 310.

Marriage contract—Breach of contract—Damages—Jurisdiction—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 63—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 20—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art 36.

The plaintiff, a resident of Muzaffarpur, arranged to marry his daughter to the defendant a resident of Patna and agreed to pay Rs. 1,500 in cash and Rs. 300 worth of articles to the defendant at the Tilak ceremony. The cash and articles were delivered on the Tilak day to the defendant at Patna and it was arranged that the marriage should be performed on a certain date. A week before the date of marriage the defendant refused to perform the marriage and returned a portion of the Tilak money. In a suit for the balance and loss in connection with marriage arrangements it was pleaded that as the plaint showed that the defendant returned a part of the Tilak money and promised to pay the balance shortly, a new contract was entered into subsequent to the original contract:

Held, that as whole of the cash and articles were not returned section 63 of the Contract Act did not apply in the case and that as the plaintiff never intended to accept the mere promise which the defendant had not fulfilled, the parties were relegated to their original position and that the plaintiff was, therefore, entitled to balance and costs with interest. [p. 812, col. 2; p. 813, col. 1.]

Held, also, that the Court at Muzaffarpur, within whose jurisdiction the marriage was to be performed, had jurisdiction to try the case although the contract was made and cash and articles were delivered at Patna outside that jurisdiction. [p. 813, col. 1.]

Held, further, that the suit was not governed by Article 36 of the Limitation Act as the suit was simply a suit for damages on breach of contract. [p. 813, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

COUTTS, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for damages on breach of contract. The facts of the case are, that the plaintiff arranged to marry his daughter to the defendant, and it was agreed that the plaintiff should pay Rs. 1,500 in cash and Rs. 300 worth of articles to the defendant at the time of the Tilak ceremony. The cash and the articles were delivered in accordance with the argeement and it was arranged that the marriage should take place on the 23rd of May 1915. All necessary arrangements were made for the marriage but a week before the date fixed the defendant sent a message to say that the marriage would not take place. There was a subsequent definite refusal and, when the plaintiff demanded back his money and the articles that had been sent, only a portion was sent and according to the plaintiff Rs. 961 in cash and Rs. 44 as value of the articles remained unreturned. Rs. 1,025 on account of cash and ornaments and Rs. 513 for loss in connection with the marriage arrangements with interest at 6 per cent. per annum were claimed in this suit. The suit was decreed for Rs. 1,500 (?) and Rs. 513 as principal and half the interest claimed was also allowed making the total up to Rs. 1,891·5 6. On appeal by the defendant to the District Judge the decision of the first Court has been upheld and it is against this decision that the present appeal has been filed to this Court.

The first point argued in the appeal is, that paragraph 6 of the plaint shows that a new contract was entered into subsequent to the original contract and that, accordingly, section 63 of the Contract Act will not apply. Paragraph 6 of the plaint runs as follow: "That, since in the month of Asarh 1322 Fasli, the defendant altogether refused to perform the marriage, the plaintiff several times sent word to the defendant and wanted back the money and articles taken by him at Faldan and Tilak ceremonies but the defendant always put off the matter. Ultimately, in the month of Cheyt 1323 Fasli when the plaintiff sent his family priest, Sisman Pandey, the defendant returned the articles and cash as specified in Schedule 2 below promising to pay the balance shortly." If it had been that the defendant had returned the whole of the cash and articles it is possible that section 63 of the Contract Act might have applied, but it certainly does not apply in the present case. It is clear that the plaintiff never intended to accept the mere promise, that the defendant has not carried out his part of the bargain and that this being so, there is, in my opinion, not the sligtest doubt that the parties are relegated to their original position. I am supported in this view by the decision in Manohur Koyal v. Thakur Das Naskar (1).

The next point urged is, that the Court at Muzaffarpur had no jurisdiction. It is pointed out by the learnad Vakil for the appellant that the plaintiff resides in Muzaffarpur and that the defendant lives in Patna; that the agreement was entered into in Patna and that the money and articles were given at Patna; but as against this it has been admitted throughout the case that the performance of the contract was to be in Muzaffarpur and, consequently, section 20 (c) of the Code of Civil Procedure applies and the Muzaffarpur Court has jurisdiction.

The last point urged is, that the suit is barred by limitation inasmuch as it comes within the purview of Article 36 of the Limitation Act. Article 36 runs as follows: "For compensation for any malfeasance, misfeasance or non-feasance independent of contract and not herein especially provided for." Obviously, the present case does not come within the provisions of this Article. It is purely and simply a suit for damages on breach of contract.

In the result, then, in my opinion, the appeal has been rightly decided and I would dismiss this appeal with costs. The cross-objection is not pressed and is dismissed. The Court fee has been paid.

BUCKHILL, J.—I agree.

Certain property belonging to judgment-debtor was put up for sale in execution of a Civil Court decree. In the execution-sale the appellant was the highest bidder and was declared to be the purchaser but he failed to pay the deposit of Rs. 25 per cent. of the purchase-money as required by Order XXI, rule 84 (1) of the Civil Procedure Code. The sale Officer announced that the property would be re-sold next morning and it was re-sold On the second sale the price fetched was much less. The judgment-debtor made an application under Order XXI, rule 71 to make the first purchaser liable for the difference in price:

Held, that the first purchaser was liable for the difference in price inasmuch as there was a re-sale within the meaning of Order XXI, rule 84, Civil Procedure Code, and as under Order XXI, rule 71 a purchaser was liable for a default both in the making of the original deposit and in the subsequent payment of the balance due. SITA RAM v. JANKI RAM.

JUDGMENT.

PIGGOTT, J.—The case before us, whether it be described as a first appeal from order or as an application in revision, arises under the following circumstances :—

Janki Ram and others were the judgment-debtors under a certain decree. Certain house property, belonging either to Janki Ram or to all the judgment-debtors, was taken in execution of the decree and put up for sale. One Sita Ram took part in the auction-sale and bid up to a sum of Rs. 5,030. This being the highest bid offered, it was accepted by the sale officer. Sita Ram then failed to make the deposit of 25 per cent. of the purchase-money which he was required to make by the rules. It being then late in the day, the sale officer informed all the parties concerned, including any other bidders who were present at the time, that he would put up the property for sale again on the following morning. He did so, and that same property was purchased for a sum of Rs. 2,850. This was more than sufficient to satisfy the decree, so that the decree-holder ceased to have any further interest in the matter. Janki Ram subsequently applied to the Court to make Sita Ram liable for the difference in price between the sum of Rs. 5,060 bid by him and the sum of Rs. 2,850 eventually realised at the sale which took place on the second morning. There has been some argument regarding the precise form of the application made by Janki Ram to the Court, but no substantial question turns upon this. In effect, Janki Ram asked the Court to enforce in his favour the right recognised by Order XXI, rule 71 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Sita Ram entered an appearance and raised a number of objections. One was to the effect that Janki Ram alone was not entitled to maintain such an applicantion without the concurrence of the other prsons who had been judgment-debtors along with him. Another point taken was that the re sale had not taken place "forthwith" within the meaning of Order XXI, rule 84 of the Code. There had also been a claim on the part of Janki Ram for interest on the deficiency and his right to claim interest was contested by Sita Ram. A point was also taken that the application was not maintainable at all because there had been no certificate by the sale officer. The Court before which this application was made dealt with two of the points raised only. It held, on the strength of a reported decision of this Court, that the absence of a formal certificate did not make Janki Ram's application any-the-less maintainable. It would seem that, whether or not there was any formal certificate, the sale officer did report to the Court the fact that there had been a sale at which Sita Ram had bid up to the sum of Rs. 5,060 and a subsequent sale at which the price realised was only Rs. 2,850. There does not seem to be any substance in this objection. The questions raised regarding Janki Ram's right to maintain the application without the concurrence of the other judgment-debtors and with regard to the claim for interest were not determined at all. The Court held, however, that there had not been a re-sale "forthwith," as required by the rule, and on this ground alone proceeded to dismiss Janki Ram's application. The latter appealed to the District Judge. In that Court two questions were argued and determined. The District Judge held that the re-sale had taken place "forthwith" within the meaning of the rule. He was, however, faced with a further argument based upon a decision of this Court, Amir Begam v. Bank of Upper India Limited (1). It was there held that, under the analogous provisions of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882, a second auction sale held by reason of a former purchaser's failure to make the prescribed deposit was not a "re sale" within the meaning of section 293, of that Code, corresponding with Order XXI, rule 71 of Act No. V of 1908, and that, consequently, neither the decree-holder nor the judgment-debtor had any remedy against a purchaser who made no deposit at all. In effect, this Court limited the application of that rule to cases in which a purchaser, after making the 25 per cent. deposit, failed to pay the balance of the purchase-money. It has been pointed out to us in argument that the view taken by this Court has not been accepted by the High Courts of Calcutta, Madras or Bombay, but we do not propose to discuss the state of the law as it stood under the Code of 1882. We agree with the learned District Judge that the position is changed by reason of an alteration made in Order XXI, rule 84 of the present Code. Section 306 of the Code of 1882 provided that, in default of the required deposit of 25 per cent., "the property shall forthwith be put up again and sold." In Order XXI, rule 84 of the present Code the words are: "in default of such deposit the property shall forthwith be re-sold." It seems to us that the only possible reason for this change in the wording of the Code was to affirm the law in the sense in which it had been interpreted by other High Courts, as against the decision of this Court in Amir Begam v. Bank of Upper India Limited (1). As the Code now stands, the opening words of Order XXI, rule 71, namely, "any deficiency of price which may happen on a re-sale by reason of the purchaser's default," are obviously wide enough to cover a default both in the making of the original deposit and in the subsequent payment of the balance due. We think, therefore, that the ruling in Amir Begam v. Bank of Upper India Limited (1), whether that case was rightly or wrongly decided on the law as it then stood, is no longer applicable to the law as defined in the present Code of Civil Procedure. This was the view taken by the learned District Judge in the present case. He, consequently, overruled the decision of the first Court on the one ground upon which that Court had proceeded in rejecting the application of Janki Ram. As there remained other matters for determination he passed an order of remand under Order XLI, rule 23 of the Civil Procedure Code, sending the case back to the first Court in order that the matter might be disposed of on the merits. Sita Ram has brought the matter before this Court. He does not seem to have raised any question in the Court below as to the right of the District Judge to entertain the appeal made to him by the judgment-debtor Janki Ram. In this Court he desires to raise the contention that no appeal lay from the decision of the first Court, that of the Munsif of Rasra. In order to avoid any technical difficulty in the way of his raising this contention, he has described his application to this Court both as a first appeal from order and as an application in revision. If his contention is sound as to the absence of any right of appeal, then the learned District Judge in entertaining the appeal was exercising a jurisdiction not vested in him by law. We have thought it proper, therefore, to allow this question to be raised before us and to be argued out, although the point was not taken in the Court below. Treating Sita Ram as an appellant in an ordinary first appeal from order, we may say that he has one decision in his favour, and that is a decision by a Full Bench of this Court. The case in question is that of Deoki Nandan Rai v. Tapesri Lal (2). The decision was by a majority of three Judges out of four constituting the Full Bench, and one of the learned Judges who formed the majority concurred with the other two upon grounds which scarcely touched the main question in controversy. That decision expressly overruled a previous Full Bench decision of this Court in the case of Ram Dial v. Ram Das (3). It has since been considered by two other High Courts in India and expressly dissented from, vide Amir Baksh Sahib v. Venkatachala Mudali (4) and Kali Kishore Deb Sarkar v. Guru Prosad Sukul (5). It seems to us also that in the Bombay High Court the view that an appeal lies in such cases as the present has been adopted without any question. It was assumed that both an appeal and a second appeal did lie in the reported case of Ganga Das Dahyabhai v. Bai Suraj (6). In order, therefore, that the decision of this Court in Deoki Nandan Rai v. Tapesri Lal (2) might be further considered, this appeal was referred to a Full Bench of three Judges for consideration. We have come to the conclusion that the older decision of this Court was correct and that there is no adequate reason why this Court should continue, upon this question, to dissent from the view taken by the High Courts in Calcutta, Madras and Bombay. The reasons in favour of the view that an appeal lies can scarcely be stated better than they were by the learned Judges who pronounced the decision of this Court in Ram Dial v. Ram Das (3). Dealing with the analogous provisions of the Civil Procedure Code of 1859, as amended by Act No. XXIII of 1861, the learned Judges held that there seemed no real difficulty about applying the rules governing executions of decrees, mutatis mutandis to any proceeding taken against the defaulting purchaser, whether at the instance of the holder of the original decree holder or of the judgment debtor. They went on to say:—"The judgment-debtor and (if his claim be not satisfied out of the proceeds of the re-sale) the original decree-holder stand in the position of decree-holders who have obtained judgment, against the defaulting purchaser for damages occasioned by his default. The defaulting purchaser stands in the position of a judgment debtor against whom a decree for such damages has passed. They are parties to the proceeding which is substituted for the suit..... .....and the rule relating to appeals must be applied mutatis mutandis equally with any other of the rules governing executions of decrees." In effect, the view taken was that the adjudication, in a case like the present, between the judgment-debtor and the defaulting purchaser, amounts to a decree and that appeals lie under the provisions governing regular appeals from decrees. The position does not seem to be altered by any changes which have since been made in the law; if anything, the case in favour of the maintainability of an appeal is made a little stronger by the definition of the word "decree" in the Code of 1908, where it is expressly made to include the determination of any question within section 47 or section 144 of the said Code. In Amir Baksh Sahib v. Venkatachala Mudali (4) the learned Judges of the Madras High Court virtually based their decision upon the same line of reasoning, and it seems to us correct. We are of opinion, therefore, that an appeal lay to the learned District Judge in this case and that his decision on the points determined by him was correct. The order of remand was, therefore, justified under the circumstances and it will be for the Court of first instance finally and completely to determine as between the parties all the points raised by the application of Janki Ram and the objections preferred thereto on the part of Sita Ram.

(1) 30 A. 273; A. W. N. (1903) 107; 5 A. L. J. 836.

We dismiss this appeal with costs.

WALSH, J.—I entirely agree. If I were free so to hold, I should hold that a suit was expressly excluded by the provisions of Order XXI, rule 71. I am unable to frame satisfactorily to my own mind, any cause of action as between a judgment debtor and a defaulting purchaser. There is certainly no contractual relationship upon which a suit can be founded and I am unable to see what the cause of action really is or could be. To suggest that it was intended by this rule to provide machinery for passing an order to meet the justice of the case which any party could immediately afterwards bring a suit to set aside, seems to me to pay rather an extravagant compliment to the subtlety of the compilers of the Code.

JUDGMENT.—Appeal by the plaintiff. The respondents Nos. 2 to 5 Pandia, Gondia, Bholia and Chindia are brothers, Chindia being a minor, and are the tenants of an absolute occupancy holding comprising seven fields in the village of Garada, Bhandara District. The appellant is the Malguzar of this and several other villages. A notice, dated 17th July 1915, of which the following is a translation, was sent by registered post to the Malguzar at his residence in Nagpur by the tenants; it purports to be signed by Gondia on behalf of himself and the minor Chindia, and by the other two brothers,

"Notice to Raje Raghojirao Bhonsle, Malguzar of Garada Bazruck, Tahsil and District Bhandara. The undersigned are the absolute occupancy tenants of Mouza Garada Bazruck, Tahsil and District Bhandara. We are in need of Rs. 1,000. Hence advance us money taking mortgage of our absolute occupancy land. We shall pay interest at Re. 1 per cent. per mensem. We shall satisfy the amount by paying Rs. 100 besides interest every year. If you intend to do so, inform us within eight days. If you do not intend to do so, inform us accordingly. We have persuaded another Shaukar. Dated 17th July 1915."

The Manager of the appellant's estate sent a reply, dated the 3rd August 1915, of which the following is a translation:—

"To Gondia and Chindia, sons of Sakharam Kunbi, residents of Garada, Pargana and Tahsil Bhandara.

"The undersigned gives a reply to the notice as follows:—

"1. Nobody can even read or make out the contents of your notice. The number, area and jama and tenure of the field have not been given. It is not also stated what Malkana you are going to pay.

"2. The notice given by you is not legal. Hence I cannot give any consent to the mortgage."

On the 25th September 1915 the tenants mortgaged the holding to the first respondent Rajeshwar Shridhar, a Shaukar, for the consideration of Rs. 1,000—re-payment to be made in annual instalments of Rs. 100—besides interest. The mortgage was one with a condition of foreclosure on the 28th April 1916. The appellant filed the suit out of which this appeal arises, praying for the declaration that the mortgage is void against the plaintiff, having been made without his consent. In the plaint no mention is made of the notice or of the reply thereto. The defendants pleaded that a notice having been given to the landlord under sub-section (2) of section 41 of the Tenancy Act and the landlord not having made a claim under sub-section (4) the suit was not maintainable; the plaintiff admitted the receipt of the notice, but pleaded:—

"It is quite unintelligible and it could not be known as to who signed it. From the envelope it was found that the notice was given by Gondia. The plaintiff gave a reply asking Gondia as to what he meant by the notice. But the plaintiff received no answer. The notice is of no effect since it is quite vague in its terms and the Survey numbers have not been mentioned, the rental, too, not being specified and hence nothing could be made out of it." It was admitted that the defendants Nos. 2 to 5 have no other absolute occupancy field in Garada or elsewhere, though they have occupancy and ordinary holdings.

Both the lower Courts have held that the notice was an adequate notice under section 41 (2) of the Tenancy Act and was not so vague and unintelligible as to be ineffectual as such a notice, it is not argued for the appellant in this Court that the notice was illegible, for the translators in this Court have been able to read it without difficulty. Two grounds are urged by the learned Counsel for the appellant of those the first is that the notice was not signed by all the tenants but only by Gondia on his own behalf and on behalf of the minor Chindia and is, therefore, not a legal notice. This ground is not pressed as it was based on a misapprehension. The notice purports to be signed by all the tenants.

The ground which is pressed is that the notice given by the tenants is, for various reasons, not a sufficient notice and does not comply with the requirements of section 41 (2) of the Tenancy Act. It is first contended that the notice does not clearly express the intention of mortgaging to another, since it mainly consists of a request for a loan, and the reference to the Shaukar at the end is very vague and indefinite.

I entirely concur with the lower Courts in thinking that the notice clearly intimates an intention to mortgage the holding to a Shaukar on the terms mentioned in the request for a loan, unless the Malguzar himself was willing to advance a loan on mortgage. The manager's reply clearly shows that the notice was so understood for it refuses assent to a mortgage.

It is next argued that the notice did not describe the land proposed to be mortgaged with sufficient clearness to enable the landlord to know what land was meant, and even whether it was proposed to mortgage the entire holding or only part. It is admitted that the tenants had only one absolute occupancy holding, which was in Mouza Garada; the landlord is also addressed in the notice as Malguzar of Garada. I agree with the lower Courts that as it was in the landlord's knowledge that the persons giving the notice had only one absolute occupancy holding and as the notice refers to absolute occupancy land, the landlord must have known to what land the notice referred to. The notice also clearly conveys the intention of mortgaging all the absolute occupancy land.

It is contended that by his reply the manager asked for further information which the tenants did not furnish. This is not the case; the reply was a categorical refusal and closed the correspondence. It is argued that full particulars as to rent acreage, etc., should have been given in the notice so as to enable the landlord to decide whether to exercise his option without going to the trouble of getting the detail from his office. I see no force in this argument. The details were within the landlord's knowledge, that is to say, they were available to him with ordinary diligence.

It has been held in Bharatsingh v. Dhansingh (1), followed in Kodubakhsh v. Bishnu (2), that a notice under section 41 (2) of the Tenancy Act need not be worded with the accuracy of a plea. The information given in the notice was amply sufficient to inform the landlord of the tenant's intention to mortgage the whole of their absolute occupancy holding, and the lower Courts were right in so deciding.

It is finally argued that a notice must by law contain the particulars specified in section 41 (2), at any rate, as regards the rent. The sub section, however, does not say, that these particulars should be given in the notice, it merely states the circumstances under which the tenant must give notice, and presupposes a knowledge on the part of both landlord and tenant as to the particulars of the tenant's holding. The learned Counsel for the appellant does not support the appeal on the ground that the landlord was entitled to consider the notice invalid because, as stated in his reply, the notice did not say what Malkana the tenants were going to pay. The terms of the reply, however, cannot be disregarded. It seems obvious that the landlord's object was to ignore the provisions of section 41, and to try and get a premium to induce him to consent to the mortgage. The lower Courts were right in holding the notice to be a valid one, and the appeal is dismissed with costs.

Mortgage—Redemption—Usufructuary and simple mortgages executed at one time—Tacking—Payment of both necessary at redemption—Interest, deficiency in, to be recovered every year—Entire deficiency, whether can be recovered at redemption.

Where two mortgages, one usufructuary and the other simple, were executed of the same property on the same date in favour of the same mortgagee with a condition that the money secured by the simple mortgage was to be paid along with that of the usufructuary mortgage at the time of redemption, the simple mortgage is tacked to the usufructuary mortgage and its payment is necessary before the property can be redeemed. [p. 819, col. 2.]

The mere fact that a usufructuary mortgagee is given an option of recovering from the mortgagor at the end of every year any deficiency in the interest provided for by the mortgage, does not make the interest cease to be a part of the mortgage-money and a mortgagor at the time of redemption must pay the principal and interest due at that time. [p. 820, col. 1.]

Second appeal from a decree of the Second Additional Judge, Aligarh, confirming a decree of the Munsif, Kasganj.

Mr. Panna Lal, for the Appellant.

Messrs. A. Sanyal and Kirpa Ram Dang, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—These two appeals are by the plaintiff in a redemption suit. The suit was by the plaintiff to redeem a usufructuary mortgage of the 22nd of November 1884 for Rs. 1,500, and for recovery of surplus profits. There was another simple mortgage of the same date which was to be paid along with the usufructuary mortgage. These mortgages were in favour of one Daulat Ram. He sold his rights as mortgagee to Srikishen Das and Tika on the 10th of April 1835. On the 20th of June 1912 the mortgagors sold the mortgaged property to Tika Ram. The result was that Tika Ram became the sole owner of half the mortgaged property and had the equity of redemption only in the other half.

The plaintiff, who is the son of Tika Ram, sues to redeem half the mortgage on payment of half the amount due under the usufructuary mortgage only, but does not want to pay the second mortgage which was contracted to be paid along with the usufructuary mortgage. The defendants pleaded in defense that the plaintiff was bound to pay the amount due on the second mortgage also and that there had been a deficiency in the interest due on the first mortgage which the plaintiff was also liable to pay before he could get a decree for redemption.

The First Court held that the principal mortgage-money was due on the first mortgage but that there had been no deficiency in interest and that, in any case, interest could not be recovered for more than 12 years. On the second mortgage, which was a simple mortgage, the Court held that the plaintiff was bound to redeem it along with the usufructuary mortgage. Both the parties appealed. The plaintiff's appeal was about his non-liability to pay the second mortgage. The defendants in their appeal claimed the deficiency in interest up to the time of redemption. The lower Appellate Court dismissed the plaintiff's appeal, holding that the simple mortgage was also to be paid along with the usufructuary mortgage, and decreed that of the defendants, holding that the defendants were entitled to recover the deficiency in interest for the whole period of the mortgage and not for two years only as decreed by the First Court. Hence these two appeals by the plaintiff.

The first point argued with great vigour by Mr. Panna Lal, the learned Vakil for the plaintiff, was that the mortgagees having been given the option of recovering the deficiency in interest at the end of each year, could not go on adding it to the mortgage-money and thus increasing the amount payable at the time of the redemption of the mortgage. He also contended that the second mortgage, which was a simple one, being barred by time the defendants-mortgagees had no right left to claim the money due on that mortgage in addition to that due on the usufructuary mortgage. The second contention may be disposed of very shortly. It is quite clear that the second mortgage was in clear terms tacked to the first and its payment was necessary before the property could be redeemed. No question of limitation arises in the case. As to the next point, namely, that the defendants could not get the deficiency in interest for the whole term of the mortgage, we are of opinion that this contention must also fail. This case is governed by the principle of law laid down in the cases of Ohintaman v. Dulari (1) and Nathamuni Fillai v. Vengammal (2). The mere fact that a mortgagee was given an option, if he so chose, of realising the deficiency by a suit directed against the person of the mortgagor did not make the interest cease to be a part of the mortgage-money. Before the plaintiff can succeed in a suit for redemption he must pay the mortgage money, which includes the principal and interest due at the time of redemption. The cases of Kesar Kunwar v. Kashi Ram (3) and Ali Ahmad v. Kalka Prasad (4) do not apply to the present case. These two points dispose of the two appeals of the plaintiff. There are, however, cross-objections by the defendants, by which they claim deficiency in interest up to the date fixed for payment. This they are entitled to get. It is, however, stated by Mr. Panna Lal for the plaintiff that the money found by the lower Appellate Court as due from the plaintiff has been deposited in Court for payment to the defendants in February 1920. If that is so, the decree of the Court below will be modified by adding thereto the deficiency in interest from June 1919 to February 1920 at the same rate at which it has been calculated in the account prepared in the Munsif's Court after issues were remitted to him by the lower Appellate Court. If the amount has not been so deposited, the defendants-mortgagees will get their deficiency in interest up to six months from the date of this decree which will be the date fixed for payment. The result, therefore, is that we dismiss the two appeals and allow the cross-objections with costs in all Courts.

*Hindu Law—Will, construction of—Uncertainty—Charitable bequest—*Cy-pres, doctrine of, applicability of—Reversioner, remote—Right to challenge—Will.

In construing a Will the Court must bear in mind who the testator is and the language used by him for expressing his wishes which may or may not be adapted for legal precision, and the primary rule is to ascertain whether the object aimed at by the testator could be carried out without making a new Will for him. Although there may be vagueness in the selection of the places or in the allocation of the funds, so long as it is ascertainable that the testator had a particular object in view, that object must be given effect to [p. 822, col. 2]

If the Court can ascertain that there is a general charitable intention expressed in a Will the fact that the particular object for which the charity is intended does not exist or that the fund intended for that charity cannot exhaust the whole income will not be any reason for holding that the bequest fails either wholly or in part. [p. 823, col. 1.]

The doctrine of cy-pres should receive as extended an application as possible so as to give effect to the true intent and aim of the donor. His lapses, his ignorance, and his failure to understand the situation should not fetter the Courts so long as the purposes specified by him are not violated. [p. 823, col. 1.]

A Hindu testator made a Will in which he said, "I want the entire residue of my estate to be applied by my executors in some manner from which my brotherhood will derive benefit My executors should sell my house property and add the sale-proceeds to the cash balance and in this manner apply the total in work of public good, but whatever is done the benefit of my brotherhood is to be kept in view. What I mean is this. They are to give assistance in the construction by the brotherhood of any temple, etc., at any holy place, etc., or they are to give scholarships in any school to students belonging to the brotherhood":

Held, that the clause was not void for uncertainty. [p. 823, col 1.]

A suit to contest a Will must be brought by the immediate reversionary heir of the testator, but if the nearest reversionary heir refuses without sufficient cause to institute proceedings or has precluded himself by his own act or conduct from suing or has colluded with the opposite party or has accepted the Will, and the next presumable heir states in the plaint the circumstances under which he claims to sue, a Court would exercise a judicial discretion in determining whether he is or is not competent to sue. [p. 821, col. 2; p 822, col. 1]

First appeal from a decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Ferozepore, dated the 3rd July 1917.

Pandit Sheo Narain, R. B., and Pandit Kanwar Narain, for the Appellants.

Lalas Jaggan Nath and Mehr Chand Mahajan, for the Plaintiffs-Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a first appeal against a decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Ferozepore, decreeing a claim for a declaration that a certain passage in the Will of one Bhola Nath Kalal, deceased, is void for uncertainty.

The plaintiffs are Kallu Ram and Bahadur Lal, sons of Parshadi Lal, the brother of the testator and his nearest surviving relative. Bhola Nath died in 1916 without issue but leaving a widow Musammat Bachawan Devi. The Will is dated 4th June 1913 and there is no dispute about its due execution.

Parshadi Lal was practically disinherited by the Will. He was left a sum of Rs. 35 per mensem to be paid by the executors for his lifetime on condition that he did not dispute the Will on the testator's death. There were certain cash legacies including Rs. 500 to each of the plaintiffs. Provision was made for the widow and she was enjoined to adopt a son to whom the bulk of the testator's property was eventually to be conveyed on terms which need not be detailed, by four executors and trustees Lalas Sundar Lal, Behari Lal, Shankar Lal, and Basant Lal.

Then follows the passage which is the subject of suit.

Agar koi mutbanna muqarrir na hua ho ya lawald faut ho jaue ya shadi hone ke bad bewa chhor mare to Committee mazkur ko ikhtiyar hoga kih bad intizam guzara bewa ke (agar bewa ho) wa bad mujrai digar akhrajat mutaalka ke baki rcqm sar-i-nakd wa sud wa kiraya makanat waghaira jis qadr kih ho kisi aise kam men legate rahe jis se apni baradri ko aram pahuchhe. Our jumla makanat.....firokht karke qimat firokht shamil naqd sarmaya kar dewe aur isi tarah kam rafa-i-am men istimal kare, magar har surat men apni baradri ka aram malhuz rakha jawe, yane agar koi mandar waghaira baradri ki taraf se kisi tirath waghaira par zer temir ho to usmen imdad di jawe ya kisi skul men apni baradri ke tulba ko wazifajat de jawen.

The words underlined (in roman) have been held by the learned Subordinate Judge to render the bequest vague and uncertain and, applying the test of feasibility of control by a Court laid down by the Privy Council in Runchordas Vandravandas v. Parvatibai (1), he has found it would be impossible for the Court to have any control over the administration of the objects of the bequest and that it would be open to the trustees to devote the money to objects over the administration of which the Court could have no possible control.

As stated already, the Subordinate Judge decreed in favour of the plaintiffs declaring that the portion of the Will above quoted be cancelled and ordered that the costs of the plaintiffs be paid from the estate. The defendants were the four trustees, the widow, Musammat Bachawan, and the father of the plaintiffs, Parshadi Lal, who is now said to have died a few days after delivery of the lower Court's judgment.

The trustees have appealed and two points have been urged in their behalf; firstly, that the plaintiffs are not entitled to maintain the action, and, secondly, that there is no such indefiniteness and vagueness as justifies the cancellation from the Will of the passage in dispute.

On the first point the learned Advocate for the appellants relies on the Privy Council decision in Rani Anand Kunwar v. Court of Wards (2) which was a case of contest by a reversionary heir of the adoption of a son by a Hindu widow and where it was laid down that the right to sue must be limited; that, as a general rule, the suit must be brought by the presumptive reversionary heir, but that if the nearest heir had refused, without sufficient cause, to institute proceedings or had precluded himself by his own act or conduct from suing or had colluded with the widow or had concurred in the act alleged to be wrongful and, if the next presumable heir stated in the plaint the circumstances under which he claimed to sue, a Court would exercise a judicial discretion in determining whether he was or was not competent to sue.

(2) 6 C. 764; 8 C. L. R. 381; 8 I. A. 14; 4 Shome L. R. 78; 4 Sar. P. C. J. 195; 5 Ind. Jur. 161; Rafique and Jackson's P. C. No. 63; 3 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 495 (P. C.).

It has been argued that there is no evidence that the widow and Parshadi Lal have refused to join in the suit or have precluded themselves from suing to set aside the portion of the Will impugned by the plaintiffs.

We think, however, that the plaintiff are entitled to maintain the suit. The position of a Hindu widow is that of a life tenant not that of a full heir and, ordinarily, she is not competent to challenge any disposition of property by her husband. Further, in this particular case, Musammat Bachawan Devi is not interested in the provisions of the Will which are sought to be set aside since they are to become effective only in the event of her dying without adopting a son. As regards Parshadi Lal, the plaintiffs' plaint asserts that he and Musammat Bachawan Devi had refused to join in the suit "out of greedy motives," they were joined as defendants, and they did not plead that they had not so refused. Under the terms of the Will, moreover, Parshadi Lal was to lose his monthly allowance of Rs. 35 in the event of his raising any dispute after the testator's death, and by accepting the bequest, as he is admitted to have done, he bound himself not to contest in any way the disposition by Bhola Nath of his property. In our opinion Parshadi Lal had precluded himself from suing and his sons, the next reversionary heirs, were competent to bring the suit.

In regard to the second question of whether the provision under consideration is void on the ground of uncertainty, it is obvious that if a testator legally has the power to dispose of his property by Will his wishes should be given effect to if they are expressed in language which makes it clear what they are and how they should be carried out. When a testator creates a trust it must be for a definite and lawful object.

The Privy Council ruling reported as Runchordas Vandravandas v. Parvatibai (1) that a bequest by a Hindu testator of property to trustees for "dharm" is void for uncertainty has been followed in a large number of cases [e. g. Shahab-ud-din v. Sohan Lal (3), and Gurdit Singh v. Sher Singh (4),] but is not exactly in point in the present case except as laying down what the learned Subordinate Judge has pointed out correctly to be the proper test to apply whether a trust by bequest is of such a nature that it can be under the control of the Court. The decision of their Lordships was based upon a leading English case, Morice v. Bishop of Durham (5), which was also followed in the decision of the Bombay High Court Trikumdas Damodhar v. Haridas (6), that the bequest of a residue to executors for making use of as they might think proper for purposes of popular usefulness or for purposes of charity was bad for uncertainty.

In Parbati Bibee v. Ram Barun Upadhya (7) the bequest of a residuary estate for expenditure by an executor in "religious and charitable purposes" was held to be valid, and it is pointed out in a judgment of the Madras High Court, Muthukrishna Naicken v. Ramchandra Naicken (8), by Mr. Justice Sheshagiri Aiyar that in English cases more recent than those which are the basis of the Indian rulings regarding bequests for "dharm" or "dharma" bequests to charities have been treated by the Courts with less disfavour than formerly. He cites three such cases in which bequests to unspecified charitable institutions have been held to be good and goes on to say,—

"The primary rule is to ascertain whether the object aimed at by the testator could be carried out without making a new Will for him. Although there may be vagueness in the selection of the places or in the allocation of the funds, so long as it is ascertainable that the testator had a particular object in view and that he intended the funds left by him should be appropriated to that object, Courts are bound to see that the persons appointed by the testator do not misappropriate the funds."

Continuing, the same learned Judge deduced from certain other English decisions which he cites,

"that if the Court can ascertain that there was a general charitable intention, the fact that the particular object for which the charity was intended did not exist or that the fund intended for that charity could not exhaust the whole income will not be any reason for holding that the bequest failed either wholly or in part."

And, again, later on, speaking of the powers of Indian Courts to give directions towards the application of trust income, Mr. Justice Sheshagiri Aiyar remarked,

"The doctrine of cy-pres should receive as extended an application as possible so as to give effect to the true intent and aim of the donor. His lapses, his ignorance, and his failure to understand the situation should not fetter the Courts so long as the purposes specified by him are not violated."

With these observations we are in complete accord and we consider it important in dealing with a case like the present to bear in mind who the testator was and the medium used by him for expressing his wishes, which here was not a language adopted for legal precision. Bhola Nath possibly had never heard the English word charity and his use of the word "rafa-i-am" cannot be presumed to indicate an intention either to distinguish his disposition from or identify it with those which the English Courts have recognised as charitable bequests.

The learned Subordinate Judge, we consider, has been misled by his conception of the meaning of the word "yane" which he interprets "for instance." He translates the passage beginning with that word "for instance they might contribute towards the construction of some mandir being built at some place of pilgrimage, etc., or establish scholarships at certain schools for the boys of the brotherhood." He refers to this passage more than once as containing the suggestions of the testator.

In our opinion the contents are very much more definite than suggestions. The proper meaning of the word "yane" is "that is to say" and we think that the succeeding words specify with very fair precision the actual purpose of the trust as intended by the testator.

The two preceding phrases "kisi aise kam men lagate rahe jis se apni baradri ko aram paunche," and "aur isi tarah kam rafa-i-am men istimal kare. Magar har surat men apni baradari ka aram malhuz rakha jawe," are introductory and are meant to lead up to the final specific declaration. They are, so to speak, an expression on paper of the working of the testator's mind showing the birth of an idea and how it was developed.

The meaning of the clause of the Will in question seems to us to be as follows:— "If my scheme for adoption falls through I want the entire residue of my estate to be applied by my executors in some manner from which my brotherhood will derive benefit. In that event my executors should sell my house property and add the sale proceeds to the cash balance and in this manner apply the total in work of public good, but whatever is done the benefit of my brotherhood is to be kept in view. What I mean is this. They are to give assistance in the construction by the brotherhood of any temple, etc., at any holy place, etc., or they are to give scholarships in any school to students belonging to the brotherhood."

In other words, the trustees were directed to apply the money to charitable objects of two specified descriptions. As regards the scholarships there can be no ambiguity. The executors are given an absolutely unfettered choice of schools but this, the wording shows, was the testator's deliberate intention. The occurrence of the word "waghaira" (et cetera) twice in the preceding sentence was thought by the Subordinate Judge to render the whole phrase vague and indefinite. We do not consider that there is any such vagueness as would justify the direction being declared void for uncertainty. As regards "mandar waghaira" the word temir shows that it is to be a work of construction and the previous word aram that it is to conduce to the comfort and convenience of Kalals. Tirath means, according to Fallon's Dictionary, a holy spot; a place of pilgrimage (especially sacred waters)" and "tirath waghaira" read in conjunction with the rest of the sentence would in its widest sense be any place to which Kalals resort for the purpose of religious observances. It is noticeable that the trustees are restricted and the estate protected by the words "baradri ki taraf se." The trustees are not to act independently in constructing temples, bathing ghats or the like but are to work in concert with other members of the Kalal community. The purpose of the trust, in our opinion, is expressed with sufficient clarity, it will always be open to the trustees to seek the help of the Court in cases of doubt, and we do not apprehend that the Court will find any difficulty in guiding them.

For these reasons we hold that the decree of the learned Subordinate Judge must be reversed. We accept the appeal set aside that decree and order that the plaintiffs' suit be dismissed with costs in both Courts.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s. 22—Occupancy holding—Succession—Widow succeeding to her husband in 18 —Widow's death after 1901—Succession, how governed—Bengal Rent Act (X of 1859), s. 6—N. W. P. Rent Act (XVIII of 1873).

The right of an occupancy tenant was created for the first time by the provisions of section 6 of Act X of 1859 and that right was neither transferable nor heritable. Until the passing of Act XVIII of 1873 there was no rule of succession provided for occupancy holdings and succession was governed by custom which varied in different villages. [p. 825, col. 2.]

One N, an occupancy tenant, died about 1868. On his death his widow entered into possession of the occupancy holding. In 1893 the widow made a gift of the property to the defendant. The widow died in 1915 and the plaintiffs, her reversioners, sued for possession:

Held, that as the widow was permitted to continue cultivation of the holding after her husband's death she acquired in her own right after twelve years the right of an occupancy tenant and that, consequently, succession was governed by section 22 of the Agra Tenancy Act, 1901, and that as the plaintiffs did not share in the cultivation at the widow's death they could not succeed. JUDGMENT.

GOKUL PRASAD, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for possession of a certain cultivatory holding. The plaintiffs came to Court on the allegations that one Nanhe Singh who owned a large area of occupancy holding and fixed-rate holding, died about 1863, that after him his widow Musammat Nankai entered into possession of the occupancy holding as a life tenant with limited rights only, that she made a gift of the said property to Manpal Singh, defendant, and his wife in the year, 1893, that she being only a life-tenant had no right to make the gift, that the gift was, therefore, invalid, that she died in the year 1915 and that, thereupon, they, the plaintiffs now sued as her next reversioner for possession which was postponed till her death. The original tenant Nanhe Singh having died before the Tenancy Act of 1873 was passed, the question is, was there a succession to his holding at the time of his death and, if so, to whom. We have not been able to find any provision of law regulating the devolution of succession to an occupancy tenancy at that time. The right of an occupancy tenant was first created by Act X of 1859. Section 6 of that Act runs as follows:—"Every Raiyat, who has cultivated or held land for a period of twelve years, has a right of occupancy in the land so cultivated or held by him, whether it be held under pottah or not, so long as he pays the rent payable on account of the same, but this rule does not apply to khomar, nijjote, or sir land belonging to the proprietor of the estate or tenure and let by him on lease for a term or year by year, not (as respects the actual cultivator) to lands sub-let for a term or year by year by a Raiyat having a right of occupancy. The holding of the father or other person from whom a Raiyat inherits, shall be deemed to be the holding of the Raiyat within the meaning of this section."

In the case of Ajoodhya Pershad v. Imam Bandi (1) a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court held that such a right was not transferable, and Sir Barnes Peacock stated in his judgment, 'speaking for myself I am not at all sure that a right of occupancy gained under section 6, Act X of 1859, is necessarily heritable.'

In Nurendro Narain v. Ishan Chunder Sen (2) a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court decided that such a right was not transferable.

In Doorga Pershad v. Dochur Pershad (3) this Court held that the ordinary Hindu Law did not of necessity apply to the succession of an occupancy holding, and appeared to lay down a principle that in certain circumstances a co-cultivator, closely related to the occupancy tenant, such as a son et-cetra, might succeed to the holding. At page 188 they are reported to have said :— "It is assumed in the judgment appealed from, that upon the death of a Raiyat having a right of occupancy, his heirs, however remote, may claim to succeed to his holding as their inheritance. No authority is cited except that the Hindu Law of Inheritance is referred to ; and the defendants being found to be heirs by Hindu Law are declared entitled to the right of occupancy by inheritance. On the death of a Raiyat having a right of occupancy his son or other immediate heir residing with him in the village usually succeeds. Remote heirs residing elsewhere and coming to the village after an interval have not been allowed to take possession of his holding as a part of their inheritance. In the case the grandson of the Raiyat (his daughter's son) who, it is stated, would presumably inherit his own father's cultivation, was not allowed to succeed to the holding of his grandfather. It may be inferred that he resided with his father elsewhere than in the deceased Raiyat's village.'

In a subsequent decision, Pem Koer v. Ooper Bulee Singh (4), the same Court held that it was not correct to say that the ordinary Hindu Law would apply. The learned Judges in their judgment had referred to paragraph 125 of 'The Directions to Settlement Officers'. Those observations referred to tenants at fixed-rate and not to tenants in general.

However, leaving this matter aside, it is quite clear that we cannot, in the face of these authorities, come to the conclusion that the right of an occupancy tenant devolved according to the ordinary rule of succession of Hindu Law as in the case of other estate. Until the passing of Act XVIII of 1873 there was no rule of succession provided for occupancy holdings. They were apparently governed by custom which varied in different villages. No custom is found here.

Under these circumstances, there are two ways of looking at the case. The point in short, is, what was the nature of the right which Musammut Nankai obtained by virtue of taking possession of the occupancy tenancy? After the death of her husband she continued in undisturbed possession thereof up to the time of her death. If she was in possession, as alleged by the plaintiffs, by inheritance the defendants could acquire no rights from her by virtue of the gift in their favour because she had no such rights to pass, and, further, the plaintiffs whose rights of enjoyment could be said at the best to have been postponed during her life, could not have possibly been co-sharers in the cultivation of the sir as they were not in existence at the time of her husband's death and, therefore, their suit was bound to fail. If, on the other hand, by such continuous possession she obtained an occupancy right in herself then the succession opened on her death and the plaintiffs did not fulfil the conditions prescribed under section 22 of the Tenancy Act now in force to come in as her heirs. In either view of the case, the plaintiffs' claim was bound to fail and the Courts below have erred in decreeing the claim. I would, therefore, allow the appeal and modify the decrees of the Courts below by decreeing the plaintiffs' claim only in respect of the fixed rate tenancy and dismissing the rest of the claim with proportionate costs.

(4) 2 N. W. P. H. C. R. 86.

STUART, J.—I concur in the order proposed. I have to add very little to it. As I understand the law, the right of an occupancy tenant was created for the first time by the provisons of section 6 of Act X of 1859 except under special customs which are not shown to have existed in the village in which the land in dispute is situated. In order to decide the question whether on the death of an occupancy tenant whose rights were created by Act X of 1859 and who died before Act XVIII of 1873 came into force, such rights were heritable or not, it would appear to be necessary only to examine the words of section 6, and after examining these words to decide whether this section created in the occupancy tenant an estate such as is known to the law of England as an 'estate of inheritance.' Apart from anything which may have been decided by this Court, it appears to me that on the wording of the section it is impossible to hold that an 'estate of inheritance' was so created, An occupancy tenant under that section obtained, in my opinion, a non-heritable right to retain the cultivation of his occupancy holding so long as he paid his rent, and such right was created by the Act of 1859 for the first time, where it had not previously existed by custom. Act XVIII of 1873 undoubtedly created an estate of inheritance, but I agree with the view that was taken as long ago as 1876 by Sir Barnes Peacock that the right created by Act X of 1859 was neither transferable nor heritable. So, when Nanhe Singh died, the rights of occupancy came to an end. His widow Nankai being permitted to continue cultivation of the holding after her husband's death acquired in her own right after twelve years the right of an occupancy tenant. Now that she is dead, the question is, how is succession to her governed? It is clearly governed by the provisions of section 22 of the present Tenancy Act (Local Act No. II of 1901) and the plaintiffs cannot claim the right to succeed her as they did not (whatever be their title in other respects) share in the cultivation of the holding at the time of her death.

BY THE COURT.—The order of the Court is that the appeal is allowed and the decrees of the Courts below are modified, the claim of the plaintiffs to the occupancy holding only being dismissed. Costs are to be in proportion to failure and success and the costs in this Court will include fees on the higher scale.

A deed of doubtful import is best construed by evidence of the conduct of the parties to it—optimus interpres rerum usus. [p. 827, col. 2.]

Article 140 of the Second Schedule of the Limitation Act of 1877 contemplates a suit by a remainderman or reversioner for possession of immoveable property, when his estate falls into possession. [p. 828, col. 1.]

There is no bar to the application of Article 140 of the Second Schedule of the Limitation Act of 1877 to a suit for recovery of possession of a land of an estate which did not fall into possession of the plaintiff until after the death of a person who was in possession of the estate as a limited owner under an ekrarnama. It is immaterial whether the ekrarnama, conferred a life-estate properly so called and whether the plaintiff was a remainderman or reversioner, taking after the lapse of a life-estate in its strict sense. To such a suit Articles 142 and 144 cannot apply. [p. 828, cols. 1 & 2.]

JUDGMENT.—The questions raised before us in these appeals relate to the plea of limitation.

Golaknath Ray was the owner of the lands in controversy. He died many years ago leaving him surviving a widow Jahnavi Chaudhurani and after giving her an authority to adopt a son or three sons in succession. In pursuance of the authority to adopt Jahnavi adopted Baikuntnath Ray, but when the latter had attained the age of majority, disputes arose between them as to the management of the estate left by Golaknath. Jahnavi sought to keep the management and control to the exclusion of Baikuntnath. These disputes, however, were settled by an ekrarnama executed on the 22nd Bhadra 1272 B. S., corresponding with 6th September 1865. Baikuntnath married the plaintiff Dinamani Chaudhurani and on his death, without male issue in 1887, Dinamani, as his widow, became his heiress. Jahnavi, however, continued to be in possession in the same way as before Baikuntnath's death. She died in 1900, and then Dinamani took possession of the estate left by her father-in-law Golaknath and her husband Baikuntnath. During the lifetime of Jahnavi the defendants or their predecessors-in-title had taken possession of the disputed lands and their possession had lasted for more than twelve years before the institution of the suits under appeal.

If Jahnavi had an estate for life under the ekrarnama of 1865, and if Baikuntnath was the remainderman or reversioner, the death of Jahnavi would be the starting point for calculating the period of limitation under Article 140 of the Second Schedule of the Limitation Act. The lower Courts have construed the deed as giving Jahnavi an estate for life and have decided the question of limitation in favour of the plaintiff. The contention on behalf of the defendants is, that the ekrarnama did not create an estate for life, but that it merely empowered her to manage during her natural life, that it was only an irrevocable power-of-attorney, the estate continuing to be vested in Baikantnath in the same way as before the execution of the deed. The further contention on their behalf is that, even if the deed be not an irrevocable power-of-attorney, the estate created by it was not strictly a life-estate, and Baikuntnath was neither the remainderman nor the reversioner, and his heiress is not entitled to the benefit of Article 140. The case admittedly does not come under Article 141, as Jahnavi was not in possession as a Hindu widow or mother. The contention of the defendants, therefore, is that the plaintiff is barred either under Article 142 or 144 of the Second Schedule.

The question of the construction of this deed is not res integra. In 1897 it was construed in this Court at the instance of some of the defendants who, in a suit instituted by Jahnavi for possession of land, pleaded that she had no real right entitling her to sue for possession but that she was merely a manager under the deed. The Court held that the deed gave Jahnavi an estate for life. In two other appeals Dinamoni v. Elahudad Khan (1) and Dinamoni v. Elahadut Khan (2) in which the present plaintiff was appellant and one Elahudad Khan was the respondent, it was held that the deed gave Jahnavi an estate for life.

The conduct of the parties to the deed also tends to show that they thought that Jahnavi was not merely a manager, that she had an estate which entitled her to possession and enjoyment of the profits during her lifetime, and that Baikuntnath was not entitled to re-enter until after her death. A deed of doubtful import is best construed by evidence of the conduct of the parties to it—optimus interpres rerum usus.

We have carefully examined the document both in the vernacular and the translation in English, and our conclusion is substantially the same as that arrived at by the learned Judges who had to deal with it. The Anumati-patra under which Jahnavi obtained her power to adopt a son gave her authority to manage or preserve her husband's estate but without prescribing any period or extent. It created no estate in her. The ekrarnamah, however, executed by her son, distinctly gave her the power to possess and enjoy the property for her life(Bhogbanodahhalikar). The son thereby withdrew all claims to possession of the property covered by the instrument except as to certain villages specified in it. Jahnavi was to perform all acts of possession, to sue and be sued as owner during her life and to appropriate to her own use the profits, conditionally on her paying household and marriage expenses, etc. The son reserved the right to enter into possession only after her death and thereby created in himself the right of a remainderman. He could not exercise any acts of possession or sue for possession a wrong-doer against Jahnavi during the latter's lifetime. These are indicia of an estate for life strictly so-called.

(1) 7 C. W. N. 678.
(2) 8 C. W. N. 843.

But there are other expressions and conditions in the ekrarnama which appear to be anomalous. Jahnavi had not the power of alienation, even of her life-estate, and any accretions and accumulations made during her lifetime were not to go to her heirs or heiresses of stridhan but to her son and his heirs. It would seem that the deed was merely intended to give the rights and impose the obligations of a Hindu widow and to postpone the period of the adopted son's possession until his mother's death. The estate was not a life estate and Baikuntrath was not a remainderman strictly so called; Jahnavi's right to possession under the ekrarnamah was also materially different from what right she had under the words in the power of adoption.

It is, however, immaterial whether the deed conferred on Jahnavi a life-estate properly so called, and whether Baikanta was a remainderman or reversioner, taking after the lapse of a life-estate in its strict sense. Article 140 of the Second Schedule of the Limitation Act contemplates a suit by a remainderman or reversioner for possession of immoveable property, when his estate falls into possession. Baikantanath, and on his death, during Jahnavi's lifetime, his widow Dinamani, were entitled to possession only after the determination of the limited or particular estate held by Jahnavi, whatever its precise nature may have been. The estate did not fall into possession until Jahnavi's death, and we see no bar to the application of Article 140 to the facts of the case, and if that Article applies, the plaintiff's suit is not time-barred.

Articles 142 and 144 cannot apply as the plaintiff [which word, according to the interpretation clause (section 3) includes also any person from or through whom a plaintiff derives his right to sue] was not dispossessed and the possession of the defendants did not become adverse to her until Jahnavi's death.

No other question has been argued before us, and, the plea of limitation failing, the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

DHARAM SINGH v. HIRA.

JUDGMENT.—The following pedigree will show the right under which the parties to the suit are litigating:—

Baldeo Singh, the grandson of Sahab Rai, is stated to have died long ago, leaving him surviving his brother Gopal Singh and his widow Musammat Rukman. She, after the death of her husband, lived with Gopal Singh as his wife by Karao marriage. The parties are Jats, and such a form of marriage is permissible in their community. Gopal Singh died about forty years ago. After the death of Gopal Singh, the name of Musammat Rukman was entered in the revenue papers in respect of the immoveable property of the two brothers. She died on the 10th of July 1915 without leaving any issue. After her death, there was a dispute in the Revenue Court between the descendants of Jaisukh and those of Nathua as to whose names should be entered in respect of the property which at one time belonged to Gopal Singh and Baldeo. The Revenue Court decided in favour of the descendants of Sheo Ram, and their names were accordingly mutated. Thereupon, on the 19th of September 1917, the suit out of which this appeal has arisen was instituted by Dharam Singh and Kartar Singh, two of the grandsons of Jaisukh, for the recovery of the possession of the entire property of Gopal Singh and Baldeo Singh as the nearest reversioners. The claim was brought against the descendants of Sheo Ram who had been successful in the Revenue Court. The defendants resisted the suit on various pleas, two of which were that under an arrangement entered into between the descendants of Nathua and Jaisukh on the death of Baldeo Singh half of the property of the two brothers had been allotted to the descendants of Jaisukh and the other half was to go to the descendants of Nathua after the death of Gopal Singh and Musammat Rukman, and, secondly, that under a custom obtaining in the family to which the parties belonged, all the collaterals irrespective of their degree succeed equally to the last male holder. Both parties gave evidence. The Court of first instance found that the family arrangement set up by the defence had not been proved. The custom advanced on behalf of the defence, however, was accepted by the Court and a decree in favour of the plaintiffs to the extent of 1·4th in the property in suit was passed. The plaintiffs have come up in appeal before us and challenge the finding of the Court below on the question of custom, while the defendants have filed cross-objections impeaching the finding of the lower Court with regard to the alleged family arrangement stated in the written statement for the defence. It is contended on behalf of the plaintiffs-appellants that the evidence on the record does not establish the custom upon which the defence relies for the proposition that all collaterals irrespective of degree succeed equally to the last male holder. The learned Counsel for the appellants has read to us the evidence on behalf of the defence and has criticised it at length. We find that eleven witnesses were examined on behalf of the defence, all of whom with one voice say that the custom prevailing among the Jats, who have migrated to Meerut from the Punjab, as to the succession of collaterals, is that reversioners irrespective of degree, that is, whether near or remote, inherit. They go on to explain in their evidence that when they say that reversioners succeed equally to the last male holder, they mean that each branch takes its share per stirpes. They also give instances, most of which are borne out by the khewats that have been tendered in evidence by the defence. One of the plaintiffs, Dharam Singh, himself had deposed in support of this custom in another case. In the present case he went into the witness-box and tried to explain his previous statement away but he failed. One of the witnesses for the plaintiffs, namely, Phul Singh, also supports the case for the defence. On the evidence as it stands on the record, we find that the custom stated by the defence stands proved. The oral evidence for the plaintiffs is quite unsatisfactory and does not rebut the evidence for the defence. Moreover, we find that the custom deposed to by the defence witnesses is borne out by the customary law as enunciated in paragraph 25 of Mr. Rattigan's book "Digest of Customary Law for the Punjab." We are, therefore, of opinion that the finding of the lower Court on this point is correct.

As to the cross-objections the arrangement set up on behalf of the defence is not borne out by any evidence worth the name.

The result is that both the appeal and the cross-objections fail, and we dismiss both of them with costs including, in this Court, fees on the higher scale, if any.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 2 (3)—Execution—Decree, satisfaction of, not certified to Court, cannot be recognised.

Under Order XXI, rule 2 (3) of the Civil Procedure Code a payment or adjustment of a decree which has not been certified or recorded cannot be recognised by any Court executing the decree. [p. 831, col. 1.]

Petition, under section 25 of Act IX of 1887, praying the High Court to revise an order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Mayavaram, in Execution Petition Revision No. 8 of 1920, in Small Cause Suit No. 752 of 1916, dated 17th of March 1920.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. K. Rajah Aiyar, for the Petitioner.—This is an application to revise the order of the Subordinate Judge of Mayavaram who dismissed my execution application, holding that the decree which I attached had already been satisfied. My point is that under Order XXI, rule 2 (3), the Executing Court cannot recognise a payment which is not certified. Here the satisfaction of the decree has not been certified. I am supported by the decisions in Budrudeen v. Gulam Mohideen (1), Mathar Dravia Sahaya Ela Nidhi Co. v. Subramania Pillai (2), Anantha Rama Aiyar v. Kumaraswami Pandaram (3), Krishna Aiyar v. Savurimuthu Pillai (4). So I am entitled to succeed.

Mr. T. S. Ramaswami Aiyar, for the Respondent.—Here the satisfaction of the decree was intimated to the Tiruvalur Court. The following cases support me in showing that such a payment could be pleaded. Rama Ayyan v. Sreenivasa Pattar (5), Trimbak Ramkrishna v. Hari Laxman (6), Subbia

Pillai v. Alliar Routher (7), Lodd Govinda Doss v. Rajah of Karvetnagar (8) and Nagu Reddiar v. Veerappa Mudaliar (9).

Mr. K. Rajah Aiyar, in reply.—The cases quoted by my friend are all distinguishable. The satisfaction could not be pleaded before the Executing Court.

JUDGMENT.—The petition was filed under section 115, Civil Procedure Code. This is a mistake. I have allowed it to be amended into a revision petition under section 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act.

Under Order XXI, rule 2 (3) of the Civil Procedure Code a payment or adjustment which has not been certified or recorded shall not be recognised by any Court executing the decree. It is admitted in this case that the satisfaction of the decree in April 1917, as now pleaded by the respondent, was neither certified to, nor recorded by, the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Mayavaram which passed the decree. But it is said that both the original decree-holder and the judgment-debtor intimated to the District Munsif of Tiruvalur in reply to the notice issued by him by way of attaching the Mayavaram decree, that the decree was satisfied. Obviously, this does not satisfy the requirements of Order XXI, rule 2 and ought not to have been considered by the Subordinate Judge. The respondent relies on Rama Ayyan v. Sreenivasa Pattar (5), Trimback Ramkrishna v. Hari Laxman (6), Subbia Pillai v. Alliar Rowthar (7), Ponnusami Nadar v. Letchmanan Chettiar (10), Lodd Govinda Doss v. Rajah of Karvetnagar (8), Nagu Reddiar v. Veerappa Mudaliar (9). The first case has been dissented from by Abdur Rahim, J., in Ponnusami Nadar v. Letchmanan Chettiar (10) whose view is against the respondent's contention. The other learned Judge in Ponnusami Nadar v. Letchmanan Chettiar (10) Sundara Aiyar, J., held that the arrangement in that case could be pleaded not as an adjustment or satisfaction of the decree but merely to show that the assignment of the decree was a sham. The decision in Budrudeen v. Gulam Mohideen (1) shows that the views of Sundara Aiyar, J., are equally inconsistent with Rama Ayyan v. Sreenivasa Pattar (5). The decision in Trimback Ramkrishna v. Hari Laxman (6), so far as Heaton, J., is concerned, was disapproved in Budrudeen v. Gulam Mohideen (1). In Lodd Govinda Doss v. Rajah of Karvetnagar (8) the learned Judges held that the decree-holder did, in fact, intimate to the Court an adjustment but the Court had to enquire into the extent of the adjustment. In Subbia Pillai v. Alliar Rowther (7) there was a record of satisfaction before the attachment of the decree. In Nagu Reddiar v. Veerappa Mudaliar (9) there was an application for recording satisfaction by the judgment-debtor in time to the Court which passed the decree though after the application for attachment but before actual attachment. In the case before me there was no application by the respondent to the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Mayavaram until the present counter petition (8th March 1920), three years after the actual attachment.

The cases in Mathar Dravia Sahaya Ela Nidhi Co. v. Subramania Pillai (2), Anantha Rama Aiyar v. Kumaraswami Pandaram (3), Krishna Aiyar v. Sovurimuthu Pillai (4) show that the decision in Budrudeen v. Gulam Mohideen (1) is good law. That Order XXI, rule 2 equally applies to a plea by way of defence is shown by Budrudeen v. Gulam Mohideen (1). The cases relied on by the respondent Sri Kishan Lal v. Kashmiro (11), Deodhari v. Dayanand (12), do not bear on Order XXI, rule 2 of the Civil Procedure Code. I, therefore, reverse the order of the Subordinate Judge holding the alleged satisfaction cannot be recognised and direct that the execution petition of the petitioner be taken up and disposed of according to law.

The petitioner will get the costs of the petition from the respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a second appeal in a suit for pre-emption. The plaintiff claims as a co-sharer under a custom recorded in the wajib-ul-arz of the year 1874 A. D. It is admitted that according to this wajib-ul-arz a co-sharer in the same mahal with the vendor would have a right of pre-emption against another person resident in the same village, even though that other person might be a co-sharer in a different mahal. Since this wajib ul-arz was drawn up, however, there has been a partition. The former mahals were broken up and new mahals formed. Before the partition the vendees and the vendor were in the same mahal. Since the partition the vendor and the plaintiff are in the same mahal and the vendees are not.

The Courts below have held themselves bound by the decision in Daria v. Harkhial (1). They understand that decision as meaning that the effect of a partition under circumstances like the present is to put an end to any custom of pre-emption that might exist as between co sharers in the same mahal and to place all co-sharers in the village on one and the same footing.

(1) 2 Ind. Cas. 208; 6 A. L. J. 180; 31 A. 274.

In that case the decision seems to have been that the vendees and the plaintiff who claimed pre-emption, were both in the position of mere co sharers in the village, so that neither had a preferential right against the other. This case was considered by the Pre-emption Bench of this Court in Pem Singh v. Dharam Singh (2). The learned Judges did not in terms dissent from Daria v. Harkhial (1) but they distinguished against it upon a statement of the facts found which it is not easy to verify from the published report of the case. There does not, however, seem to be any room for doubt regarding the principle which the learned Judges intended to lay down in Pem Singh v. Dharam Singh (2). They held in effect that, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, the old custom regarding pre-emption, whatever that custom might be, would continue after the partition. The point to be determined would always remain as to what that custom was. But in the present case, as in the case of Pem Singh v. Dharam Singh (2), there is no doubt that there was a right of pre-emption in favour of co-sharers in one and the same mahal as against persons who were not co-sharers in that mahal. According to this principle, therefore, the plaintiff, from the moment when he became a co sharer in the same mahal with the defendant-vendor, became entitled, by virtue of the custom, to a right of pre-emption in case of a sale by the said defendant-vendor to any person other than a co-sharer in the same mahal. This ruling does not seem to have been brought to the notice of the Courts below. Granting, for the sake of argument, that the principles laid down in the two rulings above referred to are not to be easily reconciled, the later ruling seems preferable, as being a decision by the Pre-emption Bench and also because the facts of the case are more precisely on all fours with those of the present case.

Before, however, we could dispose of the appeal on this ground, it was necessary for us to consider a further plea on the part of the defendants vendees, in respect of which an issue was framed but not decided in the Court of first instance. The said vendees pleaded, as an alternative case, that they had a preferential right as against the plaintiff under the very custom recorded in the old wajib ul-arz, because they were qarabat mandan qaribi of the vendor. To this Jokhan Singh, the plaintiff, seems to have pleaded by way of re-joinder that he was himself a nearer relative of the vendor than were the vendees, if the question of relationship arose at all. We have examined the evidence but, in any case, we think that the relationship set up by the defendants-vendees was too distant to entitle them to succeed as qarabat mandan qaribi, even if we came to a finding that the evidence in support of the pedigree set up by them was to be preferred to the evidence produced on behalf of the plaintiff.

The only other possible question is that of the sale consideration; but, under the circumstances, and in order to put an end to the litigation, we think it best to adopt the finding of the first Court which was accepted by the plaintiff-pre emptor. The result is, that we set aside the decrees of both the Courts below and in lieu thereof direct that the plaintiff be given a decree for pre emption in the usual form, subject to his paying into Court for the benefit of the vendees, within three months, the sum of Rs. 920. In the event of his so doing, his claim for pre-emption will stand decreed with costs throughout. If payment is not made within the prescribed period, the suit will stand dismissed with costs.

Decree set aside.

JUDGMENT.

MOOKERJEE, J.—The subject-matter of the litigation which has culminated in this appeal is a tract of land, 1,700 bighas in area, formed by the recession of the river, Padma. The case for the plaintiff was that the disputed land was re formation in situ of an estate wherein he had a share of 5-annas 16-gundas 2 kara and 2 krant. He alleged that, although his title to the property was declared in a previous litigation and he was placed in possession in execution of the decree made therein he was subsequently dispossessed by virtue of an order made under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code. He, consequently, asked for declaration of his title as well as a decree for possession and mesne profits. The contesting defendants resisted the claim on a variety of grounds, namely, first, that the Court had no jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the litigation; secondly, that whatever title of the plaintiff might be, he could have no cause of action till the expiry of the Settlement already obtained by the defendants from the Revenue Authorities; thirdly, that the suit was barred by limitation; fourthly, that no partition could be effected by the Civil Court, and fifthly, that, in any event, the plaintiff was not entitled to a decree for mesne profits, inasmuch as the defendants did not exceed their rights as co-parceners. The Subordinate Judge overruled these contentions and gave the plaintiff a decree for possession and mesne profits.

On the present appeal, the decree of the Subordinate Judge has been assailed on five grounds; viz, first, that the Trial Court had no jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the litigaition; secondly, that as the plaintiff had not obtained a Settlement from the Revenue Authorities, he had no enforceable cause of action; thirdly, that the claim was barred under Article 45 of the Schedule to the Indian Limitation Act inasmuch as it had not been instituted within three years from the date of the last Settlement with the defendants; fourthly, that in view of the nature of the property, no partition thereof could be effected by the Civil Court, and fifthly, that no decree for mesne profits could be made in favour of the plaintiff. In our opinion, none of these contentions can be sustained.

As regards the first point, it appears that on the 10th March 1875 a notification was issued by the Government of Bengal which defined the river Padma as the boundary between the Districts of Rajshahi and Nadia. The case for the plaintiff is that at the date of the institution of the suit, i.e., on the 22nd March 1916, the disputed property lay towards the north of the main channel of the Padma and was, consequently, within the jurisdiction of the District Court at Rajshahi. The case for the contesting defendants, on the other hand, is that the property lay towards south of the main channel and was, consequently, within the jurisdiction of the District Court at Nadia. The Subordinate Judge has found that, although the property lay towards the south of one of the channels of the Padma, that channel was not the main but only a subsidiary channel and that, consequently the Trial Court had jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the litigation. No materials have been placed before us to show that the conclusion of the Court below was in fact erroneous. Indeed, as no map has been prepared in this case it is impossible for us to say whether the channel which lay towards the north of the disputed land was the main channel or a subsidiary channel of the river. We are therefore, not in a position to dissent from the view taken by the Subordinate Judge. It may further be observed that, in view of the provisions of sections 18 and 21 of the Civil Procedure Code, the contention of the defendants cannot possibly prevail; even if it be assumed that it is doubtful whether the property lay within the jurisdiction of the Rajshahi Court or the Nadia Court, the decree of the Subordinate Judge cannot be set aside, as it has been neither suggested nor established that there has been a failure of justice. The first contention must, consequently, be overruled.

As regards the second point, it is based on the assumption that the plaintiff can have no enforceable cause of action till he obtains a Settlement of the disputed land from the Revenue Authorities. There is, in our opinion, no foundation for this argument. In 1899, a suit was instituted by the plaintiff against the defendants as also the Secretary of State for India in Council, for declaration of his title to the disputed property and for recovery of possession with mesne profits. At that time, the property was under Settlement with the contesting defendants for a term of ten years which had commenced in 1894 and was to terminate in 1904. Notwithstanding the fact that the plaintiff at that time held no Settlement from the Revenue Authorities, he was awarded a decree by the Subordinate Judge for declaration of title as also for recovery of possession with mesne profits. That decree was ultimately confirmed by this Court subject to variation in one respect not material for the purpose of the present litigation. The view then taken was unquestionably right and, at any rate, cannot be challenged in this suit between the same parties. After the expiry of the Settlements then current, there were two successive annual Settlements with the defendants followed by a quinquennial Settlment in 1906 which was to expire in 1911, and this was followed by a Settlement for ten years, to expire on the 31st March 1921. In our opinion, the plaintiff had an enforceable cause of action, even though at the date of the institution of the suit he had no Settlement from the Revenue Authorities. This view is supported by a principle enunciated by the Judicial Committee in a well known case which was heard by them on two occasions: Maharajah Rajendur Pertab v. Lalliee Sahoo (1) and Rughoobur Dyal v. Kishen Pertab (2). On the second occasion, Sir Barnes Peacock pointed out that the nature of the title to a property is not affected by the circumstances that it is held from the Crown under a periodical Settlement, and that, although the amount of the revenue payable to the Crown may be periodically varied in view of the varying quantity and quality of the land, the nature of the title thereto remains unaffected. In the case before us, the property is claimed by the plaintiff as re-formation in situ of an estate held by him under the Government. This title was established in the litigation of 1899 in the presence not only of the Secretary of State but also of the present contesting defendants. It is worthy of notice that in that litigation, the plaintiff obtained possession and mesne profits. The decree made by this Court on the 13th December, 1905 was subsequently executed and the plaintiff was plased in possession on the 15th June 1907. Thereafter, the plaintiff was dispossessed on the 31st March 1913 by virtue of an order under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, which held in substance that the defendants and their tenants were in occupation of the disputed tract. It is unquestionably open to the plaintiff to maintain this suit and so seek recovery of possession as he did in the previous litigation. The second contention of the defendants must, consequently, be overruled.

As regards the third point, it has been urged that the suit is barred under Article 45 of the Schedule to the Limitation Act, inasmuch as it has not been instituted within three years from the date of the last Settlement with the defendants. There is no force in this contention, as the object of the suit is not to set aside an award made by the Revenue Authorities. This is a suit to recover possession, and, if the plaintiff succeeds, the Settlement made by the Revenue Authorities, in so far as it determines the amount of revenue payable in respect of the disputed property by the holder thereof will in no way be affected. The substance of the matter is, that the plaintiff seeks to obtain the benefit of the Settlement obtained by the defendants, notwithstanding the decision in the previous litigation. The decision in Abdul Kadir v. Hamdu Miah (3) has no application as this is not a suit to set aside an order of the Revenue Authorities refusing to make a Settlement of khas mahal lands with the plaintiff. There is, therefore, no force in the contention that the suit is barred by limitation.

As regards the fourth point, it has been urged that, in view of the nature of the property, partition thereof cannot be effected by a Civil Court; and in support of this contention reference has been made to the decision of this Court in Bepin Behari v. Bhagwat Sahai (4), which is clearly distinguishable. In the present case, as already stated, the title of the plaintiff has not been made precarious by virtue of the periodical Settlement for the assessment of revenue made by the Revenue Authorities. Consequently, there is nothing in the nature of the property which makes it impossible for partition by the Civil Court and the case is governed by the decision of the Full Bench in Hemadri Nath v. Ramani Kanta (5). The fourth contention accordingly fails.

As regards the fifth point, the contention is that the plaintiff should not have been allowed a decree for mesne profits, inasmuch as he has not been ousted by the defendants. The Subordinate Judge has dealt with this matter at full length. He has pointed out that the defendants are in exclusive possession of the property through their tenants, and that the effect of the order under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, has been to dispossess the plaintiff. There can be no question that since the date of that order the defendants have been in exclusive possession. This is also in accord with the attitude taken up by the defendants throughout this litigation, for they have strenuously maintained, even up to this Court, that the plaintiff is not entitled to possession till after the expiry of the current term of the Settlement with them. We are of opinion that the Subordinate Judge has rightly allowed the plaintiff mesne profits.

As all the contentions urged by the appellants fail, the appeal must be dismissed with costs including reserved costs. We assess the hearing fee at Rs. 300.

Registration Act (XX of 1866), s. 17 (d)—Kabuliyat lease for indefinite period—Registration, whether compulsory.

A kabuliyat the terms of which show that though the lease might continue for an indefinite number of years, there is no certainty that it would last beyond the term of one year, does not come within the classification of section 17 (d) of the Registration Act as being a lease for a term exceeding one year and is not compulsorily registrable and, therefore, such a kabuliyat is admissible in evidence.

Letters Patent Appeal from a judgment of Mr. Justice Rafique, modifying a decree of the First Additional Judge, Aligarh.

Dr. Kailas Nath Katju, for the Appellants.

Dr. S. M. Sulaiman, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Abdul Rahman brought this suit on the 1st of June 1916 to recover the site of a house. He alleged that there was an agreement of the 8th of May 1868 whereby the defendant had contracted to pay eight annas a year as the rent of the site. The case presented no difficulty if the kabuliyat of the 8th of May 1868 could be receivable in evidence provided, of course, the Court was of opinion that the document was a genuine one. In this appeal that has been the substantial matter raised and our attention has been drawn to section 17 of Act XX of 1866, which was the Statute governing the reception or rejection of the document of the 8th of May 1868. The terms of the kabuliyat have been read to us. Shortly, they are to the effect that the Zamindar let the site to Sheo Prasad on a payment of eight annas a year and incidental obligations but the kabuliyat provided that if the eight annas was not paid in any one year, or if the tenant failed to make the incidental payments for marriages etcetra, the lease would thereby come to an end. Furthermore, the lease would also come to an end if the lessee did not conduct himself properly towards the Zamindar. Therefore, when the terms of the lease are looked at, one sees that though in fact it might continue for an undefined number of years, there was no certainty that it would last beyond the term of one year. Therefore, it did not come within the classification of section 17 (d) as being a lease for a term exceeding one year. That being so, it was not a document which had compulsorily to be registered. It was receivable in evidence and establishes, in our opinion, the right of the plaintiff to maintain and succeed in this action. Consequently, this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Where in a suit for partition a Receiver is appointed to take possession of the properties in suit, the Court, on an objection being made by persons who are no parties to the suit claiming the properties to be theirs and in their possession, is bound by clause (2) of rule 1 of Order XL of the Civil Procedure Code to come to a definite finding as to the truth of these allegations before it can make an order directing the Receiver to take possession of the properties. [p. 837, col. 2.]

Dr. Sarat Chunder Basak and Babu Chandra Sekhar Sen, for the Appellants.

Babus Joges Chunder Roy and Narendra Kumar Das, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against two orders by which the Receiver who had been appointed in a suit was directed to take possession of certain properties, moveable and immoveable. In the suit in question Jamila Khatun and others were the plaintiffs and Mokbul Ahmed and others were the defendants. The appellants before us are no parties to the suit; but all the parties to the suit and the two appellants are descendants of one Haji Sadaddin Sadagar. The suit in question is a suit for partition of the properties left by Khalil Ahmed Sadagar, the eldest son of Haji Sadaddin Sadagar. When the Receiver was appointed in the suit and directed to take possession of the properties described in the plaint the present appellants filed a petition in which they alleged that certain properties described in schedule 1 of their petition belonged to them both, that certain immoveable properties described in schedule 2 belonged to the petitioner No. 2, and that certain moveable property described in the list which had been previously filed was in the possession of and was the property of both the petitioners. The learned Subordinate Judge who was trying the suit was of opinion that the allegation in this petition was not bona fide as regards the properties of schedule 2 of the application and the moveable property. As regards the properties of schedule 1 he directed the Receiver to make an enquiry as to the truth of the allegation and at the same time directed the Receiver to take possession of all the properties except the properties of schedule 1. That is the first order appealed against, being order No. 18 of the order-sheet dated 17th March 1920. The second order appealed against is the order No. 25 passed on 23rd March 1920. There the Receiver was again ordered to take possession of the properties in suit other than that as to which he had been ordered to enquire and report, and he was further directed to take the help of the Police and, if necessary, to break open any locks on doors of houses in which the properties of which he was to take possession were reasonably believed to be.

In our opinion, this appeal must be allowed. The lower Court, on an objection being made by persons who were no parties to the suit claiming the properties to be theirs and in their possession, was bound by clause (2) of rule 1 of Order XL to come to a definite finding as to the truth of these allegations before it could make an order directing the Receiver to take possession of the properties. We do not think that the allegations in the petitions can be disposed of on the ground of a discrepancy between them and the contents of earlier petitions filed by one of the petitioners and others when they applied to be added as parties to the suit. As regards the moveable property there was a distinct allegation of sale by auction by the National Bank and purchase by the petitioner. The petitioner should have been given an opportunity of proving the truth of this allegation. Similarly, with regard to the properties of schedule 2 an enquiry should have been held into the allegation as to the purchase by the petitioner No. 2. As regards the properties of schedule 1 an enquiry has been ordered, but such an enquiry should have been held by the Court. It is not the duty of the Receiver of a property to enquire into the claim of title made by third parties, and the Court has no power under the Code to delegate an enquiry on this point to the Receiver. As an enquiry must be held into the allegation as regards the properties of schedule 2 by the Court, so also must an enquiry as to the allegation with regard to the properties of schedule 1 be held by the Court. It is pointed out on behalf of the respondents that, although in the petition it is stated that the moveable properties claimed were set out in a list previously filed yet when the Pleader moved the petition in the lower Court he was unable to find that list. It appears, however, that, subsequently, when the Receiver tried to take possession there was no real doubt as to what properties were claimed by the petitioner-appellants. If there be any difficulty on this point the appellants can be called on to furnish a list to take the place of the one which could not be found when the applications were made.

The result is, that the appeal is allowed. We set aside the orders of the lower Court dated the 17th of March 1920 and the 23rd of March 1920 directing the Receiver to take possession of the properties claimed by the petitioners and we further direct that no such order be made in respect of any of the properties claimed until the claim of the petitioners has been duly investigated by the lower Court. The respondents must pay the appellants their costs in this appeal. We assess the hearing-fee at three gold mohurs.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of rent in respect of a putni.

The property originally belonged to one Salimannessa, and on her death was inherited by her mother Raisannessa Begum. The latter sold it to the plaintiff who brought the suit for rent on the basis of a kabuliyat dated the 10th Assin 1312.

The Courts below have concurred in giving a decree to the plaintiff and the defendant has appealed to this Court.

Three contentions have been raised on behalf of the appellant. The first is, that the plaintiff cannot recover rent, because Raisannessa did not get her name registered in the Collectorate in respect of the revenue paying property as required by section 78 of the Land Registration Act. But there was a written contract (kabuliyat) between Raisannessa and the defendant, and section 81 of the Land Registration Act lays down that nothing contained in section 78 shall be held to interfere with the conditions of any written contract.

It is true that in one case, Iswar Chandra Bera v. Kali Charan Santra (1), a restricted view was taken of the section, limiting it to the persons actually parties to the contract; but it has been held in some other cases that the provisions of the section are applicable to cases similar to the present (see Second Appeal No. 3276 of 1912 decided by Woodroffe and D. Chatterjee, JJ., on the 20th May 1914, reported as Surya Kanta Ghattak v. Ananda Mohan Chatterjee (2); see also Second Appeal No. 1624 of 1919 decided on the 4th March 1921 (Proloth Chandra Mitter v. Harish Chandra Naskar (3))]. We think, therefore, that this contention must fail.

The next contention is that Raisannessa not having applied under section 15 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, she was precluded by the terms of section 16 from suing to recover rent, and that the plaintiff, therefore, was also so precluded.

Now, section 16 refers to rent payable to a person as the holder of a tenure and in the case of William Sheriff v. Jogemaya Dasi (4) it was held by Banerjee and Stevens, JJ., that section 16 of the Bengal Tenancy Act being a penal provision it should be strictly construed, and that it applies only to a person who claims the rent as a holder of the tenure, and not to a person who claims it by virtue of purchase from the person to whom the rent accrued due, as in the present case. It is no doubt anomalous that although Raisannessa could not sue the defendant for rent, a transferee from her would be so entitled. As pointed, however, by Banerji, J., "Perhaps that may appear somewhat anomalous, but the opposite view would result in a greater anomaly and indeed in hardship and injustice. For it may so happen that a son succeeding his father may not comply with the requirements of section 15 of the Bengal Tenancy Act immediately, but may expect to do so at any time within three years, that is, before his claim for rent is barred, and then he may die suddenly; and then if, section 16 is to apply to the claim of his heir or successor for rent which accrued due during his lifetime, that claim would be irrecoverably lost, as his heir or successor could not possibly satisfy the requirements of section 15 so far as he was concerned." We think we may follow the said decision, and we accordingly hold that this contention must also fail.

The last contention is that there should be an apportionment of rent in respect of items Nos. 11 and 12 of the patta.

Now, the kabuliyat stated: "You shall never be competent to enhance the said jama on any ground ; nor shall we get abatement of the jama on the ground of diluvion or on any other ground." The learned Judge was of opinion that the words "on any other ground" contained a clear stipulation that the lessees shall not be entitled to have deduction of the rent on any account. It has been held, however, in some cases that these words would be taken as referring to cases of like nature as diluvion. [See the cases of Uma Sunkur Sirkar v. Tarini Ohunder Singh (5), Watson & Co. v. Nistarini Gupta (6)].

The principle no doubt is one in consonance with natural justice and equity that a person who has been deprived of possession of part of the demised premises should not be held liable for the whole rent for ever and this principle applies with greater force where the tenant is deprived of any portion of the leasehold property by any act on the part of the landlord himself.

But there are certain circumstances in the present case which ought to be taken into consideration. The first is, that the patta was executed as a settlement of family disputes, and, secondly, the 11th and 12th items in the schedule are described as Mahal Diara which indicates that they are temporary settled estates. The learned Subordinate Judge says: "Probably they got some advantages from other properties comprised in the patni, and so they did not think it worth their while to keep any provision for abatement of rent in case of Salima's not taking fresh settlement of the Diara Mahal; had not that been the intention of the parties, patni lease of temporary settled estates would not have been taken, and the defendants would not have bound themselves to pay the entire jama for ever." But it does not appear what the relative income or advantages of the other properties, and items Nos. 11 and 12 are. The Court of Appeal below has not gone into this matter fully nor has it considered the circumstances which led to the inclusion of these properties in the lease without there being any provison that the lessor would take any re-settlement from Government.

In these circumstances, we think that the case should go back to the lower Appellate Court in order that it may enquire into the matter, and consider all the surrounding circumstances and come to a decision whether it was intended that the rent should be paid even though the lessor did not apply to Government for renewal of the temporary settlement.

The first two questions we have already disposed of. The case is remanded only on the last point.

Costs to abide the result.

THE ADMINISTRATOR-GENERAL OF MADRAS HIGH COURT—PLAINTIFF AND INAMULLAH—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENTS.

Mortgage—Prior and subsequent mortgagees—Sale in decree of first mortgage—Subsequent suit by puisne mortgagee—Decree, form of—Redemption—Auction-purchaser and private purchaser, distinction between—Improvements—Auction-purchaser, whether can claim.

Where a puisne mortgagee wishes to sell property which has already been sold in execution of a decree passed under a prior mortgage, the decree must direct redemption by the second mortgagee of the first mortgage and then an order for sale if the purchaser of the property does not wish to redeem the second mortgage and there is no distinction in such a matter between an auction-purchaser and a private purchaser. [p. 841, col. 2; 842, col. 1.]

An auction-purchaser under a prior mortgage decree cannot claim the amount spent by him on improvements as payable before the puisne mortgagee could bring the property to sale. [p. 841, col. 2.]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Farrukhabad, modifying that of the Munsif, Kanauj.

Mr. Gulzari Lal, for the Appellants.

Dr. Kailas Nath Katju, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The circumstances giving rise to this appeal are as follows:—Inamullah, defendant No. 1, made a mortgage of a grove in favour of Manni Lal, defendant-appellant, on the 1st of June 1906. On the 6th of July 1910 he made a second mortgage of the same grove in favour of Shamshad Ali who is now represented by the plaintiff respondent. In 1915 the first mortgagee brought a suit and obtained a decree for sale. To this suit the second mortgagee Shamshad Ali was not made a party and, therefore, his rights, whatever they were, were not affected by this decree. On the 20th of January 1916 the mortgaged property was sold in execution of the decree aforesaid and was purchased by Budhi Lal, defendant No. 3, and one of the appellants before us, and on the 1st of June, 1917 he obtained possession of the property. The plaintiff has now brought this suit for sale on the second mortgage and he has impleaded as defendants the original mortgagor, the holder of the decree on the first mortgage, and the auction-purchaser in execution of that decree. The defence raised by the auction-purchaser and the prior mortgagee decree-holder was that the plaintiff could not bring the property to sale without redeeming the prior mortgage. They also claimed Rs. 247 for improvements made on the property by the auction-purchaser.

The Trial Court decreed the plaintiff's claim subject to his paying Rs. 798-8-0 and interest thereon at six per cent. per annum from the 23rd of January 1916 to the date of payment, and Rs. 247, for improvements to the auction-purchaser before the plaintiff could sell the property, or, in other words, it gave a decree to the plaintiff conditional upon paying off the prior mortgage which had been, so to say, discharged by the auction purchaser. The plaintiff went up in appeal and the learned Judge has, for reasons which commended themselves to him, decreed the plaintiff's claim unconditionally. The defendants, prior mortgagee and the auction-purchaser in execution of the decree under the prior mortgage, come here in second appeal, and their first contention is that the decree of the lower Appellate Court giving the plaintiff an unconditional decree for sale is bad and that the plaintiff should have been directed to redeem the first mortgage before he could bring the property to sale. They also claim the amount spent by the auction-purchaser on improvements as payable before the plaintiff could bring the property to sale.

As to the last contention, we have not been referred to any rule of law under which the auction-purchaser could make such a claim. It has been decided in the negative by the Madras High Court in the case of Gangayam Venkataramana Iyer v. Gomperts (1).

As to the first contention, the general rule is that where a puisne mortgagee wishes to sell property which has already been sold in execution of a decree passed under a prior mortgage, the decree must direct redemption by the second mortgagee of the first mortgage and then an order for sale if the purchaser of the property does not wish to redeem the second mortgage : see Gangayam Venkatu-ramana Iyer v. Gomxerte (1). We see no reason why in this case we should depart from the general rule stated above. All the parties interested in the mortgaged property are before us and we can do justice between them and adjust the equities of the case. It has been contended before us by the learned Advocate for the respondents that this rule does not apply to the case of auction-purchasers. We do not see any reason why an auction-purchaser should stand on a different footing from a private purchaser in this particular matter. No distinction seems to have been made between purchasers at auction and those by private treaty in the case of Mutiullah Khan v. Banwari Lal (2), and in the case of Manohar Lal v. Ram Babu (3). We think this appeal must be allowed and the decree of the Court below set aside.

We accordingly allow the appeal with costs including in this Court fees on the higher scale. As the decree passed by the Munsif is not quite clear, we discharge the decrees of both the Courts below and in lieu thereof pass a decree for sale in favour of the plaintiff, giving the defendants six months' time from to-day to redeem the plaintiff's mortgage, and in case of their failure to do so, give the plaintiff three months' time from the expiry of the six months aforesaid to pay off the amount mentioned in the decree passed by the Munsif as due on the prior mortgage to defendant No. 3 (but not the sum of Rs. 247), and in case of such payment being made within the period aforementioned, the plaintiff will be entitled to realise the amount due on his mortgage as also the amount payed to satisfy the prior mortgage plus the costs of this litigation by sale of the mortgaged property. In case of failure by the plaintiff to make such payment, the suit shall stand dismissed with costs in all Courts.

Dr. Gokal Chand Narang, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Bur Singh, the plaintiff-respondent in this case, is a mahant of the Gurdwara of Guru Hargobind Singh at Hafizabad. This office was held before him by his father Dayal Singh, who had succeeded his own father Gurdit Singh. Gurmukh Singh, father of Gurdit Singh, was the first of the present line of mahants to occupy the position. In 1916 a meeting of certain persons describing themselves as worshippers at this Gurdwara and professing to be interested in it was held which passed a resolution to the effect that Bur Singh be removed from the position of a mahant and his cousin Fateh Singh be appointed in his place, as the former had through his misconduct become unworthy of the post. The mahant, however, challenged the authority of any such body of worshippers to remove him from an office, which he had got by inheritance from his forefathers, and brought this suit for a declaration that he was the hereditary mahant and for an injunction restraining defendants Nos. 1 to 5 from interfering with his management. The defendants were Fateh Singh, the mahant nominated at the meeting, and four others, who were members of that meeting which was styled a sangat. The Senior Subordinate Judge held that it was proved that Bur Singh had an illegal intimacy with a Brahmin widow and was thus guilty of misconduct and, finding that the sangat were entitled to oust him under such circumstances, dismissed the plaintiff's suit. Bur Singh appealed against the decision of the Trial Court, with the result that his appeal was accepted by the Additional District Judge of Gujranwala, who has held that there was nothing on the record to show that the sangat had any power to remove the mahant, that for three generations the office had descended from father to son, and that the mahant did not owe his position to any action in his favour by the persons who now claimed the power to remove him. The declaratory decree as well as the injunction prayed for were, therefore, granted to the plaintiff by the learned District Judge. The defendants have preferred a second appeal to this Court against the decree of the District Judge and we have heard Rai Bahadur Pandit Sheo Narain for the appellants and Dr. G. C. Narang for the respondent.

Before discussing the arguments addressed to us on both sides it may be mentioned that Fateh Singh, defendant-appellant No. 1, died during the pendency of the appeal and no representative of his has been brought on the record in his stead. More than six months have elapsed since his death. His appeal, therefore, abates but as this was a case in which any of the members of the sangat above mentioned could have been made a party and five of them had been selected by the plaintiff at his own option, the appeal of the other defendants is not affected by this abatment.

Mr. Sheo Narain started his arguments by attacking the finding of the lower Appellate Court that Bur Singh was the mahant of the Gurdwara. He had to admit that this was a finding of fact which he was not entitled to assail in second appeal but he urged strenuously that Bur Singh and his progenitors had been loosely described as mahants, that they were nothing better than mere servitors of the institution, who were Aroras by caste and carried on ordinary business as shopkeepers and eked out their income by taking certain offerings made at the Gurdwara. They were not, he went on to say, appointed by any bhek or religious fraternity, nor duly elected by any body of men, nor even nominated by their Gurus. All this may be true, yet we do not see how the clear finding that Bur Singh and his father, grandfather and great-grandfather were mahants of the Gurdwara at Hafizabad can be affected thereby. There is no definition of the term mahant anywhere which would make all or any of the above conditions necessary to make the designation mahant applicable to a person. According to the "Glossary of the Tribes and Castes of the Punjab and North-West Frontier Province" compiled by Mr. H. A. Rose, a mahant is "the head of any Hindu Dera or religious institution" and a person succeeding to such headship in the way in which Bur Singh has been found to have done can quite correctly be styled a mahant.

The only other question for decision in this case is that of the power of the sangat to remove the mahant. In this connection, Dr. Narang contends that it is not open to any persons constituting themselves into a committee or sangat to remove a mahant from his office without having recourse to law. He concedes that if a mahant misbehaves he may be removed from office but he adds that this can be done only by taking proper legal measures to oust him and not arbitrarily by meetings of the kind described in this case. Dr. Narang says that this Gurdwara has not been at any stage of its known history under the management or control of any committee of secular men worshipping at this Gurdwara or even under any bhek. It is said that a small committee was formed a few years before suit, with the plaintiff as one of its members to collect subscriptions for making certain improvements in the buildings of the Gurdwara but it had never asserted any right to control the management or the headship of the institution. The sangat which passed a resolution against the plaintiff did not profess to be even a meeting of this committee but a public gathering of a somewhat nebulous character. It is argued by Dr. Narang that a body of men who had no hand in the appointment of Bur Singh, who became a mahant by hereditary right, could obviously have no locus standi to have a hand in his removal. We think this contention has a great deal of force in it. As laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Greedharee Doss v. Nundokissore Doss Mohunt (1), "the only law as to those mahants and their offices, functions and duties, is to be found in custom and practice, which is to be proved by testimony" and we have no hesitation in saying that there is nothing in the evidence produced on behalf of the defendants-appellants in this case to show that the right to interfere in the management of this institution has been asserted at any time by any committee or any body of outsiders, nor is there anything pointing to the existence of any custom entitling the worshippers to control the appointment or the succession of mahants or to remove them without invoking the aid of law.

Reliance is placed by the appellants on Asa Ram v. Hari Singh (2), where it was laid down by a Division Bench of the Punjab Chief Court that the conduct of the mahant of a dera in the village Ujlam having been proved unworthy of his office, the worshippers of the dera were fully justified in removing and competent to remove him. It is clear, however, that there were several circumstances in that case which do not exist here and the decision in each case is based on the peculiar facts of that case. The dera in the case above referred to was "entirely supported by the villagers, who had made over certain land for its support." The village had always taken a predominant part in the arrangements of the said dera. There was a bhek in that village having the right of appointment and rejection and it had acquiesced in the action taken by the villagers. All these facts would certainly show that in that particular instance the village body could justly claim the power of appointment and removal of a mahant but we have nothing parallel to that in the case before us. The decision of the Chief Court in Civil Appeal No. 359 of 1901, published as 52 P. L. R. 1905 [Bhagwan Das v. Hardit Singh (3)], appears to be better applicable to the facts found in this case. It was found in the said case that the management had not been in village hands and no representative of the village had asserted a right to control the succession to the mahantship when it passed from the previous holders. It was held, therefore, that the villagers had no right to interfere in the succession to the mahantship or to remove a mahant for misconduct. For similar reasons we hold in this case that the self-constituted sangat in Hafizabad has not been able to prove any customary right to interfere in the control of the Gurdwara or to remove the mahant, whose succession to the office was quite independent of any action on their part. We uphold the decree of the lower Appellate Court and dismiss this appeal with costs.

BHAGWAT PRASAD PANDE AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Partition—Formal separation need not be proved—Specification in sale-deed of shares of members, whether proof of separation.

JAIRAJI v. BHAGWAT PRASAD PANDE.

In order to establish separation by members of a joint family, a plaintiff is not bound to prove formal separation accompanied by an apportionment of the family property It is sufficient if he can produce evidence to satisfy the Court that the position of the various members was such that they could not have been living as members of a joint family. [p. 845, col. 2.]

It is by no means an unusual thing for members of a joint family, when acquiring landed property by purchase, to cause to be specified in their document of title the shares which they would respectively take upon a partition. No clear inference in favour of separation or break up of the joint family can be drawn from a transaction of this sort. [p. 847, col. 1.]

First appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Basti, dated the 29th June 1918.

Mr. S. A. Haider, for the Appellant.

Messrs. J. M. Banerjea and Lakshmi Narain Tewari, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

PIGGOTT, J.—In this suit the question in issue was the jointness or separation amongst the members of a certain Hindu family, the descendants of one Jeo Lal. This gentleman had three sons, named Sital, Durga and Chhutkan. Chhutkan had one son only, named Sheo Mangal, and this man had a son, named Kateshwar. This Kateshwar was married three times but died without male offspring. He left him surviving two widows, named Dharam Raji and Jai Raji. The present suit was instituted by these two ladies jointly to recover possession of specified shares in immovable property of various descriptions, upon the plea that the property so specified formed the separate estate of Kateshwar from which his widows had wrongfully been ousted by the male agnates. Musammat Dharam Raji died after the institution of the suit, but it has been continued by the remaining widow Musammat Jai Raji, who is the appellant in this Court. Of the three sons of Jeo Lal, all of whom had died before the institution of this suit, one Sital had a son who is the principal defendant in the case, Bhagwat Prasad. Durga had four sons. One of these is the defendant Ram Bali. The remaining defendants, Sat Narain and Ram Lal alias Ghisiwan, are respectively the grandson and the son of other sons of the aforesaid Durga. Musammat Jai Raji's case is that, when she had gone in to head-quarters to fight the mutation case in respect of her late husband's estate, Bhagwat Prasad and the other defendants took possession of the house in which she had previously been living, of all the lands which Kateshwar had been cultivating in severalty and all Kateshwar's shares in the various Zemindari properties which had belonged to him. The plaint does not say when the joint family was supposed to have broken up, the plaintiffs contenting themselves (as they were quite entitled to do) with pleading that Kateshwar Pande at the time of his death was living as a separated Hindu. We may note that he died in the month of May 1916. The defendants, no doubt, with a view to tying the plaintiffs down to something definite, have put in evidence the statement made by Musammat Dharam Raji, the plaintiff, who has since died, before the Mutation Court. That lady there alleged that the family had separated and come to a partition of the joint family property in the life-time of Sheo Mangal, the father of Kateshwar. The date of Sheo Mangal's death is left uncertain, but he must have been dead at the time of the execution of the deed printed at page 36 R, the date of which is the 7th of August 1906. The defendants in a suit of this sort start with a certain presumption in their favour; but we may readily admit that the presumption is not a very strong one in the present case, because the relationship between Kateshwar and the nearest to him of the defendants, namely, Bhagwat Prasad, is not a very near one. Nor do we consider that the plaintiff was bound to prove that a formal separation, accompanied by an apportionment of such goods or properties as it was desired to divide immediately and an ascertainment of shares in respect of other landed properties, took place in any formal manner or at any specified date. The plaintiff can succeed if she can produce evidence to satisfy the Court that the position of Kateshwar and the defendants up to the time of the death of the first-named was such that they could not have been living as members of a joint undivided family. The defendants have, however, re-inforced such presumption as may exist in their favour by a very considerable body of evidence. The oral evidence includes statements by tenants who were cultivating lands which, according to the defendants, are the property of the joint family; of the patwaris of villages in which the family property is situated, and of various neighbours or connections by marriage of the parties. It is very little use discussing this evidence in detail. In a general way, it does go to prove that, up to the time of Kateshwar's death, he and the defendants were regarded by persons in a position to know the facts as living jointly together. Statements like that of the witness Sochit, that he cultivates a field belonging to Kateshwar, deceased, and to the defendants, that he has always paid the rent to Bhagwat Prasad, that he never at any time paid rent to Kateshwar are not without significance. We have been taken through this evidence in detail and much of it has been subjected to criticism of various kinds. It seems sufficient for us to say that we concur in the opinion of the Trial Court that this very considerable body of oral evidence does make out, on the whole, a case in favour of the jointness of the family which it would require some very definite and satisfactory evidence on the other side to rebut. Of oral evidence on the side of the plaintiff there is practically none, beside her own statement and the deposition of Musammat Dharam Raji in the Mutation Court which the other side has brought upon the record. Her brother Nageshar was examined on her behalf and made certain more or less vague and unsatisfactory statements regarding the residence of various members of the family. One Brij Nath, whose son was married to a daughter of Kateshwar, says that he has known the family for about three years and that during that time Kateshwar was living as a separated Hindu. This evidence is of very little weight as against the oral evidence for the defendants. The plaintiff relies mainly on certain documents and the inferences to be drawn from them. It may be as well to discuss these in some little detail. At page A4 we have a lease of the 3rd of January 1908, purporting to be executed by Musammat Karamdani, the widow of the father of the defendant Sat Narain, in favour of one Bhawani Baksh. By this document Musammat Karamdani, acting for herself and as guardian of her minor son Sat Narain, purports to lease out to Bhawani Baksh a number of shares in various items of property in dispute. We may take it that the shares purporting to be conveyed are those which that lady's husband would have taken on a partition of what the defendants call the joint family property. Now, the mere execution of a document of this sort has little or no evidential value. Any Hindu widow on bad terms for the time being with the male relatives of her late husband may set her name to a document of this sort, merely for the purpose of making herself unpleasant to the members of the family. If the lessee obtained actual and effective possession under the lease, it would become a significant circumstance that the male members of the family should be allowing a fraction of the alleged joint family property to be dealt with in this way. Now, Bhawani Baksh was called as a witness. He turns out to be the brother of Musammat Karamdani and he deposes positively that he never obtained possession under the lease. He says he was allowed for a time to manage a few bighas of sir land which had been separately apportioned for purposes of enjoyment to the husband of his ostensible lessor, but that even this only lasted for a short time and that he certainly never obtained possession over the shares in Zemindari property specified in his lease. The statement of Bhawani Baksh has been criticised before us and we have been asked to disbelieve him, mainly on the ground that the term of the lease having now expired the deponent had no interest in asserting his rights under it. It does not follow that he had any interest in perjuring himself for the sake of the defendants. We cannot say that we see sufficient reason for disbelieving the witness and in any case the result of his evidence, there being no direct contradiction of it on behalf of the plaintiff, leaves the lease of the 3rd of January 1908 absolutely unsupported by any evidence that its terms were ever effectively in operation. There is, therefore, no real importance to be attached to this item of evidence. The next document on which the plaintiff relies is a sale-deed printed at A 6. By this document one Baobeha purports to sell certain Zemindari property to Bhagwat Prasad and to Ram Bali, defendants, and the feature of the document most insisted upon is that he conveys two shares to Bhagwat Prasad and one share to Ram Bali. Bhagwat Prasad was examined about this transaction. He says that Kateshwar had been seriously ill for three years before his death and was in fact dying of phthisis. When spoken to about this proposed purchase of land from Bachcha he said that he had no particular interest in the matter and did not wish his name to appear in the sale-deed. Bhagwat Prasad, although he does not express himself very clearly, obviously means that this is the reason why the specification of shares was made out in this peculiar manner. Assuming, as the witness wishes us to believe, that it was really a joint family transaction, the representatives of the three branches of the family, namely, Bhagwat Prasad, Kateshwar and Ram Bali, would be interested in the matter to the extent of one-third each, if we take into consideration the shares that would fall to them on a partition. As Bhagwat was acting for himself and Kateshwar, and the latter had not wished to be associated in the transaction, he caused the document to be drafted in the manner in which it was. It is by no means an unusual thing for members of a joint family, when acquiring landed property by purchase, to cause to be specified in their document of title the shares which they would respectively take upon a partition. Where this is not done the ordinary inference from the document, on the face of it, would be that the vendees are taking in equal shares, and the members of the family may well think it convenient that such a presumption, where it is not in accordance with the facts, should be rebutted by a specification of shares; no clear inference in favour of separation or the break-up of the joint family can be drawn from a transaction of this sort. Very similar remarks apply to the document printed at A8; the manner in which the parties were really dealing with the property is further illustrated by the fact, proved by documentary evidence printed at page R 56, that when it came to mutation of names Bhagwat Prasad and Ram Bali allowed themselves to be recorded as having acquired the property in equal shares, ignoring Kateshwar altogether. There is only one more document produced by the plaintiff on which her case is strongly based and that is a sale-deed of the year 1305 Fasli. According to this document Bhagwat Prasad joins with Ram Bali and with Sri Nivas, the brother of Ram Bali, who was then alive, in conveying to Sheo Mangal, the father of Kateshwar, a one-third share in certain mortgagee rights, for a price which is stated at one third of the mortgage-money. The document nowhere says that payment of the consideration had passed from Sheo Mangal to the ostensible transferors. The learned Subordinate Judge does Bhagwat Prasad something less than justice when he says that the latter was unable to explain this transaction when he was questioned about it. The truth seems to be, that Bhagwat Prasad had forgotten all about it and was taken by surprise by the production of the document. His statement on the subject does not strike us as being at all the kind of statement which a dishonest litigant would have made, as such a person would have come to Court primed with a plausible explanation on a point of this sort. What Bhagwat Prasad is quite certain about is that no consideration passed from Sheo Mangal; that it was mere paper transaction intended as an acknowledgment of the fact that the mortgage having been acquired out of joint family funds, Sheo Mangal was interested in the same and that the extent of his interest, in the event of a partition would amount to a one-third share. There is really no reason for not believing this explanation. Indeed, the learned Subordinate Judge has himself accepted in substance this very explanation, though he says that Bhagwat Prasad did not give it. A transaction of this sort would be very unlikely to take place if Sheo Mangal had actually separated from the rest of the family. Assuming a separation to have taken place, accompanied by an apportionment of immoveable property, a division by metes and bounds of such immoveable property as it was desired to partition and an ascertainment of shares in respect of Zemindari properties which the family desired to keep under joint management, it would not have been open to one member of the family, after such a transaction had been completed, to approach the others and claim an interest to the extent of his rateable share in a property which had not been dealt with at the time of the separation and division. Any such claim on his part would probably be met by the assertion that, inasmuch as he had not advanced it at the time of the separation, he had virtually admitted the particular mortgage in question to be the separate self-acquired property of the members ostensibly interested therein. On the other hand it is quite conceivable that such a document might be executed as between members of a joint family, merely in order that there might be clear evidence in existence as to their respective rights in the event of any future difference or separation. It may be conceded to the plaintiff that such a document might also quite conceivably be executed at a moment when a separation of the family was taking place; but if this transaction of 1305 Fasli had taken place as part of a formal separation and distribution of assets and specification of shares botween Sheo Mangal and the other members of the family, one would have expected to find clear evidence both oral and documentary of contemporaneous transactions to the same purpose and effect. In the absence of such evidence, it is impossible to treat the execution of this document as if it proved an actual transfer of property from Bhagwat Prasad, Ram Bali and Sri Nivas to Sheo Mangal, which transfer would no doubt (had it in fact taken place) be very difficult to reconcile with the existence of a state of jointness between the three at the time. It seems to us, however, that there was no real transfer, but merely a formal recognition of an interest which every one concerned admitted Sheo Mangal to possess and, as we have said, such formal recognition is not inconsistent with a state of jointness. This is really the whole of the evidence for the plaintiff. In the very careful and exhaustive argument which has been addressed to us in support of this appeal we were taken through the defendants' evidence and here and there a point was made in favour of the plaintiff from the wording of particular portions of documents produced and relied upon by the other side. We do not think it necessary to discuss these matters in detail. It is sufficient to say that there is a mass of documentary evidence tending to prove that the defendants and Kateshwar Pande were living and carrying on Zamindari business and money-lending business, right up to the time of Kateshwar's death, on such terms as one would expect them to do if they were members of a joint undivided family. The points that have been made to the contrary are, in our opinion, of slight weight and not such as to call for detailed discussion. We are satisfied that the decision of the Court below was correct and that this suit has been rightly dismissed. We dismiss the appeal accordingly with costs, including fees on the higher scale.

WALSH, J.—I agree. The case seems to me to lie within such a small compass that I am not surprised that any one who was able to devote five hours to its discussion should find himself too exhausted to take any further interest in it.

CRIMINAL APPEAL No. 866 OF 1921.

RAMHIT AND OTHERS—ACCUSED—APPELLANTS
versus
EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 25, 27, 30—Statement of accused to Police Officer, value of—Confession—Property in possession of accused long after dacoity and openly—Inference—Burden of proof—Accused making false statement—Inference of guilt.

In a case of dacoity a statement made by an accused to a Police Officer, at the time of the search of his house, that property would be found in the possession of his co-accused, is not admissible in evidence against the accused making the statement nor is it admissible against his co-accused as proving their participation in the dacoity. [p 849, col 2]

A statement made by an accused to a Police Officer if it does not amount to a confession may, nevertheless, be used against him and more particularly if the statement turns out to be false in the light of the other evidence in the case If it amounts to a confession, then it must be excluded from evidence altogether under section 25, but in either event it can only be used against the accused making the statement. [p 850, col 1.]

A statement made by one accused person can only be used against another co-accused person if the provisions of section 30 are applicable [p 850, col. 1.]

The fact that a dupatta stolen in a dacoity was found some 40 days after the dacoity in the possession of a person, not hidden away but openly worn, does not lead to the necessary inference that that person took part in the dacoity. [p. 850, col 2.]

It is for the prosecution to establish their case and because an accused person loses his head or gets frightened and does not tell the truth, he cannot, on that account, be convicted. [p. 850, col 2.]

Criminal appeal from an order of the Second Additional Sessions Judge, Gorakhpur.

Mr. Shiva Prasad Sinha, for the Appellants.

Mr. Sankar Saran (Government Pleader), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—Thegu, Rambali, Ramhit, Raghunandan and Jamuna were put on their trial before the learned Sessions Judge of Gorakhpur on a charge of dacoity. He acquitted Raghunandan and Jamuna and convicted the remaining three and sentenced them to five years' rigorous imprisonment each. They have appealed; Thegu and Rambali from jail and Ramhit is represented by Counsel. The dacoity is said to have taken place on the night of the 8th of June 1921 at the house of one Chanderbhan. Chanderbhan made a report in which he said he had identified three persons whom he named and that a large number of other dacoits had robbed him. He gave three separate lists, at least, of property which he said had been looted. The persons named in the report were arrested and their houses searched, but they were released by the Police and not sent up for trial as the search of their houses produced nothing suspicious. It is not very clear how the Police got on to the track of the five persons who were ultimately put on their trial. It appears, however, that Sub-Inspector Sat Narain searched the house of Thegu on the 19th of July and took possession of a large quantity of property. A great number of the articles found in the possession of Thegu have been identified by Chanderbhan and other persons of the family. The number is so large that I do not think there can be any doubt as to his guilt. I think it more probable that he was the actual thief, rather than a 'receiver'. There remains the case of Rambali and Ramhit. When the house of Thegu was being searched the Sub-Inspector says that Thegu mentioned Rambali and Ramhit as persons in whose possession property would be found. In consequence of this information the houses of Rambali, and Ramhit were searched. Nothing suspicious was found in the house of Ramhit but Thegu appears to have indicated a dupatta which Ramhit was wearing and said that it was part of the proceeds of the dacoity. The learned Judge felt that there was some difficulty about the admissibility of this statement. He says: "I think there can be little doubt, in view of the provisions of section 27 of the Indian Evidence Act, that this statement of Thegu has a certain value both against himself and Rambali and Ramhit, accused". The statement is not admissible in evidence against Thegu himself nor is it admissible against Rambali or Ramhit as proving their participation in the dacoity. I think the learned Sessions Judge is wrong in his interpretation of section 27 and in this connection I would call his attention to Emperor v. Kangal Mali (1). The statement made by Thegu to the Sub Inspector amounted to a confession or it did not. A statement made by an accused to a Police Officer, if it does not amount to a confession, may nevertheless be used against him and more particularly if the statemant made turns out to be false in the light of the other evidence in the case. If it amounts to a confession (which in my opinion it does not) then it must be excluded from evidence altogether under section 25, but, in either event, it can only be used against Thegu himself. A statement made by one accused person can only be used against another co-accused person if the provisions of section 30 are applicable. All really that the Sub-Inspector ought to have been allowed to say was that, in consequence of something Thegu said to him, he searched the houses of Rambali and Ramhit and took possession of these articles. Against Ramhit the only admissible evidence is the fact that on the 19th of July he was wearing a dupatta which two witnesses, namely, Chanderbhan and one of the women, identified with some certainty. Chanderbhan says it was his and Musammat Pirthi corroborates him. Another woman, it is true, identified it as belonging to Chanderbhan, but as she made three mistakes about other articles of clothing, her identification does not carry much weight. The dupatta is not before me. I would call the attention of the learned Sessions Judge to General Letter No. 1037-8-4 of 1921. This certainly was such an exhibit as would prove of material aid to the High Court in reaching a correct decision in this case. There was nothing suggested in the record or in the judgment to indicate that there was anything peculiar about this dupatta which would make its identification easy or probable. Therefore, I am not so convinced that this identification is correct that I would base the conviction for dacoity upon it, but, apart from that, it seems to me that even if it be granted that this dupatta was stolen in the dacoity, the fact that it was found some 40 days afterwards in the possession of Ramhit, not hidden away be it noted but actually openly worn, would not lead to the necessary inference that Ramhit took part in the dacoity. I am not sure even if it would be sufficient evidence to convict him under section 411 much less section 412 of the Indian Penal Code. It is true that Ramhit has not been able to convince the Court of how it came into his possession. but it is for the prosecution to establish their case and, because an accused person loses his head or gets frightened and does not tell the truth, he cannot, on that account, be convicted. The learned Judge says that there is nothing to show that Thegu had any enmity against Ramhit. It seems to me quite possible that Thegu was a great friend of Ramhit and gave him as a present this head-dress which Ramhit was pleased to wear. In my opinion the Assessors took a correct view of the evidence in his case. Coming now to the case of Rambali, I think it is sufficient to quote the reasons given by the learned Sessions Judge who convicted him, as sufficient ground for acquitting him. He says: "The cases of Rambali and, to a greater degree, of Ramhit, are decidedly more doubtful. In Rambali's possession there were found only a woman's dhoti, a piece of square cloth or jharan and a piece of long cloth and a piese of muslin. These are articles which he might perhaps have owned himself, although I do not think it is particularly likely. They are fairly well identified, but apart from the dhoti they are not articles which admit of very certain identification. Nonetheless, in view of the identification and of the way which these articles were traced to Rambali's possession, I find it difficult to reject the prosecution case against him." The learned Sessions Judge has shown that these are not such things as would be easily identifiable and they might well have belonged to Rambali. As to the identification, he says: "they are fairly well identified." They are identified to his satisfaction or they were not. I take it that he would not have been satisfied with the identification if it stood alone, for he goes on to say: "in view of the way in which these articles were traced to Rambali's possession, I find it difficult to reject the prosecution case against him." In other words, he brings in aid the statement which he allowed Sat Narain, Sub-Inspector, to depose to as having been made to him by Thegu accused. In my opinion that statement cannot be used against Rambali. The result is, that I dismiss the appeal of Thegu. I allow the appeals of Rambit and Rambali, acquit them of the offence of which they have been convicted, and direct that they be released.

CRIMINAL REVISION No. 587 OF 1921.

SAMAD ALI AND ANOTHER—FIRST PARTY—PETITIONERS
versus
ABDUL MAJID AND OTHERS—SECOND PARTY—OPPOSITE PARTIES.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 145—Irregular proceeding—Property attached—Proceeding dropped—Subsequent delivery of property on petition of opposite party, legality of.

A land was attached under section 145 (4) of the Criminal Procedure Code. After several adjournments, the Magistrate holding the proceedings refused to give further time to the first party and recorded the order: "Proceedings stopped: File." On the same day a petition was put in by the second party and the Magistrate passed on it an order: "Heard the parties: examined the documents. The first party have failed to prove their possession and case though repeated opportunity was granted. Second party will remain in possession":

Held, that the procedure was irregular and that as the land had been attached under clause (4) some further order than merely dropping the proceeding was necessary; [p. 852, col. 2.]

Held, also, that possession ought not to have been awarded to the second party merely because the first party had failed to prove its case, [p. 852, col. 1.]

Rule.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Suresh Chandra Talukdar (with him, Babu Bankim Chandra Banerjee), for the Petitioners.—This matter arises out of a proceeding under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The land was attached under the section in January 1921. On June 22nd the Magistrate, rejecting our petition for time, stopped the proceedings. On the same day, on the application of the second party, ordered that we having failed to substantiate our case the other side were to remain in possession. My submission is that the proceedings are entirely ultra vires. The Magistrate had no jurisdiction to award possession to the second party without recording any evidence. The proceedings have been vitiated by gross irregularity. My next submission is that the Magistrate having once dropped the proceedings became functus officio and was not competent to re-open them on the application of the second party.

Babu Santosh Kumar Basu, for the Opposite Parties.—The proceedings are regular. The Magistrate was competent to give possession to the second party after examining their documents. They had been given sufficient opportunities to make out their case, which they could not do. I submit the Magistrate did not act without jurisdiction.

Babu Suresh Chandra Talukdar, replied briefly.

JUDGMENT.

WALMSLEY, J.—This Rule arises out of proceedings taken under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code.

In January a proceeding was drawn up in the usual terms and the land was attached under clause (4). After several adjournments, on June 22nd the learned Magistrate refused to give further time to the first party, and recorded the order, "proceedings stopped: File." That is very ambiguous. However, we are not called on to interpret the meaning of such an order for on the same day, a petition was put in by the second party and the learned Magistrate wrote on it this order:—"Heard the parties: examined the documents. The first party have failed to prove their possession and case, though repeated opportunity was granted, second party will remain in possession." Then he gave the petitioners time to move this Court, and on July 11th this Rule was obtained and on July 13th he ordered that the land should remain under attachment pending disposal of this Rule.

LACHCHI RAM v. EMPEROR.

The procedure is irregular. It was undoubtedly open to the Magistrate to drop the proceeding if he thought that circumstances rendered them unnecessary, but as the land had been attached under clause (4), some further order was necessary. But it is the second order to which objection is taken. The Magistrate appears to have re-opened the proceedings at the instance of the second party, and then, forgetting about the attachment, he awarded possession to the second party as the party in possession merely because the first party had failed to prove its case. In doing so, I think he was clearly wrong. In the first place, having dropped proceedings he ought not to have re opened them, and, secondly, assuming that he had jurisdiction to go on with the case without a fresh proceeding, he ought to have put the parties on the same footing instead of awarding possession to the second party because the first party had failed to prove its case.

I think we should set aside both the orders of June 22nd, and direct the Magistrate to take up the case at the point which it had reached on the morning of June 22nd and to dispose of it according to law.

Let the record be sent down at once.

SUHRAWARDY, J.—I agree.

Public Gambling Act (III of 1867), ss. 1, 2—"Common gaming house", keeping of—Conviction, when sustainable—"Instruments of gaming," meaning of.

Instruments of gaming include articles used as a means or appurtenance of, or for the purpose of carrying on or facilitating gaming. [p. 853, col. 2.]

The words "common gaming house" do not mean simply a house in which instruments of gaming are kept or used for the purpose of carrying on or facilitating gaming [p. 853, col 2.]

Before convicting a person found in possession of instruments of gaming for keeping a "common gaming house" it must be established that the owner or occupier takes a fixed commission which is irrespective of the result of the gaming, or, at the outside, that he manipulates the conditions in such a manner that he cannot possibly lose. [p. 853, col. 1.]

Criminal revision from an order of the Additional Sessions Judge, Meerut.

Mr. Nehal Chand, for the Applicant.

Mr. R. Malcomson, (Assistant Government Advocate), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The decision of this revision has been referred to this Bench. The facts are as follows. Lachchi Ram, applicant, occupies a shop in Muzaffarnagar city. The Superintendent of Police, on information received, raided the shop on the 15th of October 1921. He found therein a book of tickets in a red cover and a cash box. On the facts, we are satisfied that the tickets contained in the book were being used as forms of memoranda on which to record wagers. It is clear that wagering was actually in progress. The event on which the wagering took place was the determination of the last digit or the last two digits in the average price at which a chest of opium might be sold in the Government sales during a certain period. This is a form of wagering which is common in certain towns in this Province. The question which we have to consider is whether, upon these facts, the applicant has been rightly convicted under section 3 of the Gambling Act for keeping a common gaming house. The tickets in question and the cash-box are instruments of gaming as they were used for the purpose of carrying on gaming. So the shop of the applicant was certainly a house in which instruments of gaming were kept and used, but we have to see whether they were kept or used for "the profit or gain" of the applicant "whether by way of charge for the use of such house..... or otherwise howsoever," and, unless this is established, the conviction must fail. The Magistrate has stated that the applicant charged commission from those persons who made successful wagers, but there is no evidence to support that assertion. It ppears clear to us that the applicant was what is known as a book-maker and that he laid wagers with persons using the establish ment. If he won he took their money, if he lost he paid them at the odds agreed on. But can it be said that the tickets and the cash-box were kept or used for his profit or gain? They were used in furtherance of his business—otherwise they would not be instruments of gaming—but in themselves they could not be said to be used for his profit or gain. In order to sustain the conviction, the words "for the profit or gain of" would have to be read as meaning, for the purpose of carrying on the gaming. But they cannot be read in that way as such an interpretation would make the words a meaningless redundancy. Instruments of gaming include articles used as a means or appurtenance of, or for the purpose of carrying on or facilitating gaming. We cannot interpret the words "common gaming house" to mean a house in which articles used as a means or appurtenance of, or for the purpose of carrying on or facilitating gaming, are kept or used for the the purpose of carrying on or facilitating gaming. This is simple repetition. And, further, the meaning of the words "for the profit or gain of the person .....owning such house" is indicated by the succeeding words "by way of charge for the use of such house.....or otherwise howsoever." The definition of a common gaming house, in our opinion, is not materially different under the new Act from what it was under the old Act, with the exception that it is no longer necessary as an ingredient of the offence to establish playing by cards, dice, gaming tables or other articles of that nature. But the essential element remains. It must be established that the owner or occupier takes a fixed commission which is irrespective of the result of the gaming, or, at the outside, that he manipulates the conditions in such a manner that he cannot possibly lose. Here there is no evidence of commission having been taken and there is no evidence as to how the wagers were made. There was no charge for the use of the house. If it had been established, as was suggested by the learned Magistrate, that the applicant had deducted commission from the winners to an extent which would invariably give him a profit, or if it had been established that he charged for the use of his premises, he could have been legally convicted under the new Act for keeping a common gaming house, even although the instruments of gaming were only the cash-box in which the money was kept and the forms upon which the wagers were recorded. But, as the case stands, no offence has been committed. We, therefore, allow the application and set aside the conviction. The applicant is already on bail. His bail-bond will be cancelled.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 145, proceedings under—Documentary evidence of title, whether can be relied on, to corroborate oral evidence as to possession.

In proceedings under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, a Magistrate is entitled to rely on the documentary evidence as to title, to corroborate the oral evidence as to possession [p. 854, col. 1.]

Kali Kristo Thakur v. Golam Ali Chowdhry, 7 C. 46; 4 Shome L. R. 119; 8 C. L. R. 245; 3 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 579, followed.

Petition, under section 107 of the Government of India Act, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Devakottai, in Miscellaneous Case No. 16 of 1920.

Mr. V. Ramaswamy Iyer, for the Petitioners

Mr. K. S. Jayarama Iyer, for the Respondents.

ORDER.—I cannot help remarking that the order of the Magistrate might have been much clearer. The Magistrate in paragraph 5 thinks that counter-petitioners were allowed to be in possession from the date of the decree in 1907 till delivery of possession was given in 1916 by Exhibit

B. This would imply that the opposite side got possession afterwards, but the Magistrate says lower down that he was not satisfied that the decree-holder was in possession subsequent to the delivery in 1916. He thinks the oral evidence on both sides is not very trustworthy, but having considered the evidence on both sides and the documentary evidence afforded by the decree order for possession and kist receipts, he thinks the version of No. 1 party as to possession was more probable.

A great deal has been made of the halting opinion of the Magistrate, and it is argued that the case is one under section 146 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, the Magistrate not being able to find who is in possession.

The Magistrate is entitled to rely on the documentary evidence as to title, to corroborate the oral evidence as to possession. Kali Kristo Thakur v. Golam Ali Chowdhry (1), and, reading the judgment as a whole, I think what the Magistrate means is that, though the oral evidence is unsatisfactory, and had it stood alone, would not afford a basis of decision as to who was in possession, the documentary evidence supports the evidence of No. 1 party and makes it more probable that it was in possession.

I do not think that I can in revision say that the Magistrate had no materials for arriving at the conclusion.

The petition fails and is dismissed.

Criminal revision from an order of the Sessions Judge, Banda.

Mr. K. N. Laghate, for the Applicants.

Mr. R. Malcomson, (Assistant Government Advocate), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—Fourteen men were put on their trial before a Magistrate of the First Class on the following charge:—"That you on the 15th day of August 1921 at 4 P. M. all committed a riot upon Daco at.....the common intention of your unlawful assembly being to assault Daco, and it was in pursuance of this common object that you all moved in a body and did cause bodily injury to Daco and thereby committed an offence punishable under section 147 of the Indian Penal Code." The Magistrate convicted all the accused and sentenced them to various terms of imprisonment and fine. They appealed. Now, there was no question that Daco had been assaulted by some one. The medical evidence proved that. According to his evidence all fourteen men took part in beating him. He was corroborated also by his son who came up while the beating was going on and deposed to the same effect. The learned Sessions Judge, however, on appeal, thought that, having regard to the small amount of injury actually received by Daco, he had exaggerated the number of persons who had beaten him. Now, one of the witnesses called was Purna, a Chaukidar, to whom Daco had made a statement shortly after the occurrence. In cross-examination Purna admitted that Daco had told him that the persons who had beaten him were Jagannath, Hanuman, Masua and Bodhan. Acting on this evidense, the learned Sessions Judge acquitted the other ten accused but confirmed the conviction of these four, holding that it was proved to his satisfaction that these four combined together in beating Daco. But, as there were only four, he altered the conviction to one under section 323, and he reduced the sentence of imprisonment. In revision before me it is argued that, having regard to section 238, Criminal Procedure Code, and certian rulings of the Calcutta High Court, it was not open to the learned Judge, on appeal to alter the conviction from one under section 147 to one under section 323. I am not prepared to accept this contention. The Judge has found as a fact that these four men and not fourteen combined in a joint assault on Daco. Whether section 147 is applicable or not depends on the number of persons concerned. Section 149 is not in question. I think there is no force in the other grounds raised and, therefore, reject the application.

Babu Santosh Kumar Bose, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—In this case proceedings under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure were initiated in respect of a tract of land measuring some 48 bighas. The final order has been made by the Trial Magistrate on the basis of a local enquiry of which we have no note or memorandum, and on the basis, further, of a judgment in a case made under section 448, Indian Penal Code, instituted on the complaint of one Sajoo Bibi, the wife of Hasnuddi, against Karimaddi Chaukidar and Dholai Howladar who appear to be members of the second party. The final order is thus it appears based upon no evidence and must, therefore, be set aside. The proceedings will now be re-opened at the stage reached on the 10th February 1921 and the matter heard and disposed of in accordance with law.

The Sub Divisional Magistrate who made the final order, we learn from the explanation submitted by the District Magistrate, has been transferred from the Sub-division in question. There is nothing, therefore, to prevent the further trial now directed from taking place in the Court of the officer now holding the position of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate.

Works of Defence Act (VII of 1903)—Platform in existence in Cantonment area for 30 years—Demolition—Acquiescence.

A Cantonment authority which has acquiesced in the existence of a platform for over 30 years in the Cantonment area, cannot be permitted to demolish it.

NANDKISHORE SAO v. BIKAN SINGH.

The Works of Defence Act, 1903, does not authorise the demolition of a platform only three feet high.

Criminal revision from an order of the Sessions Judge, Agra.

Mr. Narain Prasad Asthana, for the Applicant.

Mr. R. Malcomson, (Assistant Government Advocate), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The first point to decide is the age of the platform. The documentary evidence shows that it was in existence in 1902 and I see no reason to disbelieve the oral evidence that it has been in existence for thirty years before the date of the case. The Cantonment authorities having acquiesced in its existence for that period cannot be permitted to demolish it now. The Magistrate has made a reference to the Defence Zone. Act VII of 1903 does not afford any authority for demolition of the platform and, in any circumstances, as it is only about three feet high, its existence cannot be considered a danger to the defence of Agra. I set aside the conviction and sentence accordingly. The fine, if paid, will be refunded.

A rent-decree passed against a person is to some extent evidence of possession in favour of that person, but it is not conclusive against one who was not a party to it. [p 857, col. 1]

A Magistrate does not act without jurisdiction if, in a proceeding under section 144, Criminal Procedure Code, he passes an order on the strength of such a rent-decree when a breach of the peace is imminent. But before making the order final, however, he should convert the proceedings into one under section 45, for in all cases, unless where the possession has already been determined by a Civil Court, or is undisputed, the proper procedure for a Magistrate to adopt is to convert a proceeding under section 144 into section 145 and determine the issue of possession once for all so as not to leave occasion for further dispute. Messrs. Jayaswal and J. N. Sen Gupta, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The 2nd party has come to this Court as aggrieved by an order of the Magistrate passed under section 144 of the Code of Criminal Procedure on the 2nd of January 1922, which was made absolute on the 18th of January.

The Magistrate's order was passed upon a Police report, dated the 18th December 1921, which showed that there was an imminent danger to a breach of the peace on account of the 2nd party claiming possession of the land in dispute which, according to the investigation of the Police, was found to be in possession of the 1st party. Both parties gave evidence with respect to their respective claims of possession over the land in dispute before the Police. The Sub-Inspector accepted the evidence of the 1st party and rejected that of the 2nd party on two principal grounds: (1) that against the 1st party the landlord obtained a rent decree on the 14th of January 1920 for the years 1324 to 1327, with respect to the land in question, and (2) that out of the witnesses examined on behalf of the 2nd party one of them, Babu Lall, gave out that the disputed land was cultivated by Bhikham Singh, (?) the 1st party, and that he had planted Kurbi this year. Accepting the report of the Police, the Magistrate issued an ex parte order under clause (2) of section 144 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The 2nd party objected to this order by means of a petition. It was alleged that the rent-decree relied upon by the 1st party was a collusive one, and they not being party to it were not bound by it. At the hearing of the case on the 18th January both parties accused the landlord (The Darbhanga Raj) of having colluded with the other party. It was difficult for the Court to determine this point. The Magistrate observed: "It is quite possible that the collusion of the Raj advanced by both parties is now in favour of the 2nd party." The Magistrate relies upon the rent decree as being a prima facie evidence of possession in favour of the 1st party. The rent-decree is to some extent evidence under section 13 of the Indian Evidence Act as to the landlord having recognized the holding as being in possession of the 1st party: but that evidence is not conclusive as against the 2nd party. It does not stand on the same footing as the delivery of possession given by a Civil Court or a decree awarding possession by a Civil Court. These have been held to be sufficient to entitle a Magistrate to pass an order under section 144 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, inasmuch as the Civil Court delivery of possession puts to an end any dispute as to possession of immoveable property which alone can be the subject-matter of an enquiry under section 145 of the Code. In such a case it has been held that action under section 144 is appropriate and the Magistrate is not required to initiate proceedings under section 145 of the Code: Vide Sultan Singh v. Prayag Singh (1). The possession delivered by a Civil Court may, under certain circumstances, also operate against the persons not parties to the Civil Court decree as has been held in the case of Gouri Dutt v. Gobind Singh (2). It is, however, doubtful whether a mere rent-decree obtained by a landlord will bind one who is not a party to it so as to hold that possession was either determined by a Civil Court or was undisputed. Therefore, the rent decree in the present case itself is not a conclusive proof of possession in the favour of the 1st party. The possession was disputed before the Police and, as observed above, both parties adduced evidence in support of their respective claim to possession. The Sub-Inspector relied upon the evidence of a witness on behalf of the 1st party, named Babu Lall, (?) who proved that the land in question was cultivated by the 1st party and some crop was also grown. This was, therefore, an additional evidence and putting this alongside the rent decree, the Sub-Inspector was of opinion that the evidence of possession was conclusive. Based upon that report the Magistrate thought that there was a prima facie case of actual possession in favour of the 1st party and consequently he issued an order under section 144 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. In the circumstances of the case, it may be that the order of the Magistrate of the 2nd of January was good inasmuch as it was passed with a view to prevent a breach of the peace which was then imminent. The more appropriate action, however, would have been for the Magistrate, after hearing the parties on the 18th of January, to convert his order under section 144 into a proceeding under section 145 of the Code so as to once for all determine the right of the contending parties to the possession of the land in question. The order of the 2nd of January confirmed on the 18th January will expire in about two weeks, and one cannot be sure that the order of the Magistrate has been so effective as to safeguard the public peace and that the dispute between the parties will not recur. The Magistrate may then be driven to the necessity of adopting successive proceedings under section 144, which has been condemned by this Court. A proceeding at the initial stage on the 18th of January under section 145 would have, as observed above, once for all settled the dispute between the parties and put to an end any danger to a breach of the peace. I, therefore, do not go so far as to hold, in the circumstances of the present case, that the order of the Magistrate of the 2nd of January 1922 was without jurisdiction. Certainly, I think that the Magistrate will, in case of any future danger to a breach of the peace, adopt the more effective measure by instituting a proceeding under section 145 of the Code, treating the effect of his order of the 2nd of January upon the possession of the parties as not affecting the claim of the 2nd party. In other words, the enquiry as to possession, in case of the Magistrate's adopting a proceeding under section Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 439, cl. (4)—High Court, power of, in revision—Acquittal how can be converted into conviction—Murder, offence of, what is.

A High Court cannot in revision convert a finding of acquittal into one of conviction; the only way in which this can be done is by an appeal by the Government against the acquittal but it can enhance a sentence passed under any section of the Penal Code. [p. 859, col. 1.]

Criminal revision from an order of the Additional Sessions Judge, Cawnpore at Banda.

Mr. R. Malcomson, (Assistant Government Advocate), for the Crown.

Mr. Hamid Hasan, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—Sheodarshan Singh was committed to the Court of the Sessions Judge of Banda on a charge under section 302 of the Indian Peral Code. The Sessions Judge found that on the facts an offence under section 302 of the Indian Penal Code was not made out but that an offence under section 304 of the Indian Penal Code was made out. He, accordingly, found Sheodarshan Singh guilty under that section and sentenced him to seven years' rigorous imprisonment. The judgment of the Sessions Judge being brought to the notice of Piggott, J., on perusal of the Sessions statement, he directed that notice should go to Sheodarshan Singh to show cause why he should not be convicted of the offence of murder or why the sentence passed upon him should not be enhanced. It is to be noted that Sheodarshan Singh did not appeal against his conviction. He has, however, been represented before us in the matter of enhancement by a competent Counsel who has taken us through the whole of the evidence in the case. On the evidence, it is perfectly clear that on the day in question a man called Sukhnandan was sitting under a tree in Aineshwara, in the Banda district, and that Sheodarshan Singh was sitting close by him. There is nothing to show how a quarrel arose between the two, but at about 2 P. M. in the afternoon, Sheodarshan Singh with two other men set on Sukhnandan with lathis. Sukhnandan got up and ran away endeavouring to escape. They followed him, brought him down, and continued to rain lathi blows on him. Sukhnandan succumbed to his injuries. The injuries inflicted upon him were about as severe injuries as could be inflicted upon a human being with lathis. His skull was fractured. There were no less than 13 injuries upon the head and there were also other injuries upon the body. The man was battered to death in a most deliberate and merciless way. Apart from other evidence, three persons, Parshadi, Musammat Chunki and Khushali, who assert that they were eye-witnesses of the affair and whom we see no reason to disbelieve, have deposed that Sheodarshan took part in the brutal assault upon the deceased. These witnesses were believed by the Sessions Judge and the Assessors. Now, upon these facts, Sheodarshan Singh was undoubtedly guilty of murder. The reasons given by the Sessions Judge for finding that the offence committed was less than a murder show, we regret to say, a complete want of acquaintance with the law on the subject. He appears to think that if there is no premeditation and if an attack is made with lathis such as are usually carried by villagers, it is impossible for the offence to be murder. We suggest to the learned Judge that he should carefully study the provisions of sections 299 and 300 of the Indian Penal Code. He will then find that when death is caused by an act which has been done with the intention of causing bodily injury and the bodily injury intended to be inflicted is sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death, the offence is murder. We cannot, however, change the conviction into a conviction of murder. Sheodarshan Singh was acquitted by the Sessions Judge of the offence of murder and we cannot, in revision, convert a finding of acquittal into one of conviction. The only method by which it would be possible to obtain a conviction of murder would be by an appeal by the Government against the acquittal. But even if the Sessions Judge had been right in his views, and the case had been a case of culpable homicide, the sentence is inadequate. Taking it as a case of culpable homicide, it is about as bad a case of culpable homicide as can be conceived and was a case in which the maximum sentence allowed by the law should have been inflicted. We inflict that sentence now by enhancing the sentence of seven years' rigorous imprisonment into one of transportation for life.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 196, 252—Sanction to prosecute under alternative sections—Legality—"Hearing the complainant", meaning of—Martial Law (Supplementary) Ordinance III of 1921, cl. (6)—Trial by Special Tribunal—Prosecution under s. 121 or 121A, Penal Code—Omission to examine complainant on oath—Illegality—Penal Code (Amendment) Act (XVI of 1921), s. 2—Forfeiture of property under ss. 121, 122, Penal Code, abolished.

A sanction under section 196, Criminal Procedure Code, to prosecute an accused should be specifically directed to the particular sections of Chapter VI of the Code in respect of which proceedings are to be taken and the order should be preceded by and be the result of a deliberate determination that proceedings shall be taken in respect of a particular section or sections and no other. It is opposed to the true intention of section 196, Criminal Procedure Code, to give a roving power to determine under what sections proceedings should be taken. [p. 859, col. 2.]

But a sanction under section 196, Criminal Procedure Code, to prosecute an accused in the alternative under section 121 or 121A of the Indian Penal Code is entirely specific and proper. [p. 859, col. 2.]

The expression "hearing the complainant" in section 252, Criminal Procedure Code, does not involve his examination on oath and a trial under Ordinance III of 1921 without such examination of complainant is not irregular. [p. 860, col. 1.]

The punishment of forfeiture of property for offences under sections 121, 122, Indian Penal Code, has been abolished by section 2 of the Indian Penal Code (Amendment) Act. [p. 861, col. 2.]

In some cases it may be hard to draw the line between rioting of a serious nature in which numerous persons take part and the offence of waging war against the King. But the offence is clear when the object of the mob is the total subversion of the British power. [p. 860, col. 1; p. 861, col. 1.]

Appeal against the judgment of the Court of the Special Tribunal, Malabar, Calicut, in Case No. 4 of the Calendar for 1921.

Dr. S. Swaminathan and Mr. B. Pocker, for the Accused.

Mr. J. C. Adam, (Public Prosecutor), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The accused appeals against his conviction by the Special Tribunal sitting at present in the Malabar district, of an offence punishable under section 121, Indian Penal Code, and his sentence to be hanged and to forfeit his property.

The first point taken is, that the sanction of the Local Government which is required by section 196 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is defective in that it does not specify with sufficient clearness the section of the offence in respect of which it is given. The sanction is Exhibit B and it, no doubt, is a sanction for the prosecution of the accused in the alternative for offences under section 121 or under section 121A, Indian Penal Code. It is urged that a sanction in the alternative is not such as the law contemplates and the judgment of Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C. J., in Barindra Kumar Ghose v. Emperor (1) is relied on. We respectfully and fully accept the observations of the learned Chief Justice to the effect that, "the sanction should be specifically directed to the particular sections of Chapter VI in respect of which proceedings are to be taken, and that the order or authority should be preceded by and be the result of a deliberate determination that proceedings shall be taken in respect of a particular section or particular sections of the chapter and no other." We agree further that "it would be opposed to the true intendment of section 196, Criminal Procedure Code, for the Local Government by its order to give its legal or other advisers a roving power to determine under what sections proceedings should be taken." But we see no reason to doubt that the requirements are fulfilled in the present case. The present case in fact differs from that with which Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C. J., was dealing in toto, since the sanction there, after specifying a number of sections, gave a general authority to proceed under any other section which might be found applicable to the case. Here the sanction is entirely specific and the only question left open, no doubt, for the benefit as such of the Court which was to try the case as of the Prosecutor who was to institute the complaint, was which of the two sections specified applies to the facts which might be proved. We hold the sanction proper. This objection, therefore, fails.

(1) 7 Ind. Cas. 359; 37 C. 467; 14 C. W. N. 1114; 11 Cr. L. J. 453.

The next objection taken to the proceedings is that they did not begin with an examination of the complainant by the Court. The procedure under clause 6 of Ordinance III of 1921, dated 5th September 1921, is to be that prescribed for warrant-cases and no doubt the first incident in the trial of such a case under section 252 is to be that "the Magistrate shall proceed to hear the complainant (if any)" the section providing next that "he shall take all such evidence as may be adduced." This, however, in no way assists the accused's contention that a trial without the examination of the complainant on oath is irregular. The expression used in section 252 is "hear the complainant." The taking of evidence is separately referred to. We have been shown no authority for holding that "hearing" a complainant involves his examination on oath. We may, in dismissing this objection, observe that nothing resembling it appears to have been put forward at the trial and that it is not shown how the accused was in any way prejudiced by the procedure followed.

Turning to the merits, we have the evidence, first, of the Deputy Superintendent of Police that the accused was seen in a crowd described as composed of two or three thousand persons, which attacked the force of the Police and Military after it had had been engaged under the District Magistrate's supervision in searching for war knives under ther Malabar War Knives Act, India Act XXIV of 1854. The witness says that the mob came on against the force of about two hundred Police and Military, that it attacked them with swords, knives and bludgeons, that the Police had to fire in self defence and that it was only after nine persons had been killed and three wounded by that fire that the mob retreated to Tirurangadi and some of these composing it entered the mosque there. The Police and Military followed the mob to the mosque and the first witness then saw the accused in the mosque. He knew him previously—how he know him previously we shall explain—and asked him to come out. Accused was then arrested and, at the request of the first witness and others, he told the mob to disperse and it obeyed his directions.

The second witness, Deputy Inspector-General of Police, corroborates this evidence generally, except that he saw the accused only at the mosque. These are the two witnesses regarding the actual occurrence. There is, it may be said, no evidence on this part of the case for the accused. He, moreover, attempted no cross-examination. He merely denied that he was present as alleged but made practically no further attempt to defend himself or to counter the prosecution evidence. In these circumstances, we have no hesitation in believing that evidence and holding that the accused was in the mob, as the first witness alleges, and was, as the first and second witnesses allege, at the mosque and that after his surrender the other members of the mob dispersed under his directions. There is the further important fact, which also we accept on the authority of the first witness, that the accused was in the front rank of the mob on the right just by the standard bearer. It is objected to this part of the evidence that it was only given on the fourth occasion on which this witness was examined. It was given, however, in reply to a question put by the Court and we see no reason for doubting that it was a pure accident that it was not mentioned earlier for thinking that it does not represent what the witness really saw.

The next question is, whether these acts of the accused amounted or not to the offence of waging war against the King. Dr. Swaminathan on his behalf has contended that they did not. We are quite ready to recognise that in some cases it may be hard to draw the line between mere rioting of a serious nature, in which numerous persons take part, and the offence with which we are dealing. But we do not think it necessary to quote at length the law bearing on the case, for we have no doubt that the statement of it in the leading cases of Reg. v. Gordon (Lord George) (2), and Reg. v. Frost (3) fully supports the view we take of the nature of the offense of the accused in this case. The object of the mob was not merely resistence to the District Magistrate or to any isolated action, or for any particular purpose, but, as appears from the evidence we shall next refer to, the total subversion of the British Power. That evidence is given by the fourth and fifth witnesses, the former a constable and the latter an independent land-owner. Nothing to their discredit has been alleged and here again the accused has given no counter evidence. They say and it is apparently not denied—that the accused has for some time been the Secretary of the Khilafat movement, which has an office at Tanur, within six miles of the scene of the occurrence. At meetings of the Khilafat movement, as the 4th witness deposes uncontradicted, it was urged that no revenue should be paid to Government and that those present should non-co-operate with it. The accused, there is evidence, preached these doctrines. It is said—and it is not contradicted by the accused, in fact the defence witness speaks to the fact—that he had already, for some time before this occurrence, been usurping one prerogative of a sovereign power by holding a mock Court of justice of his own. On the morning of this occurrence the fourth and fifth witnesses heard him at a largely attended meeting at Tanur saying that those present must subvert the British Raj and establish the Khilafat Government and that all Government offices, Railways and Telegraphs must be destroyed. He said that all must start at once for Tirurangadi and destroy the British soldiers and the District Magistrate there. He had with him at that time a flag which was being carried in the forefront of the crowd when it attacked the District Magistrate and his forces. M. O. 1, there is no doubt, is the flag that was then being carried, since it was picked up on the spot by the Deputy Inspector General, 2nd prosecution witness. We have adopted the Court witnesses' version of the inscription on it and taking that version in the form most favourable to accused without the word 'combat'—the inscription runs:—'God the greatest. The Khilafat, go to work light mindedly and slowly and you will certainly succeed and God will be with you." It does not seem to us that the substitution of 'work' for 'combat' in the connection, in which the word stands on a banner used in the circumstances in which it was used, greatly assists the accused's case; for with neither word can it be possible to regard the banner as a peaceful symbol. We have, then, that the accused was taking part in an organised armed attack on the constituted authorities, that attack having for its object, in the words of his own speech, the subversion of British Raj and the establishment of another Government. That being so, we concur without hesitation in the lower Courts' conclusion that the accused was guilty of the offence of waging war against the King.

The remaining question is as to sentence. The lower Court apparently was not aware that the punishment of forfeiture of property had been abolished by Act XVI of 1921, which received the assent of the Governor-General on the 29th September 1921. In these circumstances, we must set aside that part of the sentence.

In view of the character of the occurrence we can find no reason for interference with the sentence of death, which we, therefore, confirm.

MUTHUKANAKKU PILLAI v. EMPEROR.

The words "any case" in section 192 of the Criminal Procedure Code are wide enough to cover an enquiry under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

Therefore, a Sub-Divisional Magistrate who institutes proceedings under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, has power to transfer the same to any Magistrate subordinate to him for enquiry or trial.

Criminal revision from an order of the Sessions Judge, Ghazipur.

Messrs. Haribans Sahai and Kumuda Prasad, for the Applicant.

Mr. Uma Shankar Bajpai, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This revision arises out of proceedings under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The Court has come to the conclusion that there is a dispute relating to immoveable property which is likely to cause a breach of the peace, and after an exhaustive judgment, has found itself unable to decide which of the two parties is in possession, or rather it has found that both parties have tried to take possession. Under these circumstances, it passed an order under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code. Under section 435, paragraph 3, this Court cannot interfere in revision. One point, however, is taken that the Court that passed the order had no jurisdiction. It arises in this way. The Sub-Divisional Officer instituted proceedings under section 145 and transferred them to the Court which ultimately held the enquiry and passed its order. It is said that the Sub-Divisional Officer had no jurisdiction to transfer the case. Having regard to section 192, which provides that a Sub-Divisional Magistrate may transfer any case, of which he has taken cognizance, for enquiry or trial to any Magistrate subordinate to him, it gave him authority to transfer this matter. I think the words "any case" in the section are wide enough to cover an enquiry under section 145 of the Code. I reject this application.

Where an accused was charged of an offence under section 147, Indian Penal Code, but was convicted of an offence under section 352, Indian Penal Code, and where the whole of the defence evidence was let in in the Court of first instance and was disbelieved and it was also disbelieved in the lower Appellate Court any irregularity in conviction was cured by section 535, Criminal Procedure Code. [p. 864, col. 1.]

Petition under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise the judgment of the Court of the Sub-Divisional First Class Magistrate, Devakota, in Criminal Appeal No. 9 of 1921, preferred against the judgment of the Court of the Second Class Magistrate, Tiruvadanai, in Calendar Case No. 203 of 1920.

Mr. R. Kesava Iyengar, for the Petitioners.

Mr. J. C. Adam, (Public Prosecutor), for the Crown.

ORDER.—In this case accused Nos. 2, 3, 4, 5 and 7 were convicted by the Second Class Magistrate of an offence under section 147 of the Penal Code, i.e., of rioting. It is unnecessary to go into the evidence for the prosecution which was believed by the Second Class Magistrate who originally tried them. The common object alleged was of getting P. W. No. 1, Udayar Pusari, to execute a certain re-conveyance of lands. On appeal to the First Class Sub-Divisional Magistrate, he agreed with the lower Court as to the credibility of the prosecution evidence but altered the convictions into convictions under section 352, i.e., assault, as against accused Nos. 4, 5 and 7. Accused Nos. 2 and 3 were convicted of abetment of assault under sections 352 and 114, Indian Penal Code.

With regard to accused Nos. 2 and 3 their case can be dealt with at once. The conviction of the abetment of assault on a charge under section 147, Indian Penal Code, clearly cannot stand, and if authority is wanted, it is to be found in the case reported in Padmanabha Panjikannaya v. Emperor (1). With regard to the second conviction against accused No. 7, i.e., wrongful restraint, Mr. Kesava Iyengar, who has delivered a very learned argument for the accused, had little to say and I think that the conviction can stand.

The real point of this revision petition is as concerns the convictions of accused Nos. 4, 5 and 7 under section 352, they having been charged under section 147. The learned Vakil admits that the point is a technical one and is purely one of law and I have to decide whether such a conviction is illegal, and, if so, I must interfere. Now, several cases have been cited but they are, many of them, cases on section 323, i.e., hurt. It is contended that section 238 of the Criminal Procedure Code does not apply to a case of this kind. In other words, that assault is not a minor offence to rioting. Reliance is placed on a judgment of the Calcutta High Court in Kanta Neya v. Emperor (2) which was, as a matter of fact, a case of sections 147 and 323. The passage which has caused me some perplexity in the judgment is as follows: "It cannot be said that any minor offence is included in section 147. The use of criminal force is a necessary ingredient in that offence but any particular kind of voluntary use of such criminal force may and should be separately charged, etc." I think the word 'any' must be taken as equivalent to 'every kind' of minor offence. I do not think that the learned Judges meant to lay down that there could be no minor offence under section 147 at all and this view finds support in a case reported in Sabir Husain v. Emperor (3). But that does not dispose of the difficulty. The question is, is the second part of the sentence quoted above applicable to any particular kind of voluntary use, etc.?

Now, rioting—section 146 is an intensification of an unlawful assembly section 141 and the common objects enumerated in 141, (No. 5) is by means of criminal force or show of criminal force to compel any person to do what he is not legally bound to do and section 350 is the definition of criminal force. Section 351 is the definition of assault, of which criminal force is undoubtedly an ingredient, Mr. Kesava Iyengar has ingeniously attempted to persuade me that criminal force in sections 141 and 146 must be essentially different from the criminal force in sections 350 to 352. He says that in section 146 the force or violence used by an unlawful assembly is of indeterminable character, i.e., not directed against any particular person as long as it is enough to cause—or to cause a threat of—a disturbance of public tranquillity; that will bring it within section 146. But he says that in order to establish an offence against section 352, the general or indeterminate force in 146 is not sufficient and a specific charge of using that criminal force as against a determinate person is imperative. There are cases, as I have pointed out above, which were cited to me with regard to sections 147 and 323 though we have a doubt expressed by Napier, J. in Mongalu Aorodhono Hathi, In re (4) as to whether section 323 is not a minor offence under section 147. I think there is no doubt that criminal force being an element of the offence of 146, it must be taken to be capable of carrying a conviction under section 352. I am not satisfied that a different mens rea is necessary in 146 as contrasted with section 352. In any case, I am inclined to think that this is an instance in which section 535 of the Criminal Procedure Code may fairly be brought into play. The whole of the defense evidence was let in in the Court of the first instance and was disbelieved. It was also disbelieved in the lower Appellate Court. Under these circumstances, I am unable to say that the convictions of accused Nos. 4, 5 and 7 are illegal and, in my view, these convictions must be confirmed and the criminal revision petition dismissed with regard to accused Nos. 2 and 3, their convictions must be quashed and the fines, if levied, refunded.

BOHRA BIRBAL—APPLICANT

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 174—Summons—Illness—Non-attendance, when offence—Sufficient cause.

If a person is sufficiently incapacitated by illness to have given up his ordinary avocations, this is sufficient excuse for him not to attend a Court in obedience to a summons. If he is so ill that his absence cannot be regarded as a wilful disobedience to the Court's order, the fact that he does not send a man to inform the Court of his illness does not render him liable to punishment.

Criminal reference made by the Sessions Judge, Agra.

FACTS appear from the following referring order:

"Bohra Birbal applies for revision of an order of a Magistrate imposing a fine for an offence under section 174 of the Penal Code.

"There appears to be no doubt that the applicant was summoned and that he did not appear. He pleaded that his failure to attend was not wilful disobedience, but that he was prevented by illness. The Magistrate has not given any finding as to whether he accepted the evidence that the applicant was ill, but he has said that he might have sent an excuse to the Court, as he was living in the same town, or that probably he was not so ill that he could not have attended the Court in a conveyance.

"I refer this case as it appears to me that the Magistrate has taken an incorrect view as to the degree of necessity to obey a summons. He seems to have thought that if a person summoned to a Court was unwell, but at the same time was not so dangerously ill that he could not be moved, failure to attend would be punishable under section 174. I think that this is wrong. It appears to me that if a person is sufficiently incapacitated by illness to have given up his ordinary avocations, this would be sufficient excuse for him not to attend a Court in obedience to a summons. If the applicant was so ill that his absence could not be regarded as a wilful disobedience to the Court's order, the fact that he did not send a man to inform the Court of his illness, would not render him liable to punishment, though it might show that he was not endowed with the virtue of politeness. I, therefore, submit the record to the High Court with a recommendation that the conviction be set aside."

JUDGMENT.—For the reasons given by the learned Sessions Judge, I accept the reference, acquit the accused and direct that the fine, if paid, be refunded.

(3) that the mere posting of the cheque by the plaintiff from Sialkot did not have the effect of completing the contract at Sialkot; [p 865, col. 2]

(4) that it was doubtful whether the mere leasing of house property at Sialkot by the defendants through an agent amounted to carrying on business at Sialkot within the meaning of section 20 of the Civil Procedure Code; [p 866, col. 1]

(5) that, therefore, the Sialkot Courts had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit, but that as there was no failure of justice in consequence of the suit having been tried at Sialkot, objection as to place of suing could not be sustained by High Court by reason of section 21 of the Civil Procedure Code [p 866, col. 1.]

Petition, under section 44 of Act IX of 1921, for revision of a decree of the Judge, Small Cause Court, Sialkot Cantonment, dated the 3rd January, 1921.

Mr. M. S. Bhagat, for the Petitioners.

JUDGMENT.—This petition for revision arises out of a suit tried by the Judge, Small Cause Court, Sialkot Cantonment, in which the plaintiff was Lieutenant Colonel G. B. Riddick, R. A. M. C, and the defendants Sohan Singh and Mohan Singh, house proprietors, residing at Rawalpindi.

The subject-matter of the suit was the plaintiff's tenancy for the summer of 1920 of a house at Murree owned by the defendants.

In brief, the plaintiff's claim was that the defendants had misrepresented the condition, capacity and furnishing of the house, that in consequence he had been put to the extra expense of bringing up supplementary furniture from Sialkot, and that he had suffered a loss of half the rent of Rs. 1,300 on an arrangement between himself and another officer that they were to share the house. The plaintiff stated that he had paid Rs. 650 to the defendants on 4th February 1920, and he claimed to set off his loss of half the rent against this sum and asked for a decree for Rs. 300. The Judge, Small Cause Court, granted him a decree in accordance with his prayer.

The first point taken for the defendant-petitioners is, that the Sialkot Court had no jurisdiction to hear the suit.

The contract between the parties appears to have been effected by correspondence between the plaintiff writing from Sialkot and the defendants writing from Rawalpindi. Admittedly, the respective residences of the parties are at these two places. The correspondence, with the exception of a letter from the defendants to the plaintiff dated 24th February 1920, is not on the record. The lower Court accepts it as proved (and it is not disputed) that Lieutenant-Colonel Riddick sent the defendants a cheque for Rs. 650 from Sialkot on the 4th February 1920 and found that the suit could have been brought at Sialkot because "the defendants carried on the business of house owners, themselves or their agents," there as well as at Rawalpindi and Murree, because the plaintiff resided there, because he paid the money there, and because he might just as easily have paid the money to the defendants' Sialkot agent.

It does not appear to me that the posting of the cheque by the plaintiff from Sialkot at some stage in the negotiations not made clear would have the effect of completing a contract at Sialkot. On the information before me it must be held, following Muhammad Shafi v. Karamat Ali (1) and Firm of Asa Ram-Kalu Ram v. Firm of Bakhshi Ram-Kanahyia Ram (2), that the contract was made at Rawalpindi. The plaintiff's cause of action was the contract and its alleged non fulfilment. The latter certainly took place at Murree, if it did take place, and no part of the plaintiff's cause of action can be said to have taken place at Sialkot. The plaintiff's place of residence is immaterial.

(1) 76 P. R. 1896.
(2) 53 Ind. Cas. 331; 1 L. 203.

It remains to be seen whether the defendants carried on business within the meaning of section 20, Code of Civil Procedure, at Sialkot. Their Counsel before me admits that they own houses at Sialkot which their agent leases on rent. There is no evidence on the record giving further information. Although the rulings quoted by Counsel for the petitioners Nobin Chunder v. Buroda Kant (3), Anonymous case (4) and Gosvami Shri v. Shri Govardhanlalji (5) are not exactly in point and no direct authority against the lower Court's finding is quoted, I think it doubtful whether the mere leasing of house property through an agent can be said to be "carrying on business." In default of further light upon the actual dealings of their Sialkot agent on behalf of the defendants, I am not prepared to say that they carry on business at that place. The suit, therefore, was not properly instituted at Sialkot.

The further question arises, whether there was a consequent failure of justice. Since, under section 21 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the objection as to the place of suing cannot be sustained by this Court unless such is made out.

The suit was first decided ex parte but the ex parte decree was subsequently set aside and the defendants were represented by Counsel. The witnesses summoned by them did not appear but they were expressly given up. Counsel cross examined the plaintiff's witnesses and was heard in argument and there is no complaint before me that the defendants were prejudiced in not being able to present their case properly.

It is urged, however, that the learned Judge, Small Cause Court, imported into his judgment his own ideas or knowledge regarding the management of the defendants' house property at Sialkot, and allowed himself to be influenced by irrelevant evidence regarding that management in coming to a decision about what happened at Murree, a totally different place. There are certainly some remarks in the judgment which might have been omitted but on going through the record of evidence I find that there is material to justify the lower Court's findings, apart from anything which has been said about the Sialkot property. There appears to me to have been no failure of justice in consequence of the suit having been tried at Sialkot.

The other points argued for the petitioners are that there is no material on the record showing that the defendants represented the house as fit for the occupation of two families, or that the plaintiff spent Rs. 30 in bringing up furniture to supplement what was found deficient on the defendants' list. On the latter point the lower Court has chosen to believe the plaintiff who went into the witness box. On the first point it has believed the evidence of Captains Fletcher and Harris, both Medical Officers, regarding the unfitness of the house for habitation and the defects in the furniture, and the lower Court's construction of the defendants' letter of 24th February 1920 as representing that the house was in habitable condition and actually furnished with the articles detailed, cannot be called unreasonable.

I am not prepared to interfere on revision and I dismiss the application with costs.
